"When the war is over, England, France and Germany will each try to reach out for new business, so as to recover from great financial losses during the war. The South American Republics, Mexico, China and Japan will be the great places to look for development of trade, and a fixed standard for silver will, in my opinion, be of immense value to these respective countries. But aside from that, what an immense amount of new business it would start in all business lines! A great revival in mining always has a great effect on all industries.

"In conclusion, I will say that being a great believer in the future of silver, I naturally feel that there is great prosperity ahead for all those who are interested in mining properties where silver predominates."

Automobile Exports Rank Fifth Among Manufactured Articles

Exports of American automobiles and parts now rank fifth in value among all manufactured articles. The exports for the year 1915, valued at $111,180,139, exceeded the combined exports of all other kinds of machinery ($81,224,345), and the combined exports of all sorts of steam and electric railroad cars and locomotives, carriages and wagons, bicycles, tricycles, stationary, marine and automobile engines, agricultural implements and electrical machinery ($78,015,574.) They also exceeded the value of manufactured cotton and cotton clothing ($95,827,024), manufactures of leather ($75,268,680), chemicals, drugs, dyes and medicines ($80,395,321), and exports of wheat flour ($96,201,234.)

The automobile exports were surpassed in value last year by exports of iron, steel and manufactures thereof ($338,703,720), explosives ($181,778,033), refined mineral oils ($138,689,495), copper and manufactures ($125,136,289), wheat ($282,457,092), and horses, mules, cattle and sheep ($121,641,231.)

This comparative analysis of the export trade statistics contained in the December report of the Department of Commerce, as made by the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, will give a better understanding of what the growth of the automobile industry means to the American working man and the general prosperity of the country, for it is to be remembered the automobile industry draws heavily upon many other industries for raw and manufactured materials, such as metals, leather, cloth, wood, wool, curled hair, glass, celluloid, paints and varnishes, asbestos, etc.

In one year the exports of motor vehicles increased more than 232 per cent—from a total value of $28,507,464 in 1914 to $94,879,738 in 1915. The foreign shipments of passenger cars almost doubled—from 22,335, valued at $19,521,708 in 1914, to 41,869, valued at $35,045,492 for the year ended December 31st last. But the exports of trucks increased nearly sevenfold, from 3,430, worth $8,985,756, to 22,082, valued at $59,834,246.

Growth of the foreign trade in American motor trucks during the last two years is even more noteworthy, for in 1913 only 1,009 commercial vehicles were exported, of a gross value of $1,686,807, the increase in two years being 3,447 per cent.

The principal countries to which automobile exports were made last year and the volume of shipments to them were as follows:

Number—United Kingdom, 24,355; France, 6,304; Other Europe, 8,630; Canada, 5,796; British Oceania, 4,818; Asia and other Oceania, 4,319. Value—United Kingdom, $35,055,097; France, $15,922,313; Other Europe, $22,330,357; Canada, $4,622,931; British Oceania, $41,075,299; Asia and other Oceania, $6,728,813.

Senate Good Roads Bill Endorsed by Auto Clubs

Washington, D. C., December 11th.—One hundred and fifty million dollars will be expended in country-wide roads improvement during the next five years, if the co-operation between the National government and the several States set forth in the measure reported to the Senate by its Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads as a substitute for the Shackelford House good roads bill finds approval.

Senator Bankhead's committee dissented from the legislation passed in the House in that it preferred a definite sum per year rather than "any amount up to $25,000,000;" believed that the money should only be expended for construction or improvement, and not for maintenance; and also included in the distribution to the several States the additional factor of area, besides population and post road mileage.

In both bills the States match the Federal dollars, but the Bankhead bill definitely calls for $5,000,000 in 1916; $10,000, 000 in 1917; $15,000,000 in 1918; $20,000,000 in 1919; and $25,000,000 in 1920. Incidentally, the Senate substitute requires that a State shall establish a State highway department, though its apportionment remains to its credit for at least three years, so that the five States which have yet to adopt the policy of the other States will have ample time in which to comply with this reasonable supervision of the expenditure of the joint money.

If a State does not properly maintain a road constructed by the Federal and State authorities, which roads are decided upon by the Secretary of Agriculture and the State highway department, the Secretary has the power to withhold a further apportionment of funds if, within six months after he has given notice in writing to the State highway department of a State, the neglected roads are not given the necessary attention.

That the good roads bill has an excellent chance of passage in the Senate is indicated in the replies received by A. A. A. clubs throughout the country from their Senators.

British Army Flyer Sees American Aircraft

Aeroplanes with roomy, upholstered bodies, wind-shields and all the comforts of the modern motor car, with the additional convenience of the wireless telegraph, are now in use in Europe, according to Captain Archibald B. Ford, of the Royal Flying Corps, Great Britain. Captain Ford, who is on a leave of absence from the British army, is a visitor in Detroit.

Captain Ford has been in the aerial service of his country since the beginning of the war. His visit to the United States is unofficial, but is in the interest of aircraft.

"American aeroplanes are crude in comparison with many of the planes in use in Europe at present," said he. "The rush with which your American factories are working to turn out machines for the various warring nations has not added to the excellence of their work. I am afraid much of the work is poor. The need is not only for more powerful, sturdier motors, but for improved types of planes as well.

Captain Ford visited Henry B. Joy at the aviation field near Mt. Clemens, Mich. He said that his interest in the aeroplane is scientific and not commercial.

"I am in hope that America will do much toward the development of safe, durable, comfortable air machines, when your manufacturers begin to really try to do this," said he. "The perfecting of the multiple-cylinder motor and adapting it for aeroplane use indicates that this will be before very long."

Captain Ford is classed as a "skilled observer." His work consisted of flying at a height of 10,000 feet over German and Austrian lines, making maps and signaling by wireless to the British gunners, twelve or fifteen miles away. He says the work of skilled observers is so accurate that by following their signals, gunners are enabled to explode shells in the enemy's trenches within five attempts.

The new 22-72 Mercer four-passenger touring car, which has just made its appearance in San Francisco. The model has made a decided hit throughout the East.

New Mercer Makes Hit

The first of the new series of Mercer cars, known as the 22-72 model, has arrived in San Francisco, and will be on display at the headquarters of the Mercer Pacific Coast agency for the next few days. The new model is a four-passenger touring car, with a wheelbase of 134 inches. It derives its name because the rated horsepower is twenty-two and the block rating is seventy-two. In body lines the car has the same rakish appearance that characterized last season's type, but the designers have rather spread themselves in the matter of finish and have made the car far more attractive.

The motor is still of the four-cylinder type and of practically the same design, although the engineers have done much to reduce the weight of the car by employing much aluminum.

Auto Firm Will Have California Day

California-Chalmers Day will be celebrated in San Francisco on Tuesday, March 21st, automobile dealers from all parts of Northern California to be in attendance. Frank H. Smith, assistant sales manager of the Chalmers Motor Company, who recently came to the coast to co-operate with L. H. Rose, general manager of the L. H. Rose-Chalmers Company, in the arrangement of the program for the occasion, returned a few days ago from Southern California, where he and Rose have been in conference with Hugh Chalmers, the noted automobile manufacturer.

On the day when the dealers gather in this city, Hugh Chalmers will be the special guest of honor of Rose, who is the host of the occasion. Rose and Smith have not, as yet, completed all details of the program, but it is stated that many novel features embracing business, entertainment and education will make up the day.

Invitations have been sent out to approximately 300 dealers in Northern California. From the hour these dealers arrive in San Francisco until they leave the city, they will, in every sense of the word, be the guests of the Rose-Chalmers Company. Between 250 and 300 rooms have been reserved in the Hotel St. Francis to accommodate the guests. All business meetings and all entertainments will likewise take place in the St. Francis.

A business luncheon will open the day's events. This is to be followed during the afternoon by an educational session, during which the automobile industry, its present and future aspects, will be discussed in detail. Hugh Chalmers will take the leading part in the discussions. The evening session will be given over to a monster banquet, the closing hours of which will be marked by a carabet of a high mirth and laughter provoking nature, the principals being some of the best theatrical talent that can be obtained.

Henry J. McCoy of Chanslor & Lyon Co. 'At Liberty'

One of the interesting features of the local trade during the last few days was the retirement of Henry J. McCoy from the Chanslor & Lyon Company. McCoy sold his interest in this concern to W. G. Chanslor.

McCoy is one of the best known men in the automobile accessory business on the Pacific Coast. He has been associated with the Chanslor & Lyon Company as General Manager for several years, and was largely responsible for widespread sales organization of that concern. He has not announced his plans for the future, but it is expected he will re-enter the accessory business.

6,000 Automobiles from Mississippi to Coast

It is estimated that not less than 6,000 tourist cars made the trip from east of the Mississippi to California last summer. They averaged three persons to the car, spent $20 a day on the average, and averaged thirty-five days for the trip, making a total of $4,200,000 expended along the routes.

Auto Man's Tribute to Local Advertising

"The record-breaking 1915 increase in the use of newspaper space by automobile manufacturers was flattering to the intelligence of the industry, as well as complimentary to the power of the press," says President George A. Kissel of the Kissel-Kar.

"The growth of automobile newspaper advertising has been a very interesting development. In the early days of the motor car, the very idea of exploiting so high priced an article in the newspapers was regarded by the makers as little short of irrational. We then used the national magazines almost exclusively.

"But what a change! Gradually, by persistent work, the first converts were made, and they fared so well in results that others followed rapidly. I doubt if there is a single automobile manufacturer to-day who disbelieves in local advertising, while most of them are enthusiastic on the subject.

"Statistics before me show gains of anywhere from 75,000 to 250,000 lines in the display automobile advertising of the leading newspapers of the United States in 1915 over 1914. And unless all signs fail, there is going to be another wonderful advance in 1916 over the present record.

"The fact that newspapers can sell automobiles leads me inevitably to the conclusion that they can sell practically anything."

Sand Boxes for Motors

Clifton Williams, an assistant city attorney of Milwaukee, Wis., has applied for patent rights on a device to present or minimize skidding. The appliance utilizes the principle of strewing sand on smooth surfaces to make a rough path for wheels. Like locomotives and street cars, motor cars are to be equipped with stand-boxes, from which lead pipes to a position just in front of the rear wheels. A button in reach of the driver opens a valve and sand is strewn on the ground in the path of the driven wheels. Mr. Williams intends the device to be of small and convenient size, holding just enough for one time use. He has tried out the device for a year. It is to be manufactured in large quantities as soon as preliminary details are settled.

A First-Class Garage

There are many garages in town, and the motorist is often in a quandary as to where to go, especially for permanent service. There are very few who give you the QUALITY of service of Dow & Green, in Taylor street, between O'Farrell and Geary. Here your car will receive something more than the "once over," and the prices are moderate.

FASHION'S FADS AND FRILLS

If all predictions prove true, the coming summer should be a most economical one for the family with daughters. Fashion says: "Sport clothes from dawn till dusk, and after dark, as simple or as elaborate an evening frock as the fancy demands." Besides being decidedly practical and money-saving, this regime should be comforting and comfortable to a degree; just stop for a moment and consider how many puzzled moments will be saved, and how many times one will be spared that eternal question, "what shall I wear to-day?" A good supply of smart linen blouses, a sport skirt or two, with a chic sport coat, and one's wardrobe troubles are solved during daylight hours; after, it is a simple matter to select a dainty dance or dinner dress of net, or one of the exquisite summer fabrics now in favor, and don it in perfect peace.

One must wonder at the sudden enthusiasm for out-of-door sports being shown by the American girl this season; we have been gradually coming to it, but this year it looks as if we were one and all to take up sport for all that it is worth, or at least to look as if we adored tennis, golf, boating, swimming, and the numberless other excuses for getting out-of-doors.

Some Charming Effects.

We have been gradually accustoming ourselves to the vivid reds, yellows, greens and the various startling plaids and stripes which blend so effectively and harmoniously with the blue skies and green grass of the summer fields, the mountains and the shore, where some of us are fortunate enough to dream the summer through, and others are privileged to spend a playtime week or two.

Among the smartest of the new sport suits are many of silk jersey, or, as it is perhaps more generally known, Italian silk. These suits are often made with coat of a plain color, emerald green, for instance, worn with a smart, short skirt of black and white stripes. White or cream serge, too, is a favorite, combined with coat of scarlet, emerald or bright blue. The coat is usually cuffed, collared and belted with the material of the skirt. Sometimes one sees a coat of stripes with skirt of plain material. The silk jersey coats and sport coats of other materials will be worn with all types of frock this summer; for in spite of the popularity of the plain blouse and skirt, there are any number of attractive tub frocks being shown just now, and I am quite sure that they will be worn quite as much as in seasons past, more, perhaps, as they are more fascinating than for many a year. This is another practical and economical notion.

Charming Sport Blouses.

Simplicity of cut, combined with the daintiest possible of linen, voile, organdy or tub silk, is the recipe for the most popular of the summer blouses, to wear with tailored suit, sport coat or separate skirt. One of the prettiest I have seen this season was fashioned of a pale pink figured batiste having deep cuffs and sailor collar of white. It was made with open throat and was closed down the front with a wide silk cord slipped under a tab on either side of the blouse. The colored lawn and organdy blouse is growing in favor, in fact the colored waist seems to be taking preference over the plain white waist to a marked degree. There is something particularly pleasing about a softly tinted blouse of crepe de Chine, Georgette, or one of the new wash fabrics, combined with a tailored suit, that makes its appeal to all. Strictly tailored linen waists of white for morning or sports wear are unusually smart and much in vogue, but for the tailored suit and more dressy wear, the tinted blouse is the favorite. There are any number of attractive middy blouses for all sorts of summer daytime wear. Oftentimes these are made of the same material and color as the skirt, thereby forming a complete costume, and again they are of a contrasting color and material to wear with various skirts.

Attractive Hats.

In compliance with Fashion's decree, that sport clothing be supremely favored, the hat shops are putting forth many attractive, severe little hats which may be appropriately worn with either tailored or sport suit. Many of these are hand-made fabric hats with just a bit of a ribbon, a bow or ornament, by way of trimming. Some chic models of cretonne and others of ratine in soft colorings, are essentially sport hats, but the plain hems, Milans and hand-sewn hats of braid may be worn with either tailored suit or sport costume. Angora braid is one of the most effective of the new braids, in white or a soft color, combined with hemp or Milan. The shiny braids are much in vogue for early tailored wear, in black or colors, trimmed with flowers or ribbon. Patent leather and varnished foliage is most effective for trimming these glazed hats.

Arthur M. Brown, chairman of a committee consisting of F. B. Kellam, George W. Dornin, H. P. Blanchard, A. T. Bailey, D. W. Clark and W. W. Alverson, which for the past two years has been perfecting a plan for the adoption and use of uniform fire insurance blanks, reports that renewed interest has recently been manifested by San Francisco managers and that an early agreement among them is expected. The experience of the Western Union in furnishing endorsement and other blanks of uniform character, the very considerable reduction in the expense of operating supply departments in consequence of the adoption of the system, and the reduction in cost of printing and waste as compared with the practice of having each individual company print its own particular form, were comprehensively set forth by Vice-President C. R. Tuttle, of the Continental, before a meeting of the committee during his recent visit to San Francisco, and it now appears probable that a printing plant will be operated and uniform blanks supplied to San Francisco offices at an early date.

That the parties who recently filed suit against the Union Pacific Life of Portland, Ore., for the return to the receivership of the defunct American Life and Accident of eighty thousand dollars of assets alleged to have been fraudulently transferred, not only are not stockholders in the shattered American Life, but that the action was instituted for the purpose of wrecking the Union Pacific Life, is alleged in an answer filed by the defendant company. The answer further alleges that information claimed to have been received by the receiver from the stockholders is false, and was given maliciously for the purpose of harassing defendants and putting the Union Pacific out of business.

As a result of General Manager Fred B. Lloyd's three months' visit to the East, a contract has been entered into between the Pacific Coast Casualty and the Casualty Company of America, by which the business of the former company is reinsured by the latter, dating from noon, February 28th, and the Pacific Coast Casualty will go into liquidation. It is understood that most of the stockholders of the California company have invested in the stock of the Casualty Company of America to a greater or less extent.

The insurance firm of Seeley announce their intention of organizing the Western Mutual Fire Insurance Company of California, and expect to begin writing business when the $10,000 of premiums exacted by the California law is secured. A contingency fund of $50,000 will be provided, and operations will be conducted on the assessment plan.

Edward W. Fitzgerald, for eight years identified with the office force of the Hartford Fire at San Francisco, has been appointed special agent for territory in Northern California and Nevada heretofore covered by R. S. Dollard, who has been transferred to the central part of the State.

On March 15th, the office of assistant secretary to the Insurance Federation of California will be discontinued and activities will cease on that date until the first annual meeting on the second Thursday in April. Assistant Secretary McDonald concluded his term of office by a "Federation Week," March 6 to 14, in which much interest was taken and a nucleus for a permanent organization established.

The State Industrial Accident Commission has ruled that the failure of a court to fix temporary alimony in the suit of a woman for divorce is a fact sufficient in itself to establish that there was no dependency on the part of the woman.

Frank M. Avery, manager of the Pacific Department of the Fire Association and Philadelphia Underwriters, has returned from a visit to his agencies in Southern California.

Manager Rolla V. Watt, of the Royal and Queen, is expected back this week from a visit to New York.

Vice-President Whitney Palache, of the Hartford, after a two weeks' visit to San Francisco, has returned to Connecticut.

The State Industrial Accident Board of Massachusetts agrees with the California Bureau in ruling that fishermen lost from vessels sailing from the home ports are within the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation act, regardless how far off shore the accident occurs.

Frank H. Hamilton, a mining engineer of Pasadena, Cal., has been arrested on the charge of having burned down his residence, upon which there was an insurance of thirty thousand dollars.

William S. Dennis, attracted by the wide and growing field of accident insurance, has resigned his position of field man for the Hartford Fire, and will devote the major part of his time to that branch of the business on a brokerage business.

The American of Newark has appointed H. F. Avery special agent for Colorado, succeeding F. C. Haupt, who has been transferred to Oklahoma.

Arthur G. Nason & Co., have been appointed metropolitan agents at San Francisco for the American Eagle Fire.

The Southern Agency Company of Los Angeles has been succeeded by H. R. Taylor Corporation, and its representation of the West Coast-San Francisco Life will be terminated on April 1st.

The Los Angeles insurance brokerage firm known as the Robert L. Ware Investment Company, has incorporated under the same name.

James McMaster, formerly with the Wright, Callender & Andrews Agency, has been appointed manager of the fire insurance department for Lamb & McDowell, Los Angeles.

Manager J. L. Fuller, of the Norwich Union's Pacific department, is visiting Hawaii.

—Our own war, with a handful of men engaged, has been almost crowding Europe's war, with millions involved, out of the newspapers.

—With two wars on and the baseball season at hand, the American public is threatened with an unendurable strain on its thinking apparatus.

—The advocates of preparedness should give a medal to Villa, whose raid on Columbus caused defense plans to go forward with a whoop.

—Rich youth accused of beating his wife says he cannot recall having done so. Such trivial incidents in domestic life so easily slip one's mind.

—The war in Europe has long since ceased to entertain as a spectacular or picturesque affair. It has settled down to weary, monotonous slaughter.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

VILLA, A DUMMY IN A POLITICAL CONTEST.

The yellow press of this country, working in conjunction with the native party in Mexico which is vehemently opposed to Carranza, head of the de facto republic, is straining every energy to stir up all the trouble possible through Villa's murderous raid on this side of the Rio Grande line in order to discredit President Wilson's policy to bring about peace in that distracted country, and so help Carranza to establish a stable government. Villa is a product of the worst period in modern Mexican history, a rogue that deserves hanging for his many atrocious crimes, and he would have met his deserts before this had not certain interests furnished him with money and arms to sustain his opposition. The most promising sign on the horizon just now is the business-like way in which the United States troops, in conjunction with those of Carranza, are endeavoring to locate and end the career of this sensation loving bandit. With Villa off the map, curiosity will be keen to discover what the yellow press of this country, together with the opponents of Carranza in Mexico, will invent next to stir up further trouble. Villa is simply the creature of the hour, a dummy serving a purpose. The outcome of the present political situation in Mexico is the vital factor. Carranza represents the Constitutionals, the common people, the democracy, that has been fighting for years to free Mexico from the land barons that were coddled by Diaz and his favorites. Many holdings of over a million acres were given these favorites, practically as gifts. Carranza was making rapid headway in the pacification and government of Mexico when a bomb was hurled into his plans by his plotting enemies to check further headway on his part. Should Villa be caught and his few followers scattered, it is very likely that Carranza's enemies will make every endeavor to prolong trouble by arousing or bribing ex-Villistas and bandits to attack the American expeditionary forces now scattered in Mexican territory. The cold fact is that these opportunists are seeking every chance to keep Carranza in hot water, thereby helping President Wilson's opponents in this country to make all the capital they can against his policy as pacificator of that prostrated land. Any unbiased reader who cons the head lines of the yellow journals will find no difficulty in finding headlines and articles that are "cooked" up specially to discredit Wilson's policy and the stand this country is taking in the Mexican situation. The officers of the United States Army, connected with the expeditionary forces now seeking Villa, thoroughly understand this situation, as is evidenced in the deleted despatches they give the press for publication. The so-called special despatches, most of which are brutally faked, are concocted for the purpose of belittling the Washington administration. In international affairs it seems that some political specimens of bipeds are as much in need of the tar brush as the much accused hyphenated-foreigners.

CHAIR WARMERS IN CONGRESS.

Experience has taught the nation that very little is to be expected of most of the by-products of the political humans that hold down important seats in Congress. Fortunately there are occasionally several men of brains in each session who have had experience and have been gifted by heaven with sound horse sense. These are the real leaders who plan and develop the practical bills that count for something in the activities of the nation. The mob of salary chasing Congressmen under them devote most of their time to the pork barrel, getting their names into print and figuring out schemes to extend their mileage vouchers.

This old-time situation in Congress becomes a burden and a sore handicap when troubles and vital questions confront the nation, as they now do. Most Congressmen have the luck of being elected to office chiefly on the qualification that they are "good fellows," a fate most men are disinclined to dodge. They know nothing of foreign affairs, and little of anything else, except perhaps practical politics. Under the insistence of these stupid individuals to get their names into print, to clamber into the limelight, they make the great mistake of posing in Congress and to the Washington correspondents with the same assurance and pretense that they habitually practice on their Milpitas constituency. Their bone-head processes see no distinction between Washington and Milpitas as fields for political action, and no contrast between national and international law. They are cocksure on any and all points. Perhaps it is just as well under the circumstances that they are, for this same cocksureness and their own conceit furnishes the very weaknesses of which the real leaders in Congress take advantage and shrewdly lead them by the nose. President Wilson is a student of human qualities and understands most of their weaknesses. This keen insight has enabled him in a large measure to handle this crew of robust incompetents that the electors of the country are still habitually expressing to Congress biennially.

Perhaps the crudities of most of the present Congressmen, under the grave and vital questions which are being seriously submitted to them, will awaken electors to the great necessity of a better class of citizens to represent the Congressional districts of the republic. These United States are passing into a new era of development, perhaps the most influential and brilliant in their existence, and they cannot fulfill their destiny with such a handicap as the kind of makeshift legislators which now chiefly represent the nation. As chair-warmers they would be innocuous, but when they insist in voicing their incongruous ideas, and endeavor, through combinations among themselves, to hack some of their scarecrow ideas into the organic law of the land, they become a menace. Should there come a time when a well balanced and influential coterie of statesmen were not at the helm in Congress, these political swashbucklers might very easily get the nation into very serious trouble. The Spanish-American war should be a warning to the nation in that respect.

What will the Senate do regarding the confirmation of Louis Brandeis to the United States Supreme bench? There is an intense interest throughout the country, and especially in Washington, regarding the outcome of this rather important question. After hearing the evidence, old legislators who have watched allied contests of this character during a long period, incline to think that Brandeis will be nominated. A sifting of the evidence against him, when analyzed, indicates chiefly a want of confidence in him. Such an opinion is quite natural in those who regard Brandeis as being a radical and who dread that he may bring to the bench a spirit and mental attitude in dissonance with the old time stern conservative harmony that has marked the history of the judicial utterances of the United States Supreme Court since the successor of Marshall. Radicalism is strongly in the air of the world these days, and old-time conservatives dread any chance of its invasion of the United States Supreme Court. Few attorneys in this country who are prominent in the national eye could have come out of the grilling with the showing made by Brandeis, and it may be added that every effort was made to strip bare his mental attitude and his connections with influential corporations and "suspicious" cases. His so-called trial before the Senate committee has at least cleared the atmosphere of many dubious charges that were made against him by unreliable rumor, and leaves him in the free and open position where he has always claimed to be located—a radical seeking to relieve the under dog.

TRIBULATIONS

The University of California celebrated its forty-eighth birthday this week with appropriate ceremonies.

A comparatively short time in years but an immense number of progressive and constructive ideas marks the leap from the original College of California, located in Oakland, to the present spacious and beautiful grounds. Great buildings have been created on a harmonious plan, housing several thousand students, and now the University of California is rated second in attendance among the universities of this country. To those who have watched its wonderful growth in the past twenty years, this extraordinary expansion seems to be the promise of far greater development. During the rendition of the program on Charter Day, the cornerstone of the Benj. Ide Wheeler Hall was laid, the $730,000 white granite classroom building which is the first to be erected from the $1,800,000 bond issue voted by the people of California. At the cornerstone exercises, representatives of the regents and the alumni paid tribute to the excellent work which President Wheeler has done in his seventeen years of service in bringing the University among the foremost of American institutions of learning, in quality of work, in scientific productivity, success in student government, and scholarly atmosphere and fineness of ideals, as well as in the material aspect of the large student attendance. The university was primarily founded to benefit the agriculturists of the State, and to this day a strong and intimate policy along that line has been steadfastly developed. A practical farm at Davis is always open to inquirers. Any farmer in the State can obtain information or personal instruction in his calling from visiting instructors, if he is so minded. If he fails in meeting the good offices always at hand for his benefit it is his own fault. The University College of Agriculture is always ready to render "first practical suggestions" to farmers in order to increase the productivity and commercial prosperity of California. The faculty is also working steadfastly along other educational pursuits, the law, medicine, mining, engineering, science, letters and a general curriculum, all in practical lines so that when a student has graduated in any given course he will have a general idea of what he will be called upon to meet. In its extension work the faculty is endeavoring now to educate general workers in the big towns of the State, through courses of evening lectures. In these strenuous and sharply competitive days, the University is endeavoring to introduce and elevate a better educational understanding among all classes, and to this end missionary work is being done on a steadily increasing scale. It is an expanding idea, and one that indicates that our leading universities appreciate that their field of endeavor, like universals, reach to the horizon. Those now at the helm realize that their work is now in its infancy, a pioneering period. The results already accomplished are inspiring, and will greatly stimulate those who follow to press forward the ennobling work.

REPUBLICAN CONVENTIONS TRANSFORMED THIS YEAR.

The 4,000,000 votes that were cast for Roosevelt four years ago seem to have knocked the old-time boss controlled Republican conventions into limbo. That vote was the greatest rebuke ever given a national party in this country, and is the sponsor for the uncertainty now filling the air in the divided camps of the Republican party in most of the States. That situation is remarkably illustrated in the factional local groups striving to capture leadership and to represent California in the forthcoming convention at Chicago. In this State the contest is between liberal Republican-Progressives and the old time coming convention at Chicago. In this State the contest is between Roosevelt and anti-Roosevelts, a somewhat similar array, despite the fact that Roosevelt has announced that he will not allow his name to appear on any primary ballot. He prefers to have his name sprung at a critical stage in the development of the nominations at the conventions, and have it carried if possible with the old-time "Whoopla!" By and large, big politicians prefer to stage their nominations if possible; when this is successfully done, numbers of independent delegations are caught for keeps in the maelstrom of intense enthusiasm.

Accordingly, the outlook of the forthcoming Republican gathering this year in Chicago gives every indication that its efforts to get results will be a wide departure from those of the national autocrats that ruled the party during the past two decades. Hannaism is a thing of the past politically. This year will see democracy dominating the composition and actions of the Republican convention. Roosevelt, who has an eagle's eye for political changes, will take quick advantage of this new departure, and is a prime reason why he indifferently lets his name go by the board on primary tickets. Individual delegates will do more talking and be more independent in voting than at any time during the past forty years. The machine is still there, but it is no longer the compact machine with interlocking parts and controlled by the hand of a long-seasoned political genius. For the reason of these changes in the make-up of the new form of Republican convention, there will be an unusual number of dark horses entered, a situation that largely favors the most skillful politician among the candidates.

TOWN CRIER

—When up-to-date municipal office holders fall out on whacking up the disbursements of public funds, don't run away with the idea that it is a merry opportunity for the careless taxpayer to get something for his money. This week, an acrimonious wrangle broke out between the two opposing factions in the board of supervisors over the disposal of city patronage. The loaves and fishes from the control of Rolph henchmen to that of the labor leaders headed by Gallagher and Power. Power is occupying the Mayor's chair while Rolph is convalescing from his recent illness, so the field is clear for banditti raids. Kortick, on the Board of Works Commission, and other Rolph followers, tried to get certain bills O. K.'d by Gallagher, who is chairman of the important supplies committee. Nothing doing; but Andy pointedly said that his committee hereafter would help distribute this class of public patronage with the Board of Public Works. He went so far as to declare that he wasn't trying to take patronage from the Board of Public Works—and he stated farther that there was too much effort being made by certain members of the latter board to take care of personal friends to the exclusion of the honest taxpayers and merchants. Kortick replies that he had never asked for a share of the patronage, and Gallagher declared that he had, "and so has almost every member of your board." While on his rounds of accusation, Gallagher charged that Supervisor Hilmer, former chairman of the supplies committee, was also a star member in the class of taking care of his pet friends at the expense of the taxpayer and merchant. He went further and charged that Hilmer, when chairman of the committee, had honored requisition after requisition for certain hardware in plain violation of the charter provisions calling for competitive bidding, and had quietly raised a price from 11 cents to 14 cents on a hardware contract. Of course, the difference came out of the taxpayer's pocket. If these little family squabbles among the Supervisors can be maintained without costing the voters too much, we might, in course of time, be enlivened with some devilish fine reading that would class with the notorious Bill Tweed exposures.

—Who bludgeoned the rising price of gasoline that was touted by insiders to reach 35 cents a gallon, "so buy your gasoline early," for the oil trust is after you? Have you noticed, Mr. Motor Owner, that since the Washington administration sprung an active Congressional inquiry into the extraordinary advances in aviating prices and the associated motor car companies set up a roar of protest that echoed all over the continent that the hectic rise in the price of gasoline has languished suddenly, taken on a sort of prostrated appearance and is seeking silence and seclusion? Less than a month ago the daily press was inspired to announce by some one, some corporation or trust, that gasoline was in such extraordinary demand both here and abroad that the price would continue to rise for many months. That inspiration has petered with the price. Was this check in the rising price due to the vigorous inquiry instituted by the Administration at Washington? About that same time a story was published that inquiry had developed the fact that a pool in this country had placed large quantities of gasoline in storage so as to inflate the price of that commodity. As the big purveyors of gasoline quitted their extortions about that time, no further development was made. It would be very interesting if the government would institute investigations along similar lines regarding the present climbing prices of merchandise alleged to be due to the war, on paper, ink, certain chemicals and the like. It is likely that such inquiry would develop that these same "war prices" are due largely to the rascally combinations made by unconscionable dealers.

—The Demon Rum, like Larrabee's ghost, continues to haunt Washington and Oregon, despite the election carried by the victorious "drys," which was supposed to sweep him from the map of those States. If California goes "dry" at next November's election the chances are that she will undergo a like experience in shooing off the insistent ghost. Californians who have visited those "arid" States agree that there is no difficulty in getting liquor on the strict q. t. Seattle is in a zone where "skee" is plentiful and non-enforcement of the statute is common, because the prosecuting officials are excessively slow in taking action on account of the "unpopularity" attached to prosecution. The officials are between the devil and the deep sea; the "drys" insist on enforcement and the "wets" plead to "give us our daily toddy." Evidence is very hard to get, and informers are vehemently tabu. Juries are reluctant to agree on convictions, even if the culprit is not a married man with a family to support. Fines are the usual punishment, but if a saloon is taking in coin at the rate of over one hundred dollars a day, a fine hardly causes a wince, and his trade continues as usual. The officials are now striving their best to turn over the matters of prosecution to the leaders of the "drys," and make them shoulder whatever opprobrium that conviction brings. The result seems to be that both sides are very much dissatisfied with the situation.

—Evidently the local jitney association is developing some sustaining political influence, for the local administration is now giving due consideration to their claims that they are entitled to a place in the sun. A mongrel in the net of the pound-keeper has sense enough to know that without political influence any ki-yi or jitney driver would be shunted, bing! to the dumps. The way the Board of Supervisors is endeavoring to pass the buck up to the police indicates that the Jitney Association has at last got on the political map, and accordingly has maneuvered itself into a position where it can fence for an opening in the vehicle promenade that clutters up the main streets. Prosy papers may editorialize on the general principles that it is incumbent on this or that civic department to determine the outcome, and this or that legislative regulation which governs the question at issue, but the "savey" citizen who hangs round the City Hall and is familiar with the way "business" is done there knows that the political "pull" is one of the best to pry him into a jitney "right of way." If any legislative regulation intervenes, why, punch a hole through the dod-gasted regulation.

—One never knows what is coming out of a woman's trunk, not even the most experienced of customs' inspectors. This week a German engineer attempted to slip back into Germany in his wife's trunk, but the English inspectors nabbed him on the dock, when almost in sight of his vaterland. Two weeks ago a fond wife was caught with another woman's husband in her trunk. As witnesses were present who recognized the man, the wife was unable to take advantage of the ready wit of another wife caught in the same predicament who quickly made charges that the fellow was a burglar, and she insisted that he should at once be arrested and taken to jail. Lothario quickly snapped at the hint, admitted his attempted larceny to the police, and went meekly to jail, where in short order he communicated with a wise friend, who provided bail, which was later forfeited when the accused failed to appear, a modest payment for such relief of nervous tension. Business in this line of trunk-wear is still discreetly moderatc, but it is significant that traveling trunks are growing in size with the years.

According to the Ways of the Oriental

BY RANDALL THURMAN.

The ways of the Oriental are unknowable, and, moreover, they are not our ways. We of patriotic America, willing to suffer and die for our country, have but dim conception of the devotion of the Jap to his country. We can suffer, endure torture and die, but there are things which we cannot endure, even for God and country. Yet these things will the Jap endure gladly. Listen—this is a story.

I have pieced it together, because no Jap will tell, least of all he who has endured all.

As I said, we are Occidental—and we cannot understand either the diplomacy or the devotion of the little yellow men. And, furthermore, it is a warning to white men, an object lesson in the craft, the foresight of the men who rule Japan. For, where men think years ahead, who work in ways unknowable to a white man, and who have subordinates with the courage, the devotion, the power of self-sacrifice to carry out their almost supernatural plans, white men would better think well of the future.

There was a great general in Japan. This was years ago, before the Russ was humbled, before even Japan was assured of friendship in England and America. Even then Japan was preparing for war with Russia. We of the secret service know nothing of the policy of nations. We know the things we are sent to learn. No more than Japan did we know on which side the United States would stand in sympathy when the inevitable came. We were sent to learn and especially to know the Philippines, which, perhaps, lay at the mercy of Japan in case of war.

In those days there was an officer, a young cavalryman, attached to the general staff at Tokio. He was a noble of high rank and one of the most promising young officers in Japan. He had graduated from a famous French military school. He had served as a youth in China. He had studied the American system at West Point, at Annapolis, at the frontier forts. His ability, his devotion to his work, the singular purity of his life marked him as a man of great promise, and his family—nobles of one of the highest grades—believed that when the inevitable war with Russia came he would add fame to the family name.

The young lieutenant loved nothing but his work. Women and saki had no attractions for him. Even among his abstemious fellows he was marked as the purest. The chief of staff was the greatest military genius in Japan. It was he who planned the war with Russia years before it came, even before Europe believed it possible. The chief had singled out the young man and watched his work closely. One day he called the lieutenant into his room and said: "What is the first duty of a soldier?"

"To obey implicitly his superiors, to serve his emperor with true devotion and loyalty," answered the lieutenant, quoting the code.

"You are right," said the chief. He thought a moment and asked: "Will you pledge yourself to obey implicitly all orders given you by your superiors?"

"I pledge my honor."

"Then," said the general, "I require of you to leave your present mode of living and become dissipated, dissolute and disreputable."

"But," hesitated the young man, "that is contrary to the rules, which require us to be abstemious, even from the common luxuries."

"You have pledged your honor," replied the chief. "In this way you can best serve your emperor. You must become an outcast."

"But why——?"

"Because I require it," answered the chief coldly.

"How can I obey? I have no money to squander."

"I will supply you with all the money you may require."

The lieutenant questioned no more. To him, who had been pure and abstemious all his life, the idea was repellant. His tastes were all for the beautiful and pure side of life. His conscience writhed, but for Japan and his emperor he bowed and obeyed. He began in earnest to become depraved. He loathed the women, he hated the warm saki they served with smiles and stringed music in the geisha houses. He sought introductions in the tea houses, and spent his days and nights in the Akasaka quarter.

He became the most dissolute person in Tokio. The lieutenant was human. Perhaps the years of abstemiousness only had strengthened his human desires, and at last the day came when he fell in love. He loved a geisha, and he loved her with the ardor and devotion that might have made a heaven on earth for a better woman. When she handed him warm saki he no longer turned from it in disgust. She inspired him with the riotous joy of living. He no longer was disgusted, but the merriment, the music, the sinuous movements of the dance pleased him—when she was near. He no longer was silent and morose. He became joyful, cheerful, and gladly he went boisterously to the devil.

The parents and friends of the young lieutenant upbraided him and reminded him of his career; that he was the cousin of the moon and stars and grandson of the sun. By the names of his revered ancestors they pleaded with him to reform. He threw himself only the more madly into the life he had found. He neglected his office duties. His superiors at headquarters grew impatient, and—a year later he was dismissed from the Japanese army in disgrace, a ruined man. His handsome face was shriveled and his bright eyes lusterless. His family, his friends, the girl who was to have been his wife, avoided him. He was an outcast in his own country, scorned and despised.

The cross was heavier than he could bear. He sought out a friend of his boyhood, now high in the diplomatic service, and to him he told all. He was advised to lay his case before the chief. The lieutenant went to the general staff and secured an audience with the great general, pouring out to him the story of his disgrace, his sufferings and sorrows. The general listened with a grim smile.

"Now," he said, "you have reached the condition I desired. You are disgraced and cast out by your own people. No act of yours can involve Japan in difficulties with any other nation. You are about to be rewarded. I am sending you on a mission of highest importance to the State. To-night, telling none, not even your father, you will leave for Nagasaki. There you will open this lacquer box and read your instructions. Follow the orders faithfully, and your honor and name shall live, and you will do a great service for Japan."

That night the lieutenant left Tokio and disappeared. The United States at that time was engaged in a sanguinary struggle with the Filipinos. The American troops were making great progress toward crushing Aguinaldo and his armies, when suddenly in northern Luzon there arose a new leader, a man of unusual military genius, a man whose personality and cunning made a dangerous army out of a flying, cowardly lot of Filipino natives.

Then suddenly, after the army had appealed to the civil service for assistance, the American government made representations to the Mikado's statesmen concerning the Japanese general who was leading the forlorn hope in the Philippines. The Japanese elder statesmen shrugged their shoulders. Surely the government could not be held responsible for the acts of each Japanese in every part of the world. The government knew nothing of such a man. Perhaps the honorable American diplomats were mistaken, and the man was not a Jap, but a Filipino. Or, perhaps, his mother was Japanese. Who can tell? They knew nothing.

As suddenly as he came, the general disappeared. It was said that he was killed. Within a few weeks the rebellion collapsed and the country was pacified. The natives said the general killed himself because he was beaten. Certain ones whispered that they had helped send valuable maps, drawings and ciphers to Japan, and that the general has sailed in a junk. They had not seen him sail. No. Neither had they seen him killed.

A few months after the rebellion collapsed a young man, worn and broken, came to Tokio and sought out the general staff. He inquired for the great general, and he brought with him a lacquer box. He was informed that the great general was dead. The young man with the lacquer box sought the minister of war, and to him he told the story of his orders, his mission, his sufferings. The minister declined to do anything. He knew nothing of any officer who had led the rebels in the Philippines. He doubted the story. He refused to believe a man who had been discharged from the army in disgrace. Besides, Japan was the friend of the United States—and could not accept him. It might cause trouble.

The young officer, outcast, poverty stricken, sought out his old friend, the diplomat. Through him the case was laid before another great general, and the lieutenant pleaded his case. He produced plans, statistics, details of the American forces, their strategical positions, their equipment. The general looked solemn. He accepted the plans, saying he would burn them—that they might never cause a breach of the undying friendship between Japan and her greatest friend, the United States. Then he told the lieutenant he never could be restored to rank—and dismissed him. The lieutenant went back to his geisha and the tea house—and the plans went in to the war office.

—The newly formed St. Agnes Chapter of Grace Cathedral Guild of which Mrs. Leavitt Baker is chairman, announces a lecture on "The Music of Poetry," by Professor Lee Emerson Bassett of Leland Stanford Junior University, in Grace Chapel, corner Sacramento and Taylor streets, on Monday, March 27th, at three o'clock in the afternoon. Professor Bassett is a man well and favorably known as a writer and lecturer, and his interpretation of the charm there is in the harmony of sweet sounds, as well as in the subtle meanings therein enshrined, will certainly commend itself to lovers of poetry. St. Agnes Chapter is an organization of young women connected with Grace Cathedral. Its aim is mutual acquaintance and usefulness in the Cathedral life. It extends a cordial invitation to all who may desire to attend the lecture on Monday afternoon.

The rink proper will have a surface of 115 by 115 feet, which will give ample room for large numbers of skaters, and will be open to the public every day and evening. There will also be trained instructors who will give lessons every morning. Ample seating capacity will be provided for spectators.

A Reminiscence of Rube Waddell

Now that the war news soon will be shelved in interest by baseball, there are a number of stories being revived about Rube Waddell, the great southpaw of half a generation ago. The Rube was known as a difficult man to handle and was the despair of the managers.

On one occasion the Athletics had an important game on with Detroit, and Waddell was booked to pitch for the champions. Mack was having a tough fight for the pennant, and this result promised to be decisive. Waddell didn't show at the ball park, and after the game, when Connie was returning to the hotel, he bumped into Waddell, who had a load aboard that would have sunk a dreadnaught.

"Hey, Rube, where you been?" demanded the irate manager. "I wanted you to pitch to-day; now, where were you?"

"Oh, I was to a wake," returned Rube.

"To a wake!" replied Mack, too astonished to speak, almost; "why, Rube, they never hold wakes in daytime. They always hold wakes at night."

"Yes, I know they generally do," returned Waddell, "but this was a night watchman that died."

Poor Rube, himself, died not long ago of tuberculosis and as a recipient of charity.

Women's State Championship at Golf

The California State golf championship for women will be played over the course of the San Francisco Golf Club at Ingleside April 17th to 21st inclusive. This plan has been conceived and approved by the California Women Golfers' Association, and it is expected that the coming event will establish itself as one of the most successful of the tournaments marked upon the golfing calendar of the State for the present year.

There has been a misconception among some that the State championship for women is usually settled at Del Monte in September, when the men adjust their differences, but, as a matter of fact, while the entry for the Monterey County event is usually a big one, the title is purely local and carries with it no State laurels.

The Women's State championship is settled alternately in the north and south. Last year, the event took place in Los Angeles, and after a spirited contest, Mrs. Luther Kennet of San Francisco, captured first honors from Mrs. T. V. Elliot of Los Angeles by the margin of 2 up and 1 to play. At that time, with the exposition tournament in full view, interest in a measure was lacking, and many of the northern stars failed to put in an appearance at Los Angeles. It is expected, however, that next month's tournament will be one of undoubted class, for southern golfers of the fair sex are understood to be preparing for an invasion of the San Francisco course, Mrs. Dudley Fulton of Los Angeles already being engaged in arranging a party for the event.

When the qualifying round over eighteen holes starts on the local course, Monday, April 17th, it is expected that a thoroughly representative field will be on hand. Miss Edith Chesebrough, exposition champion, is expected to play. Mrs. Pommer, who captured last year's Del Monte event, will take part, as will Mrs. Thomas Baker, runner up in the exposition and Del Monte championships of last year. Sixteen will qualify for the first flight in the women's event with the championship flight starting at scratch. It is expected that the other flights will be eights.

The course of the San Francisco Club is in exceptionally good condition at present for the event, and by the time the contestants are ready everything should be in tiptop condition.

Jack Neville Defeated in South

Jack Neville took part in the recent championship tourney of the Midwick Country Club. Neville lost a thirty-six hole match to Harold Lamb in the finals of the Midwick tournament by 2 and 1. Both men went strong, under par for the distance. Lamb's medal for the thirty-six holes was 144 strokes, while Neville required two more.

"The San Diego Garden Fair."

Eugen Neuhaus, who so successfully described in his two recent books, "The Art of the Panama-Pacific Exposition" and "The Galleries of the Exposition," has set forth in this volume his impressions of the architecture, sculpture, horticulture, color scheme and other aesthetic aspects of the Panama-California Exposition at San Diego. His imagination and critical mind has been quick to take advantage of the romantic history of the conquistadores and the intrepid padres headed by Fra Junipero Serra as a human and pulsating background to vivify his theme. Naturally this gives a more intimate touch and a halo of romance spreads over what the author has to say of the exposition. Visitors of the San Diego Exposition unite in describing it as an artistic gem, and Professor Neuhaus, in his analytical manner, indicates the facets, subtle meaning, historical development, aesthetic meanings which rouse the emotions and stir the aspirations. Spanish-Mexican architecture drew its inspiration from many and widespread sources, sources reaching back to ancient Greece and Rome. Moors, Turks, Venetians and many other peoples contributed to the architectural ideas illustrated in beautiful form at the San Diego Exposition. In contrast with these aesthetic works of those distant civilizations are those of the Navajos, Zuni, Aztecs, Hopi and other descendants of other ancient nations of this continent, who have contributed their share in modifying the aesthetic forms introduced into Western America by the followers of the Spanish conquistadores. The genealogy of all this architecture, the wonderful garden aspects and other aesthetic attractions are all critically described herein. The book is profusely illustrated with beautiful photographs of the most striking attractions. Aside from being a digest of the beautiful at the San Diego Exposition, the volume is a rarely attractive gift book.

"Seventeen."

"A Tale of Youth and Summer Time and the Baxter Family—Especially William," by Booth Tarkington. As the subtitle indicates, it is the story of the summer when William Sylvanus Baxter was seventeen, and viewed the world as normal youths—who seem abnormal to the parents for the time being—always view it, with himself as the center. He was in love, and little sister Jane displayed a most disturbing curiosity about his movements. A negro gardener, two dogs, and exasperated elders disturb his equanimity; and a chorus of youth and maidens take their experiences and pleasures seriously, while Mr. Tarkington's abounding humor makes them all human.

If one seeks to classify Gertrude Atherton's new novel, "Mrs. Belfame," it must be placed among the "mystery" stories. The opening sentence is excellently matter-of-fact: "Mrs. Belfame had made up her mind to commit murder!" And murder is done, a thrilling mystery created, and Mrs. Belfame is put on trial for life. While Mrs. Atherton explores this situation in all its ramifications and thrills, with no little constructive skill, she finds an opportunity to study a certain type of feminine character, to present a deeply interesting picture of social life in an American small town, and vividly to depict the harmful effects of the yellow press on our legal procedure in criminal cases.

Scribner's seems on the way toward another year of leading fiction. Many will note the fact that among the writers of short stories in this magazine are many new names. The April number contains: Hugh Johnson's "The Manhandler," a Western story with plenty of action; a jolly story of a boy's school, "Rudolph in Repertoire," by Roy Irving Murray; and "In the Lions' Den—The Story of a Modern Daniel," by Ray D. Penney, an adventure story in Africa.

Mexico to Cede Territory to California

From the South comes the extraordinary news, through the Los Angeles Graphic, that the mission of Colonel E. M. House abroad, under the direction of President Wilson, was to arrange through the proper channels, for the settlement of certain indemnity claims held by the foreign offices against Mexico, for damages wrought by the warring factions on British and German, French, Spanish and other aliens in the perturbed republic south of the Rio Grande. This settlement is contingent upon the ceding of certain territory in the northern part of Mexico to the United States of America, which, when done, will forever straighten the crooked boundary line that has so long been a source of friction and an irritating question at Washington. By acquiescing in this tardy act of international justice, the present constitutional party, headed by Carranza, will be well rid of a number of embarrassing claims on the Federal treasury, in return for which certain lands of small value to the Mexican republic, but of vast moment to this country, will be formally transferred to the United States. That Colonel House was entirely successful in his negotiations is admitted, unofficially. The story not yet has been printed save as it here appears. It is news that ought to prove of great interest to border cities of Arizona and California—from Yuma to the Gulf. How much more territory is included than is required to straighten the boundary line we do not pretend to know; that information has been withheld because it will have to be settled by a joint commission after the extent of the damage claims against Mexico has been definitely determined.

The Background of the War Zone

A German naval offensive is looked for this spring by some English experts, and the battle of Verdun has been regarded as having some bearing upon this question. If the Germans succeed they are expected to press their spring offensive into a new threat against England, in which army and fleet would co-operate. While, if they fail, a naval offensive would be dictated by desperation, so that the conclusion is the same in either case. The evidence for such a project seems slight enough, consisting chiefly of rumors as to 17 inch guns on newly finished battleships and armored submersibles of deadly powers. Yet it is a matter of course that the German navy has been strenuously developed, and a surprise may be ready. Nor should it be forgotten that the British navy is the keystone of the whole military edifice of the allies; any day their fortunes might be lost in a sea battle of a few hours' duration.

The new seamen's act was applied, Saturday, to all vessels of foreign registry entering American ports without noticeable disturbance. Crews of these ships may now demand half their wages when coming into American jurisdiction and seek jobs on other ships at higher pay without being subject to arrest and prosecution as deserters. The present conditions in the shipping business are so abnormal, as concerns both the number of ships and labor, that it matters little what may happen on account of the new law. The supreme struggle is to get control of ships on any terms whatever. The real test of the act must be postponed until normal conditions are restored in the ocean carrying trade.

While fine promises are being made to the Russian Poles by their German conquerors, the value of these pledges is perhaps somewhat discounted by the action of the Prussian Diet recently on a question touching Prussian Poland. A great colonization measure, involving an appropriation of $50,000,000 and intended to uproot the Poles from the land, was passed, and despite the vote of Poles supported on the one side by Catholics and on the other by radicals, socialists and Danes, an amendment forbidding discrimination because of race, religion or political activity was rejected. Poles in this country are either pro-Russian, pro-Austrian or neutral. Why Prussia does not get their sympathy this action by the Prussian Diet may explain.

No room for doubt is left as to the significance of the Irish-American convention to be held in New York, since the Irish World declares that it has been called "for taking counsel as to the best means to be adopted for securing for our motherland the sovereign rights of which she has been bereft." This can only mean a rejection of home rule, and an effort to drag Ireland into the misery of a new rebellion. That seems to be a question for Ireland to settle, and not for Americans of Irish or German descent. It is plain that Irish-Americans are much divided on the question, and may be trusted to dispose of it in a sensible way, though not without a sharp clash. It is not necessary for any American to be more Irish than John Redmond.

NEW SMART SHOP FOR MILLINERY

Magnus, who is famous for his artistic designs in superior millinery, has just opened an establishment on new and attractive lines at 212 O'Farrell street, where he will display some of the most fetching models ever exhibited in this city. They are artistic in every detail, and carry that rare note of refinement so dear to the heart of every fastidious woman who desires distinction in her attire. Spring styles are represented in choice variety and in fetching materials of alluring effect. Ladies who dread the tiresome rounds of the shopping district in search of the ideal hat they have pictured for this season, will save much time, patience and expense by going direct to Magnus's new and select establishment.

TWO PREMIERES AND ENTIRE CHANGES IN VAUDEVILLE

BY HENRY McDONALD SPENCER

"Sadie Love" is French Farce Without the Kick

In spite of other influences and of some examples apparently the contrary, the Puritan factor is still dominant in America; and the treatment of the theme of "Sadie Love" is an illustration of the truth of this statement. It is inconceivable, for instance, from a French point of view, that a lady who is running away from her husband and is registered on a steamer as the wife of her lover, an old sweetheart, could tell him to sleep in the hold of the ship. Indeed, are the circumstances conceivable as being true to life, or rather to art, unless some point had been made of the lady's whimsicalities? "Sadie Love" (Evelyn Vaughn) is the American wife of an Italian nobleman, Prince Luigi (Bert Lytell), and on being informed by an old flame of her husband, Comtesse de Mirabolle (Jane Darwell) that she, the Comtesse, and the Prince are twin souls, Evelyn promptly decides to jump her job. That is the tying of the knot, and the rest of the plot follows in logical sequence. On necessity of producing a new play each week. He took my tip from the last number, and made up his face to give the illusion of the type that he portrayed; and it is a great strain for a good-looking actor man to wear a false mustache. Miss Vaughn was acceptable, as always in her American young woman parts, and the rest of the characters were convincing enough, but I really have hopes for Lytell becoming something more than a village edition of John Drew, after seeing him act on Monday night, and I shall watch his career from now on with more interest.

Unusual Bill at Orpheum

I suppose that the tin Lizzies, otherwise known as the Ford automobiles, have passed beyond the stage of being merely motor cars, but have become sui generis like Winchester rifles or Kodaks, and therefore get by in the theatre and the papers without being deleted by the censor as advertising parading for the whole, however, the play is very thin, and this attempt to bowdlerise French farce cannot be said to be successful. Near beer never can be an acceptable substitute for the real thing—the kick is missing. There are many good themes which may be taken from the small town life of America, and which would not offend even Los Angeles susceptibilities, but they remain an undeveloped gold mine for the American dramatist, although Hoyt was well on the way to work the field. There were many good lines, incidentally, but lines, as lines, never made a play. I wish, however, to take off my hat to Bert Lytell for his characterization of the Italian prince. It is easily the best thing that I have seen him do, and he would make more than a success of esteem in any city in this part. This is all the more remarkable when you consider how stock plays are produced, and the haste and lack of preparation imposed by the pure reading matter. Anyway, the Orpheum skit, "They Auto Know Better," while frankly showing the most popular car, is an agreeable enough diversion and serves as a vehicle for the excellent fooling of Thomas Dugan and Ethel Hunter. An automobile that kicks like a horse certainly is a novelty, even in auto skits. Harry Hunter in the "Cherry Tree," although characterizing a Jew, has a rather Christlike part, suggestive of the "Passing of the Third Floor Back" and "The Servant in the House." The audience seemed to think until the last that there would be a comeback on the part of George Washington Cohen, who, as the first names suggest, is devoted to truth-telling in the most uncompromising fashion, but who ultimately "lies like a gentleman," although the lie costs him a job worth ten thousand a year. That he receives a two thousand dollar present is merely incidental and is unforeseen by him. George Damerel

—the Merry Widow Damerel—has an imposing act entitled "Temptation," which is a tabloid version of "Faust," and shows a number of pretty girls who thoroughly justify the title. Incidentally, George, who has grown somewhat fat himself, gives up a very fat part to Edward Hume, the lean cabby—I thought that these birds were extinct like the dodo—with a many good lines and much up-stage work. Miss Olga Cook looks well and sings acceptably, while Harry Hines joshes the other acts on the bill. Otherwise there is no particular reason for his appearance. Gara Zora is a beautiful young woman, who is more remarkable for her athletic prowess than for her grace. Contortionism is a form of entertainment, but is should not be tagged as art.

"The Eternal Magdalene" at the Columbia

It is the privilege of the artist or playwright to select his medium, but once the convention that he proposes to establish is accepted by his audience, he should be strictly bound by its rules. Thus the romantic convention of, for instance, "The Prisoner of Zenda" implies that the characters should all speak and act in the period adopted; similarly, in "Midsummer's Night Dream," fairies and mortals come together, and neither class must violate the conditions of their being. The objection to "The Eternal Magdalene," now playing at the Columbia, is not so much that it is in the nature of a tract or propaganda—Shaw has shown us that reform can be dramatized—but with a modern setting the author brings in such details of mysticism as stopping the action of his play, darkening the stage and turning a spotlight on his heroine. He belascos his theme. In addition, the lines of The Woman (Florence Roberts) are manifestly not in her character of a kind of female "Servant in the House," but are speeches frankly made to the audience, like Hamlet's soliloquy. However, if we accept Robert McLaughlin's divergences in these respects, it must be admitted that the play is well done. The theme particularly is an argument in favor of redlight segregation, but more generally a plea for a greater toleration of the errors of women. Ultimately the soulful looks and deep, lovely voice of Miss Roberts win out, and bring conviction to the mind of a captain of industry, who is led into a more charitable attitude toward mankind and especially womankind. The first time that the subject was dramatized was on the sands by the Sea of Galilee—"He that is without sin, let him cast the first stone." I know of no American actress to-day who could quite play the role as Florence Roberts does, and give it that character of mystical detachment and other-worldly beauty. The rest of the cast was acceptable in the parts as the author evidently conceived them; and for those who deplore the frivolity of the present stage and think that it should take some part in the life of the day, there is an opportunity here to hear at least a conscientious attempt to solve a problem.

Advance Notices

Strong Bill at Pantages.—"A Musical Bouquet," one of the most delightful singing novelties in vaudeville, will be featured on the new eight act bill at the Pantages, with Will J. Ward and his five piano girls, offering the production. Ward is a polished comedian, with a beautiful lyric tenor voice, and he has surrounded himself with a quintet of talented musicians. The act is well staged and has been a hit on the circuit. Athena, the famous Egyptian danseuse, who was one of the features at the Exposition, has been especially added to the new show. Classical and Grecian dances will be presented with a beautiful stage mounting. The Bachelor's Sweethearts, with William Brandell, a musical comedy with pretty girls, striking scenery and costumes, will help to while away the time. Among the other features will be Maióie De Long, the Baseball Bug, doing her Eva Tanguay, messenger boy, baseball and Swedish slavey impersonations. Burns and Kissen, two Jewish comedians, do a good singing and talking act. And the Cavana Duo entertain with singing, dancing, music and a wire oddity. Added to this excellent bill will be the second episode of the sensational picture, "The Iron Claw."

Orpheum.—Harry Green will enter on the last week of his engagement at the Orpheum in the laughable skit, "The Cherry Tree," next Sunday matinee. An entirely new show will also be presented. Desiree Lubowska, who is the latest exponent of impressionistic character dances to reach this country, will make her first appearance in this city. Lubowska's programme consists of three numbers. Clark and Verdi, the Italian comedians, portray a couple of their countrymen in a highly faithful and diverting manner. One of them represent an Italian emigrant fresh from Ellis Island, the other an Italian who has been a resident in this country a couple of years. Fred Warren and Effie Conley contribute a satirical skit of the seashore, entitled "On the Boardwalk," which enables them to sing, dance and converse wittily. Ed. Morton, who sings songs, is a great favorite wherever he appears, and is one of vaudeville's best vocal comedians. Arthur Stone and Marion Hayes will appear in a carnival episode entitled "Green Goods." Bert Wheeler and Company will introduce their automobile pantomime, "The Troubles of a Jitney 'Bus." The Sultanas, a quartette of five vocalists, have an offering called "An Oriental Betrothal."

San Francisco Symphony Orchestra.—With the concerts of the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra, Alfred Hertz, conductor, which will be given at the Cort Theatre, Friday afternoon, March 31st, and Sunday afternoon, April 2d, the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra will bring its fifth season to a close. The program that Conductor Hertz has selected for this occasion is a most auspicious one, and includes the Symphony No. 3, "Eroica," E Flat Major, Op. 55, by Beethoven; Overture, "Genoveva," by Schumann, and "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks" (Rondo), Op. 28, by Richard Strauss.

Mr. Hertz came to San Francisco with an avowed intention to make the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra one of the best. Eminently fitted to carry on the intention of the Musical Association of San Francisco of raising to the highest possible point the standard of music in San Francisco, Mr. Hertz certainly accomplished the results desired.

Tickets for the tenth and last pair of concerts will be on sale Monday at the box offices of Sherman, Clay & Company and Kohler & Chase. The prices for Friday are $2, $1.50, $1, 75c.; box and loge seats, $3. The prices for Sunday are $1, 75c., 50c.; box and loge seats, $1.50.

The lecture subject is: "The Message of the Modern Drama to the Twentieth Century." The lecture will consider Bernard Shaw, Gerhart Hauptman, Stanley Houghton, and the new drama, "War," by Michael Artzibashev.

The Machine Gun Co., 5th Infantry, N. G. C., gave a smoker and high jinks in their quarters at the State Armory, 14th and Mission streets, on March 17th. This affair was given in honor of the 12th Co. Coast Artillery, N. G. C., and nearly every member of both commands was present. The entertaining talent was exceptionally good, and among the numbers were clever songs and snappy addresses. Major Farrell, 5th Inf., N. G. C., made a few well chosen remarks touching on the merits of a soldier, and the behavior of Uncle Sam's men; and during the evening Charles F. Graeber's Mandolin Club played a number of selections. This is the only mandolin club that played at the P. P. I. E. during 1915, and Captain F. Marriott, of the Machine Gun Company, was formerly a member of the organization. Several new members were enrolled, and all agreed on the great success of the evening's entertainment, which is a new venture started by Captain Marriott to popularize the service.

The smart set awaits with eager interest the news that volunteers are needed in Mexico. In no other strata of society is this eagerness so vivified with realism. There are men and women in the Burlingame set who care not whether Verdun stands or falls; who wot not that the Russians are hammering away at the other end, who forget to read the Wall street lists before all other news to reckon their gains and losses on "war babies."

Just a few weeks ago that kind of thing was the first waking thought. But now, first and last, it is: "Has Villa been caught?"

'Tis not an interest generated by geography. 'Tis not because we are so near to Mexico; nor because we have given the first naturalization papers to the tamale; nor yet because many of our rich men's sons have an hereditary talent for grabbing Mexican land grants and therefore they stand tiptoe for peace and its predatory opportunities.

'Tis none of these things, nor is it any of the other impersonal reasons which occur to the student of history.

It's a very personal, unselfish, sportsmanlike, patriotic-and-you-please motive.

The crack cavalry regiment, made up of Burlingame Rough Riders, is resting uneasy in its stirrups, waiting for orders to go to Mexico.

Telegrams have been sent to the President, the Secretary of War, and all the other officials, offering the services of these gentlemen riders, who are anxious to run Villa down.

All the "polo bunch" at Blingum has been in training this winter at the Presidio, learning how to go through the motions of a real cavalry war. As a result of all too ardent pursuit of the military manual, Thornwell Mullally is still on crutches, after several months in the hospital, but the rest of the regiment is as fit and fine and alert for service as the Rough Riders that T. R. led up San Juan in our slight unpleasantness with Spain.

No one takes the acceptance of their regiment as a joke. The men are determined to go if it takes influence to show the need of such a troop of cavalry. The wives of the married men are going through the preliminary despondency and forebodings that a prescience of the trumpet's call always brings to a woman.

"Cheer up," called Walter Hobart to a group of wives who were discussing the possibilities of the government's acceptance of this offer; "cheer up," sang Walter; "you are not war widows yet!"

So it happens that a "bunch" of men in the Blingum set are praying that Villa will not be caught dead or alive until the order comes for them to ride into the thick of the guerilla warfare.

And a group of women even more ardently pray that Villa will be captured and our troops victorious without the aid of volunteers such as the Rough Riders of Blingum.

Study classes innumerable are recorded to the credit of this particular Lenten season. Music, literature and art usually span the scope of Lenten intellectual endeavor, but the war has created a desire to study history, psychology and even biology, and a number of women are giving their mornings to these subjects, under the guidance of men from the various departments at the university.

One group which has met all winter and is continuing its work during Lent was organized by Mrs. Will Denman and Mrs. Osgood Hooper.

Another group meets once a month in the evenings for the discussion of philosophical subjects. This coterie includes the Philip King Browns, Bruce Porter, Dr. Dutton, and a number of people from the Faculty set in Berkeley.

The family and friends of Mrs. Ferdinand Theriot are stitching their spare moments into another layette, which will find its way to the De Young home before the long-legged bird settles on that house-top. The Theriots have a handsome little baby boy who is named after Mrs. Theriot's brother, Charles De Young. The new baby will be a very welcome addition to the household, all the members of this devoted family having the greatest love for children. Mrs. De Young, who has been ill again, is now sufficiently recovered to enjoy a drive every afternoon, and to receive the friends who have kept her rooms like a spring garden during her illness.

Mrs. Willard Drown, Mrs. "Bob" Smith and Miss Anita Peters, who have just returned from a trip to New York, Washington and other Eastern points, all tell stories of the prodigality of entertaining in Gotham this season. A golden stream of money flows through the town—doubtless this stream is ably deflected before it strikes the tenement district—but Mrs. Drown in describing the life there this winter said "an old Californian remarked that the New Yorkers are spending money like men in a bonanza mining town."

With the money wave at its crest, extravagance is reflected in all the sports and pastimes. Players put up enormous bets on golf, and stories from the southern resorts about $1,000 bets on the side are commonplace. The New York bridge stakes have mounted with the flood tide of prosperity, and the player from the West who has not a plethoric purse accepts an invitation to a bridge party with mixed pleasure and trembling.

One of the recent visitors to New York tells me that she decided not to accept any bridge invitations. As all the other visiting San Franciscans had been uniformly lucky and had pocketed almost enough to pay their expenses, she felt sure that luck would turn against California just about the time that she arrived, and she could not afford to play for the prevailing stakes.

So to all bids to bridge parties she said a firm "Nay!" Came a telephone call from Mrs. Gary, who was out here during the Exposition with her husband, the great steel trust magnate. Mrs. Gary was entertained by people here, and she is the sort who never forgets those who once make an impression on her. This San Francisco matron had sat next to her at a luncheon, and had amused her throughout seven courses (perhaps it was mutual), so as soon as Mrs. Gary heard that the San Franciscan was in New York, she urged her to come to a bridge party that she was giving that very afternoon.

"I wanted to go, but I was afraid that those women would all be bemillioned and the stakes would be hacked out of a pile of gold with a pick and shovel; not belonging to any such pile, I didn't dare to accept, so I persisted in refusals. Imagine my feelings when I read in all the papers the next day accounts of the magnificent bridge party which Mrs. Gary had given, and learned that the prizes were shares of steel stock, ever winner getting a share worth $1,000! Prizes of preferred steel stock are a long, hard jump from the French bags and fancy work-boxes and picture frame things that we used to think all very well when bridge was a young game!"

At this writing it is too early to describe the costumes of the youngsters who foregathered at the Fairmont Hotel on Friday afternoon from 5 until 8 for a fancy dress dance. But there has been almost as much excitement among the mothers and the young brood as was generated by the Mardi Gras. There is nothing more stimulating to a fond mother than to dress up her kiddies in fancy costume, and the boys and girls love it—particularly the girls.

Some of the girls who have had some choice of their own about their costumes and have therefore had added thrills, are Edna Taylor, Francesca Deering, Sophia Brownell, Claudine and Eleanor Spreckels, Kate Boardman, Alice Moffitt, Eleanor Morgan, Adelaide Sutro, and about twenty others.

Events at the Hotel Oakland.

Mrs. W. P. Phillips recently entertained with a luncheon and card party at the Hotel Oakland. Her invited guests were Mesdames R. Day, D. M. Stuart, Scaritt, Gillman, Ougn, Mott, Stout, Misses Tower, Waterfall, Hodel and Kidd.

On Monday, March 27th, at 10:45 a. m., Mrs. Charlotte Curtis will give a psychological and spiritual interpretation of the opera of "Lohengrin," by Richard Wagner. This is the first of a series of five subjects comprising a course during Lent.

The Ivory Ballroom at the Hotel Oakland will be turned into a miniature theatre for the Mi-Careme Fashion Show, under the auspices of the Ladies' Relief Society on Tuesday, March 28th, with boxes, loges and seats so arranged that a perfect view of the tableaux and revue may be had from any of them. The committee in charge report that the boxes and loges have been sold, and that the seat sale promises the capacity of the ball room. Already table reservations have been made for the supper. An intermission will be given after the show to allow time for supper.

Under the auspices of the San Francisco Art Association, a special course of eight illustrated lectures will be given on the Philosophy of Art, by Arthur Upham Pope, assistant Professor of Philosophy, University of California, at the Art Institute, California and Mason street, beginning Thursday, March 23d, at 4 o'clock, and continuing on every subsequent Thursday to May 11th. The patrons and patronesses include: Mrs. Lorenzo Avenali, Mrs. William B. Bourne, Mrs. William H. Crocker, Mrs. William Denman, Mrs. Albert Herter, Mrs. C. Osgood Hooker, Mr. John Galen Howard, Mr. J. Nilsen Laurvik, Mr. Bernard Maybeck, Mr. Bruce Porter, Mrs. M. C. Sloss, Mr. J. E. D. Trask, Mr. John I. Walter, Mrs. Frank West, Mrs. Chas. S. Wheeler.

THE SPEED OF AMERICAN SPENDING.

Pleasure is limited by the time to enjoy it; in enjoyment, time is more than money. It is forgetfulness of this fact which makes much of our American spending banal and sterile. With much money to spend and few hours in which to spend it we become addicted to quick, concentrated, expensive pleasures. We cannot imitate the placid, fruitful economy of the Teuton, who takes his beer and music inexpensively and at his leisure. Nor are we like that abstemious German professor who, on his vacations, traveled on the slowest Bummelzug, because that way the joyous trip lasted longer. The meteoric flights of our tourists through Europe are in point; the automobile, also, illustrates the nervousness and swiftness of our pleasures. Motor-ing is broadening and delightful, but we are rushing into this amusement with more than our usual national abandon, and hardly even find time to speed. When a pleasure becomes the vogue, conveniences and even necessities are sacrificed to it. We are like those travelers of old who sold their lands to see other men's.—Walter E. Weyl in Harper's Magazine for March.

—On next Saturday, March 25th, at two o'clock, the twenty-first anniversary of the foundation of the Memorial Museum, Golden Gate Park, will be celebrated with special ceremonies in the front of the Museum. Honorable Samuel M. Shortridge will act as chairman, Professor Henry Morse Stephens and Mr. M. H. De Young, and a number of our most prominent citizens will participate in the exercises, as will Cas-sa's band and the school children.

This achievement of the great inventor-statesman attracted much attention but like everything new had objectionable features. Since that time scientific men have been endeavoring to perfect a bifocal lens ground from one piece of optical glass of uniform density, but time after time gave up, declaring it a mechanical impossibility. Others persisted and their endeavors have been rewarded in the perfecting of a bifocal lens which leaves nothing further to be desired. The name of this new lens is "Caltex."

CALIFORNIA PAINTER IN "MODERN" FIELD.

A group of paintings by Joseph Raphael, on exhibition at Helgesen Gallery in Sutter street, impresses the visitor that the new ideas in expression in oils as originated by Monet, Cezanne, Manet and Gauguin, having captured France, Russia, Germany, Austria, Holland and the Scandinavian countries, is now confidently invading the countries along the course of the Western sun. Raphael has evidently absorbed this spirit with fervor, and seeks to express it chiefly in landscapes, scenes with sloping beds of flowers, and distant, low-lying dwellings, conceptions which furnish him prospective effects in riotous colors. There is much promise and creative activity in his sympathetic interpretation of these scenes, several of them being surcharged with poetic brooding. In the large canvas depicting long beds of brilliant blooms reaching to a distant and lonely dwelling in the distance, he has struck that most appealing note. It furnishes a more sensuous atmosphere—the air is there. Two seascapes with children at play in the foreground beaches, lack somewhat the mystery and protean powers of old ocean. Clearly Raphael's forte with the brush is the landscape.

THE MARRIAGE YOKE.

The dull boy in the class unexpectedly distinguished himself in a recent history examination. The question ran: "How and when was slavery introduced into America?" To this he replied: "No women had come over to the early Virginia colony. The planters wanted wives to help with the work. In 1619 the London Company sent over a shipload of girls. The planters gladly married them, and slavery was introduced into America."—Youth's Companion.

FASHION'S FADS AND FRILLS

Paris and New York are both at the moment, and have been for ever so many weeks back, in the midst of the spring opening hubbub. We are not quite sure as yet whether coats are to be short or three-quarter length, whether sleeves are to be tight or loose, whether blonde or brunette will be the fashion this season.

It is quite safe to predict, however, that the same general lines suggested in the mid-season openings and at the various fashion shows will be followed.

Here and There the Tapering Waist.

Quite often one notices in the new importations a tendency to the slender, tapering waist; and this, of course, means the well-corseted figure. It is not probable that the hour-glass figure will be countenanced for a moment, but a trifle more trimness, conduced by a well fitting modern corset, is necessary to meet the requirements of the spring suit, with its hint of a curve at the waist line, its graceful flaring skirt and coat-skirt. A carefully selected and properly fitted corset is necessary and always has been to a smart, well groomed appearance. Rather than injurious, the right corset tends toward health.

Several of the Paris houses are advocating the three-quarter length coat, and now and then one sees a polonaise effect. These coats are made with well fitted shoulders and rounded waistline. It is quite remarkable that this should be so just now, when we are massing so much fulness in the skirts between the belt and the knees, but it only goes to show the wide variety we are to enjoy this spring and summer.

A Word on Skirts.

Skirts continue short and full. Many of the houses are emphasizing the favor shown by them for the crinoline since the first whisper of full skirts began to circulate, and many are using interesting methods of extending the skirts; among these are reeds, featherbone, and even hair-cloth stiffening. In many instances the reeds are graceful and becoming, but, as a rule, the effect is extremely awkward, as there is no pretense whatever of concealing the mediums, and they often protrude at unexpected angles, giving a curious, un-beautiful result.

In the regulation summer frock and the dance dress of net, organdy or other of the sheer, dainty fabrics favored this year, the fulness of the skirt is made decidedly graceful and youthful by tucks, ribbons and bias bands of the same, or a contrasting material. Often folds of chiffon or net are attached to the inside of the skirt of the dance dress, giving a soft, buoyant effect which is pleasing in every way. Taffeta is unusually effective combined with, or as trimming for, the pale-toned frock of organdy or net, fashioning the summer dance dress. In both illustrations this week the skirt is of taffeta and the effect of the deep tuck is well brought out. The first dress has an underbodice of shadow lace and a simple over-drapery of chiffon. The short sleeve cap, while it concedes to Fashion's sleeveless demand, also makes a concession to modesty. The second frock shows the combination of net and taffeta. Aside from being especially pretty, this combination is practical, as net wears particularly well and lends itself to almost any fashion of draping.

Dance Frock of Taffeta and Chiffon.

Ribbons and Ruchings.

Pleatings and ruchings of all widths and fashions are still favored trimmings for both street and house frocks. Narrow black velvet ribbon is most effective and easily applied. On some of the imported models cordings, pipings and ruchings appear in most unexpected places. One cannot fail to see that hand-work, and individual hand-made trimmings, stitchings, etc., can work wonders, and afford an effect which can scarcely be brought about by machine made trimmings. It is quite interesting to see a little blue serge frock trimmed with insertions of matching net, with accompanying pendant ornaments of wool or beads in a soft harmonizing coloring. Bead trimming is effective on both silk and wool materials; it is being used in any way that clever brains and fingers may design. The more original the notion, the more attractive the blouse or frock. Pale pink crepe de Chine or crepe is made more delicate by a banding or an ornament of delft-blue opaque beads. Dark blue taffeta or serge may be brightened with a touch of emerald green, copper or a harmonizing, contrasting blue. There are any number of small artistic ways of trimming frocks and blouses this season with practically no expenditure of money, if one has ideas and fingers deft enough to carry them out.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL ITEMS

ENGAGEMENTS.

BULLA-BUTLER.—An engagement announced recently in Los Angeles, and which is of much interest in San Francisco, is that of Miss Vivian Olive Bulla, daughter of Senator Robert M. Bulla, and Ormond F. Butler. The latter is the son of Melvin F. Butler. The bride-to-be divides her time between Los Angeles and her home in Alhambra, a suburb of the southern city, and has also many friends in this city, where she has visited on more than one occasion. No date has been set for the wedding.

GOLDSTEIN-BLANKSTEIN.—Mr. and Mrs. M. Goldstein announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Bessie Goldstein, to Maurice Blankstein.

HANNA-ERICSON.—Mr. and Mrs. Richard J. Hanna recently announced the engagement of their daughter, Miss Gertrude Turner Hanna, and Martin Ludwig Ericson of Medford, Oregon. Ericson is a Yale graduate and is connected with the Government forestry service. The wedding will take place shortly after Easter, and the couple will live at Medford.

WEDDING ANNOUNCEMENTS.

FINNELL-SLADÉ.—Another marriage of interest to San Francisco's smart set will take place April 12th in Chico, when Miss Mary Helen Finnell will become the bride of Russell Slade. The ceremony will be at high noon in the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. James Finnell, and will be witnessed only by relatives and close friends.

HINCKLEY-BOWMAN.—The friends of Miss Helen Hinckley and Melville Bowman were treated to a genuine surprise in the news that their marriage will take place to-day. They had at first intended to be married in the fall, but changed this plan a week or two ago.

WEDDINGS.

LEVY-MEYERHOFF.—The marriage of Miss Gertrude Levy and Paul Meyerhoff was solemnized on Wednesday evening, March 15th, at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Adolf Levy, on Presidio avenue. Rev. M. S. Levy read the marriage service. Following the ceremony, which was witnessed by about thirty relatives and friends, a wedding supper was served. Mr. and Mrs. Meyerhoff have gone to Southern California for their honeymoon, and they will also visit the Grand Canyon before taking up their residence in Holbrook, Ariz.

LUNCHEONS.

BANCROFT.—Mrs. Paul Bancroft entertained at luncheon Thursday at the Franciscan Club. The honored guest was Miss Metha Block, whose marriage to Grant Carpenter will take place to-day.

BROWNE.—Mrs. R. N. Browne has sent out invitations for a luncheon to be given at her apartments at Stanford Court for the Misses Esther Bentley and Linda Bryan, two of the season's most popular engaged girls. The luncheon will be on April 6th.

GALLOIS.—The home of Mrs. John Gallois on Russian Hill was the setting for a pretty luncheon recently.

HOWARD.—A group of friends enjoyed the hospitality of Mrs. George H. Howard at luncheon Tuesday at her home in San Mateo.

IRWIN.—Mrs. William G. Irwin presided at a luncheon Friday at her home in Washington street, in honor of Mrs. Edith Corbin, widow of the late General Corbin, who is the guest of Mrs. Frederick Kohl at Easton.

LONG.—Mrs. Oscar Fitzallan Long presided at luncheon Wednesday at her home in Piedmont, where she entertained in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Willis Walker of Minneapolis, who is a guest at the Fairmont Hotel.

MORBIO.—Mrs. P. A. Morbio has issued invitations for a luncheon to be given Tuesday, March 28th, at her home at West Clay Park.

POND.—Mrs. Charles Pond, wife of Admiral Pond, will be guest of honor at a luncheon to be given on March 30th at the Hotel St. Francis by the preparedness Chapter of the Women's Section of the Navy League.

SHOEMAKER.—Miss Marguerite Morbio was the honored guest at a luncheon given Wednesday by Mrs. Francis Rawle Shoemaker, at her attractive home in Belmont.

ST. GOAR.—Mrs. Henry St. Goar was hostess at a luncheon Tuesday at her home in California street, entertaining a group of friends quite informally.

WALLACE.—Mrs. Hamilton Stone Wallace gave a luncheon Tuesday at her home in honor of Mrs. William Howard, who is here from her home in Boston on a visit of indefinite length.

WATSON.—Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Watson entertained informally at luncheon Sunday afternoon at the Menlo Country Club.

DINNERS.

BREEDEN.—Mr. and Mrs. Henry Clarence Breeden entertained at a handsome dinner party at their home on Saturday night.

CROCKER.—Mr. and Mrs. William H. Crocker were hosts at dinner Saturday evening, entertaining their guests at New Place, in Burlingame.

CHAPIN.—Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Creighton of New York and Garden City, who are visiting Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Chapin at their home on Presidio Terrace, were the guests of honor at a dinner over which Mr. and Mrs. Chapin presided Tuesday evening.

ELLIS.—Lieutenant R. B. Ellis, U. S. A., and Mrs. Ellis, were hosts at a dinner party recently at their home in compliment to Lieutenant Ellis' sister, Mrs. L. Lewis. The affair was a farewell to Mrs. Lewis, who left the following day for the south.

GREEN.—Mr. and Mrs. Allen Green entertained informally at dinner Monday evening at one of the downtown cafes, and later, with their guests enjoyed supper and dancing at the Palace.

HAMPTON.—Major and Mrs. Kinesy Hampton entertained a score of their friends at a dinner party at the Palace on Monday night.

HEYNEMANN.—Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Heynemann were hosts at a dinner given at their home Saturday evening in compliment to Miss Helen Johnson and Arthur Saxe, who will be married at one of the after Easter fashionable weddings. After the dinner a dozen or so young people joined the party for an informal dance.

KENT.—Mrs. Andrew W. Kent entertained at a dinner party Tuesday night in compliment to the fiancée of her son, Miss Genevieve Cunningham. The marriage of Mr. Platt Kent and Miss Cunningham will take place early in the summer.

NEWHALL.—Among the pleasurable affairs of Sunday evening was the dinner at which Mr. and Mrs. George A. Newhall entertained. It took place at their home in Burlingame.

PARSONS.—Miss Helen Hinckley and Melville Bowman, whose engagement was recently announced, were the honored guests at a dinner given Wednesday evening by Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Parsons at their apartments on California street.

Here, There and Personally

Why talk of Mr. Root for president? He would be 76 years old when his term expired. Besides, would it be possible to elect him, in view of the half-million majority against the Root constitution in New York last November?

Mr. Brandeis might have avoided this terrific muckraking of his professional career by declining the nomination. By the way, if the majority of successful lawyers at 60 years of age should be investigated like Mr. Brandeis, how would their careers show up in the limelight?

Baron Astor has appeared in the House of Lords in a three-cornered hat, a crimson robe bordered in ermine and with a diamond ring which dazzled the assisting functionaries and spectators. The report that he appeared to feel uneasy is probably a base insinuation. Unalloyed happiness must have accompanied this realization of a great and fond ambition.

Mr. Bryan is helplessly muzzled on the question of a second nomination for the president if the report be true that Judge Clayton of the United States district court has in his possession a letter from Mr. Bryan, written in February, 1913, in which Mr. Bryan stated that Mr. Wilson was, or should be exempt from the restraining influence of the Baltimore single-term plank.

The recent strike of Negroes in the Danish West Indies has re-opened at Copenhagen the old question of the sale of the islands to the United States. It is generally believed in Copenhagen that if the question of the sale comes up again in Parliament it will receive a favorable majority in both Houses, provided the United States offers a greater sum than the $4,000,000 offered in 1901.

Every one looking back to Lincoln sees only his fine qualities and joins in the world-wide acclaim of his greatness. Yet the living Lincoln was the most ridiculed, the most sneered at, the most reviled public man of his time. Boston particularly was the home of many "leading citizens" who despaired of their country under the weak, vacillating and hopeless leadership of Abraham Lincoln.

A general strike of laborers employed on the construction of the government railroad between Anchorage and the Matanuska coal fields in Alaska has been called, according to the latest advices received at Seattle, Wash., from Seward, the Alaskan headquarters of the Alaskan engineering commission. The men demanded an increase in the wages of common laborers to 50 cents an hour.

It is safe to assume that Britain was the prime mover in the seizure of German merchantmen by Portugal, who is Britain's ally, but, like Italy, holds an anomalous position in the war.

In a canvass of the United States Senate on the question of a resolution warning Americans to keep off the merchantmen of belligerents, the New York World reports as follows: Against, 36 Democrats and 34 Republicans; for, 19 Democrats and six Republicans. It does not seem to be a party question, with the Republicans showing greater solidarity than the Democrats in supporting a Democratic president.

AN AMERICAN'S QUOTATION ON IMMORTALITY.

Rev. Dr. A. C. Dixon, the American preacher filling Spurgeon's famous pulpit in London's Metropolitan Tabernacle, quoted Spurgeon, in his part of that new symposium book, "What Happens After Death?" in this happy fashion. Spurgeon was quoting an English pastor who had preached on the immortality of the soul, and who was approached by one of his parishioners who told him that he did not believe in such preaching. "There is no difference," this parishioner said, "between the man and the dog." "Well," replied the preacher, "I really thought that I was furnishing food for people who had souls; if I had known that there was a dog among them I might have brought bones for him."—Ex.

ANNUAL REPORT OF NATOMAS COMPANY.

The annual meeting of the Natomas Company of California was held this week, and the pamphlet report for 1915 issued. Concerning the gold dredging properties, from which the company derives its principal revenue, the report says: "The tested dredging lands of the company on January 1, 1915, were estimated to contain 190,000,000 cubic yards of gold bearing material that could be profitably mined. Prospecting was carried on during the year 1915 on other lands owned by the company, and the results indicate that 400 acres, containing 41,000,000 cubic yards of profitable dredging ground, can be added to the dredging properties. Further prospecting is being done and results so far obtained indicate that an appreciable additional acreage may be added to the company's gold bearing properties. During the year 1915 the gross gold recovery from dredging operations amounted to $2,416,960, and the net operating profit was $1,313,800. Net operating revenue after taxes was $1,570,799, out of which $737,032 was paid in interest, leaving $833,767 gross profits. After writing off $345,171 depreciation and $486,421 exhaustion of mineral area, the net profit for the year was $2,175. The first balance sheet of the company was issued as of July 31, 1915. The balance sheet as of December 31, 1915, shows a decrease of $167,000 in value of gold dredging properties. This is considerably less than the exhaustion written off, due to the fact that $468,000 has been carried from the property suspense account to the actual property account, as doubtful mineral areas have been proven. Current assets have increased more than $100,000.

"It is gratifying," says the N. Y. Financial Chronicle, "to have as an element of strength in the general situation the wonderful returns of railroad earnings that are now coming to hand. The returns are wonderful though . . . they pass almost unnoticed." The Mining World says the dividends of copper mines in 1916 will be more than $100,000,000, and that "the copper industry is assured the most wonderful year in its history." "Certainly," says the Wall Street Journal, "the country was never internally, from a financial standpoint, so strong and so well buttressed as to-day." What more could anybody ask in that direction?

—Since the strike in the Rescue-Eula Mining Co. was first made, five lots of ore have been shipped to the West End mill. The two shipments last week totaled 83 tons, and the three shipments made this week amounted in all to 131 tons. It is a feature of the report that since the first lot was shipped there has been a constant increase in the value of the returns from the ore. The net returns from the fourth lot, which amounted to 46 tons, were more than sufficient to pay the operating expenses of the Rescue-Eula for the month of March, and it is safe to predict that a fine profit will be shown on the March operations.

—San Francisco in 1915 passed Detroit for eighth place in postal receipts; passed Pittsburg for seventh place in bank clearings, and passed both New Orleans and Philadelphia into seventh place in the value of imports from foreign countries, according to the fifth annual statistical report of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce. The report shows bank clearings for the year of 1915 to be $2,693,688,925; postal receipts, $3,324,989; exports to the value of $103,134,106, and imports of $83,338,138. In the total amount of exports and imports from foreign countries, according to the report, San Francisco ranks second only to New York. The principal article of import from San Francisco during 1915 was canned goods, valued at over $10,500,000, followed in order of importance by raw cotton, barley, iron manufactures, fuel oil, illuminating oil, flour, dried fruits, lumber, leather and raisins.

Seven Passenger---$1325

Yes---it's the six pre-eminent.

Why do we say the Marion-Handley is the Six pre-eminent?

Because it provides all that 90% of the American people need and want in a motor car.

We could give a little more and charge much more. But there is a point beyond which you merely merge into extravagance.

We could give less and charge less. But there is a point which borders on, if it does not reach into, the field of expensive cheapness.

The MARION-HANDLEY stands between these two extremes.

So well conceived—so masterfully designed—so skillfully built—so finely balanced; so exquisitely and scientifically blended are all the parts that enter into it, that we boldly proclaim it "the Six pre-eminent."

A year ago they said "it can't be done." To-day it is a recognized and applauded reality.

How An Automobile Lured A Zeppelin to Destruction

The conquest of an eagle by a chicken surely would be no more remarkable than destruction of a mighty Zeppelin by a lowly automobile. Yet the latter feat has been accomplished.

Take, for instance, the case of "Corporal Victor," an English non-commissioned officer who helped to snare a German aerial battleship somewhere in France. If one can imagine the capture of a hornet by an ant, and magnify that achievement a few thousand times, the result approximates the coup of the Corporal and his mechanic. Two or three experiences with a strange motor car carrying a queerly twisted rear lamp, whose appearances were always followed by a Zeppelin raid in the neighborhood, led the Corporal, whose duties took him scouring the countryside in a "big Six," to come to some conclusion. He began to thirst for other views of similar automobiles with upturned lights, and to look for houses whose chimneys had a way of acting queerly shortly after the strange automobiles stopped before them. One night he and his mechanic had the good luck to find both of these. The auto was halted at the side of the road before a quiet country house. His story goes on:

"A big pine tree almost brushed the window of the dining room, which was slightly open at the top. Climbing into its branches, I was sufficiently near to hear the low conversation, though I was unable to see the speakers. I could discern at least three voices, and they spoke in German.

Having, in happier days, spent some time in Dresden and Berlin, where I was with Eichler, the publisher, I am fairly well acquainted with the Teutonic tongue, so I was able to follow the discussion.

"I learned that another air-raid had been made on London that very night, and one of the Zeppelins, having been damaged, was returning that way direct to Germany instead of to its base at Zebrugge. It was to be very carefully piloted, as owing to its state it was flying very low, and should arrive over their neighborhood about one o'clock. It was then well past midnight, as far as I could calculate.

"How all this information had so quickly come into their possession I did not then know, though I learned later on. I heard further details, too, which explained the use of the car and the upturned headlight.

"For quite half an hour I waited, listening to the clatter of knives and forks; to the popping of corks and whole-hearted 'straffing' of England, which I longed to interrupt, but I had something better on hand.

"At length I heard some one moving about, and it seemed to me as if the chimney went on fire. Then they made to come out. In an instant I was down on the soft earth and out of the gate. A glance at the chimney showed it still emitting clouds of sparks.

"We heard their footsteps on the gravel as we slid quickly away into the shades of the moonless night. Then we let her rip for a mile, and she could hop it, too!

"See their chimney on fire?' I queried.

"Fire!" said Max, with withering scorn. 'Magnesium and electric light went up that chimney, or I'm no photographer!'—which the little Scot was before he went to war.

"We knew every inch of the road for ten miles around and every mile to the north and the brown trenches there. By taking a crossroad and doubling back we got almost opposite the house in the wood—though rather over half a kilometer to the east of it.

"Listen!"

"Yes, that's it for sure! Now turn on the lights,' for we had been traveling without their aid.

The auto they had tracked earlier in the evening was a Zeppelin-guider. Now was their opportunity to substitute for the absent guider and lead the big aircraft safely astray. That they did more than this was perhaps due to good fortune as much as to preconceived plan. At all events, their big rear-lights, especially arranged for the occasion, were turned skyward as a hail to the wanderer. The airship paused a moment overhead, examining the machine; but all autos look alike from several hundred feet in the air, and in the dark of night, and so suspicion was easily allayed.

"The great shape loomed out of the darkness, and seemed to touch the tops of the trees that lined the road, as it gently swayed on the still night air.

"We flicked our lights off and on once or twice, then moved away. For a moment or two nothing happened in the air, and I feared some signal I did not know was wanting. But again we heard the engines above rattle into life, and that they were following our light seemed assured. At the first cross roads I turned sharply to the right and the great airship gliding over us did likewise; then at last I felt a grim satisfaction and proceeded with the plan I had worked out most carefully during the week, but had kept to myself.

"Where to?' queried Max.

"The big Noberg foundry!"

"My God, what an idea!"

Picture to yourself a great straggling works, spread over many acres, with a dozen tall chimneys scattered over the space; one of them almost, if not quite, the loftiest stack in all France.

"I tried to gauge the top speed of which the Count's ship was capable, and found it would do barely 40 miles an hour, and the faster it went the lower down it came. According to our information, it should have been able to fly at nearly 80 miles when in proper trim, so it was clear our gunners had hit it pretty hard.

"Once or twice they tried to work a searchlight, but it only gave a momentary flash, then blinked feebly and went out. Everything seemed to be going as I could wish, and only another mile lay between us and the foundry. So unexpectedly, as to make me start, there was the sound of something heavy falling to earth; they were evidently throwing things out to lighten the load. Up it went, higher than ever we had seen it go; at the sight my heart sank. Still it was now or never.

Its rise had put it behind us, and I slowed to let it come up level again; then I accelerated, and joyfully heard the strain of the big engines in their effort to keep up with us, and it pulled them down once more.

"We were on the last quarter mile and the road ended at the foundry! The car was bumping and swaying on the cart-broken road like a ship on a stormy sea. My wrists ached and throbbed, almost paralyzed by the vibration.

"The dark iron gateway that barred our track seemed rushing toward us. Max clutched my arm, terrified lest I was going to drive to certain death against them, but with a stamp of my foot on the lighting switchboard, I pressed in the whole row of plugs, and we seemed to pitch into the very depths of blackness. All my brakes went on, and the wheels locked while the scream of the tires sounded like a wail from hell.

Big Ideas in the Chalmers Conventions

One of the best tactical moves in developing the automobile industry in California was developed this week when Chalmers Company of this city invited over 300 dealers, representing that company throughout the Pacific Coast, to gather here and celebrate a Chalmers' Day. The kernel of the big idea was to have these dealers meet Hugh Chalmers, president of the company, with a view to putting the selling force in this zone in intimate touch with the head of the manufacturing plant, and swap ideas on team work between the two big departments. The result was an enthusiastic success in every detail. So much so that there is one hundred per cent certainty that the Chalmers Company will repeat the gathering periodically, and that other leading automobile companies will hold conventions here along the same lines. As a getter of efficiency, results and a complete understanding of the problem tackled, the convention was a corker, and the Chalmers management is to be congratulated on pioneering a brainy idea in efficaciously boosting the automobile trade.

Easily the biggest happening of the day was the statement made by Chalmers during his speech on the future of the automobile industry that before a year had passed his company would be assembling cars in this part of the State. Chalmers was careful not to state whether negotiations for a factory site had been completed, but he made it plain that it was necessary for his company, if it intended to enjoy the coast business, to have an assembling plant in California. He also intimated that several of the other big factories would also follow suit before the next season was well advanced.

"There was the sound of falling bricks as the Zeppelin car struck the first chimney. There was a vicious spurt of machine gun fired by some one who understood too late, and we found both ourselves under the over-turned motor car in the ditch where my sudden stoppage had thrown us.

"Then the whole earth seemed to tremble as the giant smokestack toppled over to ruin. There were other sounds, too, which no mortal pen could portray. But from that raid on London town at least one Zeppelin never returned to Germany, and there are certain details which it is not wise to give at present.

"When we went to the house in the woods that morning it was found deserted; in its cellar was a very powerless wireless plant; among the trees, cunningly concealed, were the wires of the installation. Instead of a fireplace in the dining room was a powerful electric light projector, which worked up the chimney. Max was right, too, about the magnesium; it was there also."

During the luncheon at the Palace Hotel, L. H. Rose gave his early experiences as a pioneer dealer in the northwest, and sketched his early troubles in striving to get the Eastern manufacturers to realize that the automobile problems in the West were altogether different from those in the East. For years he hammered on correspondence to bring about a better understanding on these points. Apparently the manufacturers at that time were engaged in more pressing problems, for they gave him scant attention. However, being a dealer with a will, eternal patience and steel-clad persistency, he stuck to his idea till the dealers on his list began to fall into line. The gathering this week at the Palace Hotel is one of the natural products of the ideas that Rose incubated when he was hustling through the northwest years ago, striving his best to put the system on a more efficient plane, to get first hand the dealers' angle of the situation as regards sales conditions in California.

President and General Manager of the Company Hugh Chalmers is a recognized constructive leader in the automobile trade, and his ideas pass as coin current among manufacturers and dealers. According to his study of the method of the automobile trade, passed into a new era some three years ago. Now it is a matter of giving satisfaction to customers, in order to meet competition. The automobile has now passed from the mechanical stage, so to speak, to that of business and sales management. The companies that are going to succeed in the future are those who have the best business organizations, and of course embodying in this the best sales organization. It is the company who will, first of all, manufacture a good product, and then will cooperate with its dealers in selling these cars, and then will give the best service in its power to those who buy the cars, that is going to survive. The company that will meet with unusual success will be the company that does unusual things. If you want to go from San Francisco to New York in two days or three days, you will have to do something that no one else has done before. The company will win that will think out the most efficient and effective way to advertise its products—that will have the most efficient and trained salesmen selling its cars, and, of course, have a most efficient service organization. The automobile company that will develop the most efficiency in the next five years in this salient point of supervision is bound to pass ahead of those who stick to the old methods.

In touching on the establishment of a branch Chalmers' plant here, Mr. Chalmers said:

"In the past, California and other coast territory has been more or less neglected in the distribution of automobiles, but through no fault of the manufacturers. It is difficult to get freight cars to move our product practically the year round. The only real remedy for this condition and other obstacles every manufacturer has in the coast trade is to assemble cars here. Therefore, our plan is the only logical one for us. Since we have gone into making low-priced cars the need for a coast plant has been growing, until now it is an absolute necessity. Our plant at Detroit employs 5,000 men, and it is working at full capacity. Our California plant will not only take some of the strain off the main factory, but it will be a distinct advantage to buyers on the coast.

"The time is not far distant when all makers of low priced motor cars in large quantities will find it to their advantage to establish branch plants here."

The Romance of Roads

Historical Review of Roadbuilding from the Construction of the Appian Way 312 B. C. to California State Highway

The road models show that historically road building began with the Romans. Legend tells us that the Carpathians, the Egyptians, the Peruvians, and even the Babylonians before them, built roads of a more or less finished type. But the famous Appian Way, built in 312 B. C., by Appius Claudius Caecus to connect Rome with Capua, 142 miles away, was the earliest highway to come within our actual sphere of knowledge. This road was finally continued on to Brindisi, giving it a total length of 360 miles, and the honesty of the Roman contractors or the efficacy of the highway department detective service is attested by the fact that certain portions of the original Appian Way are still carrying the traffic of modern Italy.

The distinguished characteristic of the Roman roads was their massive construction. It was no uncommon thing for a road to be three or four feet thick and thirty feet wide. The Roman method of construction called for five distinct strata or layers. The first was the contignatum pavementum, usually consisting of sand and lime. Then came the statumen or foundation, two courses of flat stones laid dry or in mortar. Next followed the rudus, a broken stone and lime stratum, and on this was placed the nucleus, a gravel or broken stone course, laid in hot lime. All this was merely the foundation on which was to rest the summa crusta or pavimentum, directly bearing the weight of traffic. This surface layer was composed of polygonal stone blocks cut and fitted with the greatest exactitude, and it was usually some six inches thick. With this expenditure of care, labor and material, it is no wonder that the Roman roads have stood up under twenty centuries of traffic and even of abuse.

During the long benighted centuries that followed the subjugation of the Roman civilization by the barbarian hordes from the north, road building languished and died, a phenomenon that was a cause as well as a result of the decline of culture.

The renaissance of highway building began in France under the ministry of Colbert, a great man, but one whom most of us remember only as a minor character in Dumas's fiction. Between 1660 and 1669 Colbert built about 15,000 miles of post roads. The science of road building had not assumed its modern aspect, and the highways were not particularly durable. No system of maintenance was provided for, and the result was that the roads rapidly deteriorated and another period of highway benightedness set in. But the entering wedge had been driven and the people began dimly to understand the value of good roads.

In 1775 came the dawn of what we may term the modern highway era. The prophet to whom we owe our emancipation from the haphazard roads of history was Pierre Marie Jerome Tresaguet, a distinguished French engineer. For many years he had preached the necessity for roads properly crowned and drained, and, even more important, properly maintained after construction. At length the government heard and allowed Tresaguet to demonstrate his theories. The Tresaguet method consists first of an earth foundation shaped parallel to the surface of the finished road. Next comes a course of flat stones laid on edge lengthwise across the road, and then a second stratum of smaller stones, beaten down with hammers. The surface course was made up of broken stones about the size of walnuts, spread with a shovel and compacted under traffic. While modern highway construction science has found some errors in the Tresaguet building method, his maintenance system, under which the roads were divided into cantonniers, each in charge of an official to give its continuous attention, has lasted to the present day and is the fundamental reason why France has the finest highway system in the world.

The next great name that we find in the annals of modern highway construction is that of John Loudon MacAdam, born at Ayr, Scotland, in 1756. It is not without interest to know that MacAdam spent the years from 1770 to 1783 in the counting house of his uncle in New York city. No doubt he was a pestiferous Tory, but he seems to have kept his feelings under excellent control, for we find no record of any loyalist activity on his part. After his return to Scotland MacAdam was appointed to a post of importance under the road board. It was here that he began his studies in the science of road construction. In 1816 he became inspector for the Bristol Turnpike Trust, having under his direct control 178 miles of highway. This was the time when MacAdam undoubtedly brought to practical fruition his studies in road construction of the years before. In 1817 the Scotch engineer was employed to build the first macadam roads in London, and a few years later he became street commissioner of the world's metropolis. An amusing incident is related of MacAdam's life at this time. At a dinner given in honor of another great Scotchman, Sir Walter Scott, MacAdam acted as toastmaster and referred to the guest of the evening as "the Colossus of literature." Scott promptly replied, expressing his appreciation of the compliment extended to him by his friend, "the Colossus of Roads."

The macadam system of construction consisted of first an earth foundation, which was always higher than the surface of the surrounding ground, to facilitate drainage. Next came a layer of hand-broken stone, ten inches in thickness. No stone was used which had a greater dimension than one and a half inches. The surface was raked regularly during consolidation, which latter was accomplished entirely by traffic. Maintenance consisted in adding material as need arose. Modern science has altered somewhat the macadam system of construction, adding various binders as traffic needs indicated and calling to its aid the services of the steam roller, unknown to MacAdam.

By the time that MacAdam died, in 1836, he had had the satisfaction of seeing a highway system constructed on his model, slowly creep over the entire length of England and into Scotland and Wales.

During the period to which MacAdam belonged there flourished another engineer who occupies a high position in highway annals. This was Thomas Telford, born in 1757, in Dumfriesshire, Scotland. The Telford system resembles closely that used earlier by the French pioneer, Tresaguet. It consists of an earth foundation, on which is laid a bottom course of stone ten inches by six by four in dimensions. The stones are laid by hand and are keyed in with chips or small stones. Drainage is insisted on, as in all scientific highway construction. The surface of the Telford road is the same as that of the macadam highway. The Telford system is still in use, but its cost makes its general employment impossible.

During his lifetime, Telford built roads in Austria, Germany, Russia, Switzerland and the Scandinavian countries. He also constructed a system of highways in Scotland, the total length of which was almost a thousand miles. Telford died in 1834, and was buried in Westminster Abbey, a national tribute to the value of his lifework.

The exigencies of modern traffic have rendered necessary certain modifications in the construction of macadam roads. Even before the coming of the motor car it has been found necessary to adopt a water binder to assist the operation of compacting the road under the steam roller, an aid to construction unknown to the father of the macadam highway.

As soon as the motor vehicle assumed a prominent place in the traffic system of the country it became apparent that water-bound macadam roads were inadequate to withstand the disintegrating action of rubber tired wheels traveling at higher speeds than had ever been anticipated. Existing roads began rapidly to go to pieces under the strain of the new transportation method.

To adapt the roads to modern traffic conditions, it was found necessary to bond the crushed stone with bituminous material of some sort, which, coating the fragments and filling the interstices, should lock the surface into a homogeneous mass. Refined tars, oil asphalts and fluxed natural asphalts are the commonly employed binders. These binders are applied in two ways, either by mixing the stone and the binding composition before placing them on the road, or by placing the stone coating first and then spreading over it a layer of binder, allowing the latter to penetrate the top course to a depth of two or three inches. These two methods of application are known respectively as the mixing method and the penetration method. In each case it is customary to spread a second and light layer of bituminous material over the final road surface and then scatter a layer of stone chips on that, after which the highway is given a final rolling and is then ready for traffic.

The prevailing type in the California State Highway system is the four-inch concrete base, with a 1:2½:5 mixture, and a surface of asphaltic oil about three-eighths inches thick. Chief Engineer Fletcher has in a measure turned his back on precedent and is striking out boldly along comparatively new lines. He has eliminated a huge mass of material by specifying four inches of concrete instead of six; he has shown himself a courageous radical by using only one part of cement to about seven and one-half parts of aggregate; he has scoffed at the spectre of "expansion," and has built his concrete roads utterly without expansion points; he has forsaken the time-honored sixteen foot "double" roadway and has specified a fifteen foot surface for the county roads and an eighteen foot width in the vicinity of the cities.

Oakland Will Hold Big Motor Power Show

Interesting Features Planned

The usual procedure of the West going to the East to learn how things should be done will be reversed at the big Pacific Coast Motor Power Show, which will be held at the Oakland Municipal Auditorium from April 26th to May 6th. This exposition will again demonstrate that the Pacific Coast "knows how," and it is predicted that the coming Power Show will be the most complete and original ever given west of Chicago.

The combined exhibit space will be more than 50,000 square feet, and will include all of the Auditorium arena and two annexes, one to be built south and the other east of the Auditorium. In the Arena, automobile displays only will be shown. In the southern annex will be automobile accessories, the heavier motor trucks, traction engines and good roads machinery, and in the eastern annex the motor boats, aeroplanes, motor power operated household utilities and similar products will be housed.

The Motor Power Show has been endorsed by the Oakland Chamber of Commerce, the 1916 Lincoln Highway Committee, the Automobile Industries Association of Alameda County, and many civic and commercial organizations. A portion of the proceeds will be given to the Lincoln Highway Committee for the marking of this roadway from Salt Lake City to Oakland with Oakland and San Francisco signposts. It is freely predicted that this year will witness a tremendous influx of tourists over this highway, and one reason for the holding of the show is to advertise the highway from Salt Lake City to Oakland and San Francisco, with the result that thousands of the automobilists may come direct to the coast rather than take the road from Ely to Los Angeles.

Co-operating in this feature of the exposition is the National Lincoln Highway Committee, represented in Oakland by John E. Caine, Western Consul, and L. E. Warford, Pacific Coast representative. Warford has received word that the highway will be completed early this spring, certain automobile and tire companies spending over $500,000 for the building up of certain parts of the road, especially the section through the Great American Desert, between Tooele and Ibapah, Idaho.

Included in the 1916 Lincoln Highway Committee, which is taking an active part in the Power Show, are Dennis Searles, F. W. Bilger, Louis W. Buckley, D. E. Graves, Charles W. Heyer, F. H. Woodward, H. A. Lafler, P. W. Moorehouse, Fred Seulberger, Carl Sword and F. A. Williamson.

The Automobile Industries Association of Alameda County has a membership of more than 200, and includes all the big dealers in the East bay region. At the initial meeting they subscribed for over 90 per cent of the space, and have shown the greatest enthusiasm since.

All of the distributors and dealers will have complete exhibits. In addition to the regular cars, interesting features are being planned. Among these is to be a complete showing of the automobile, motor truck and accessories in war, especially showing the wonderful progress made in the use of the auto in war since the outbreak of the European war. The Ford exhibit will also contain the first car ever made. This is considered among the most valuable relics of the pioneer automobile days, and is only allowed to leave the home plant in Detroit on state occasions. It will be sent West under close guard, and is to be met by a squad of police upon its arrival in Oakland. The golden chassis of the Studebaker Company, made completely of the precious metal, and one of the greatest drawing cards in the automobile world today, is also to be shown.

Of great interest to the public will be the contests of automobile assembling, tire mounting, vulcanizing and welding by expert mechanics of the various garages who will compete for prizes. Another big feature will be the Outdoor Fashion Show, which will be held in the ballroom of the Auditorium on April 28 and 29. The latest decrees of fashion for automobile parties, for the golf links, riding, driving, hunting and aquatic sport will be demonstrated by models, with special scenery with each set of costumes.

A BAS THE PEDESTRIAN

We grant the pedestrian a trifle too much liberty and leisure in his use of the streets and the highways. They manage it better in France where they arrest the man who get run over. Too much to expect that in this country, but even so they certainly should arrest any pedestrian who seeks to cross any street at any point save the duly assigned crossings at street corners. If the millenium ever it comes it will arrive the very day that this fact is recognized by pedestrians as being the one thing most needed to insure their own safety.

Gathering the first blossoms near Alta Mesa

Wandering Down the Peninsula in Blossom Time

By R. R. l'Hommedieu

The winter has passed and the touring season is at hand. What rains we are likely to have for the remainder of the year are of small thought at this time. The motor car owner can equip his automobile for any length of tour and feel almost certain that he is able to make a most lengthy extended trip throughout California. There are others, however, who do not plan on long tours at this early time of the year and spend Saturdays and Sundays driving over the roads in and around San Francisco. Practically every motor car owner knows the State Highway, as it runs down through San Jose and on through to Del Monte, or turning at San Jose, work up around the other side of the bay, or over through Livermore, Niles or Dublin Canyon into the San Joaquin Valley. Just at this time there is a most delightful drive to be had in the byways down the peninsula. One can motor down otherwise than on the State Highway, over roads which are surprisingly good, and which bear most favorable comparison with the State roads. It is through not only the blossom country but the wild flower country, and just now these artistic nature's colorings are budding forth from the green Mother Earth. Such a trip was recently taken in a hunt for Flora's nooks and corners in the mountain range that guards the coast.

Leaving San Francisco in a fog, well wrapped up, and expecting that heavy clothing would be necessary, a Marion car, with E. E. Wickstrom of the American Auto Co., and his guests, was sent out through the Park, over 19th avenue, into the Sloat Boulevard, thence into the Junipero Serra Boulevard to Colma, where the thread of the State Highway was picked up and the run down the peninsula began. Just after leaving Colma, and a mile or two beyond Tanforan, we bid adieu to the fog; the sun was out with its warm rays, and in a very few minutes made us shed our heavy clothing. In fact, the outing suits of the ladies in the party were more comfortable than the heavy woolen of the men. It was a most delightful morning, following closely on the heels of one of the late rains. We followed the State Highway to Redwood City, and at the further end of the town, at what is known as "The Five Corners," we took the Woodside road leading off sharply to the right. We were more than surprised to find that this stretch of road had been improved by San Mateo County, and was in perfect condition. On past the Menlo Golf and Country Club, through the foothills, the road winds, climbing up above the deep canyons, where one gets a vista backwards that is most beautiful. The higher the road goes, ever changing is the scene, and one can easily appreciate why Woodside has become so popular with the capitalists of San Francisco for their summer homes. Passing through Woodside, one takes the road to the left or lower road, following what is known as the La Honda-Pescadero road. This wanders around the rolling foothills under hundreds of beautiful shade trees, over a new roadway that bears most favorable comparison with those of the State. Thence on we passed the property of the Family Club, known as the "Farm," thence through the quaint old town of Portola, which hamlet has taken its name from the discoverer of San Francisco Bay. For it is said that he, in his wanderings northward in search of Monterey, traveled over this very section, which ended in the discovery of the waters of the Golden Gate. In fact, there is a tree right beyond the Family Club under which it is said that one of the hardy soldiers of Portola lies buried. Leaving Portola the road winds out in open country for a short time, and then breaks into another canyon, winding snakelike through what is known as the "wildflower country."

At this time of the year this section is just alive with Eschscholtzia, blue Lupin, and almost every known wild flower in California; that is, those that grow in the lowlands. At the height of their bloom, in half an hour one can fill a motor car to overflowing. This road leads past the old stock farm of the Stanford estate, and thence into the Leland Stanford, Jr., University. Instead of taking the main road through the University grounds, one turns sharply to the right at the main avenue as it passes the Lathrop home, over what is known as the Mountain View road, which works back towards the foothills for a short distance, and then comes out in the direction of Mountain View. But instead of following this, one should take any of the roads branching to the right which lead into the Monte Vista country, over what is known as Inspiration Point.

By keeping well to the right on all the roads, one mounts up and drops down over the higher foothills, which is productive of the most beautiful views of the upper end of Santa Clara Valley.

Following this mode of procedure one finally comes to what is known as the "Steven's Creek" country.

THE CHEAP CAR MARKET

By the end of the current year, probably we shall see the ratio of an automobile to every eight families in the United States attained. Even as it is now, the proportion of automobiles to population in the United States is one to forty-eight persons. Placing the average price of these 3,000,000 cars at $800, those who figure such matters are inclined to believe that it is possible for any one with an income of even as low as $1,200 per annum to afford a motor car. Since there are 1,300,000 people in this country whose incomes, according to the data gathered by the Federal Income Tax Bureau, range from $1,200 to $1,800 and 1,500,000 whose yearly incomes vary from $1,800 to $3,000, there seems to be no reason to fear that the market for the lower-priced cars will become overstocked in the near future.

HAY MOTORS IN UNITED STATES

An illustration of the enormous future which lies before the automobile is brought out through official figures issued by the United States Department of Agriculture, which show that the automobile has hardly begun the elimination of the horse outside of the large cities. There are still more than 21 million horses and about 4 1/2 million mules on the farms of the United States. In the large cities the automobile has made greater strides toward the elimination of the horse. There are only about three million horses now in use in our cities. Sixteen years ago, when the motor car was just peeping over the transportation horizon, there were 18 million horses and mules in the country districts of the United States.

BOPPING ON THE HUDSON

Last week a scow laden with 150 motor trucks believed to have been consigned to the Allies, broke away from its moorings in Weehawken, on the New Jersey side of the Hudson river, in some mysterious manner and finally sank in 15 feet of water off the Weehawken mud flats.

It is thought that the float was set adrift by persons whose intentions were to prevent the shipment of the trucks to Europe for military purposes. Derricks are raising the crated trucks.

It is said that the shipment of trucks was sent from a factory on Long Island and that it was to be loaded on the British tramp steamer Student, due to sail for Liverpool in a few days.

spots and more delightful places for luncheon to be found than along the banks of Steven's Creek.

However, one should be careful when coming to the broad bridge which crosses Steven's Creek at the Villa Maria to drive farther on, because the proprietor of this place has issued strict orders that no one shall trespass and lunch in the delightful spot, which has been called "Nature's Cathedral."

If you leave San Francisco in the early morning as we did, you will find by the time that you have reached the Steven's Creek country, high noon is at hand and that luncheon is most acceptable.

Leaving Steven's Creek country, one can wander on down over what is known as the Cupertino road, thence over to Saratoga, and then to Los Gatos. At Los Gatos the Hume place should be visited, and the road followed back into the foothills amongst the blossoms. For from the summit of the Hume place, back of the barn, one gets the most wonderful view of the blossom country of Santa Clara. The height is just right to give the effect of a white sea of blossoms extending practically across the valley. It will be found that by the time this wonderful scene has been admired to the full that the hour is approaching for the homeward trip. You may re-trace the homeward journey by way of the State Highway through the peninsular towns, or if you may, pass on through San Jose and thence up the other side of the bay, traveling through the foothills and into Oakland, which will complete a full day's outing for the motorist.

How a Truck Was Delivered in Eureka on a Dare

By C. A. McGee

Along the Van Rusen River

Is there such a thing as a road that is impassable to a modern motor car? Some of the recent performances of gasoline propelled vehicles would tend to prove that there was no such thing as an impassable road. All the San Francisco block books show the now famous Duncan street hill to be impassable to teams, yet after enough practice and experimenting, almost all of the best known cars succeeded in getting over the top of this 50 per cent grade. But the performance of these cars is eclipsed by the record breaking trip of a Buick one-ton truck which last week succeeded in making the run from San Francisco to Eureka at a time when all authorities agreed that the road between these two points was impassable. In spite of the unusually heavy winter we have just experienced, the truck made the trip several weeks earlier than it has ever before been made.

To start with a machine on a 300 mile trip at this season of the year through the mountains and over roads that are supposed to be impassable requires the utmost confidence in a machine's ability to pull out of any hole it may mire into.

That the crew possessed this confidence is proven by the fact that they agreed unconditionally to deliver the truck in good condition in Eureka, and they had only five days in which to make the delivery—and at that, there was one day to spare. One day was consumed in preparing for the 300 mile mud plug, and three days were required for the trip, and according to the crew's report, the car showed no bad effects from its unusual experience upon its arrival in Eureka.

The truck was in charge of Perry Graves and C. A. McGee, both of the Howard Automobile Company.

In discussing road conditions and the trip in general, McGee has the following to say: "When we left San Francisco we knew there were many difficulties ahead of us. Every one familiar with road conditions assured us that it was absolutely impossible to drive a machine to Eureka at this time, and if it had not been for our absolute faith in the car, I am sure we would have backed out.

"We decided that we could drive the truck any place a wagon could go, so the start from San Francisco was made Friday at 11 o'clock. From Sausalito the roads were fine to four miles north of San Rafael. Here there is a rough stretch of road caused by Highway work, and in the next eleven miles there were occasional rough stretches due to the same cause.

"The first night's stop was at Cloverdale, and at 7:30 Saturday morning we were on our way to Willits over the new State Highway, which is certainly a great improvement over the old "Blue Slide" road. Several miles of rough road were found near Hopland, and then Highway the rest of the way to Willits. This was the end of good roads for many miles, and according to the natives, our journey was soon to come to an end on account of impassable roads. We decided to go to Laytonville via Sherwood, instead of taking the new road via Longvale. There had been no travel over the Sherwood road for several months, and it was certainly in bad shape. The motor never faltered, however, and the grades and mud were taken with the utmost ease.

"Cummings, at the foot of Rattlesnake grade, was the second night's stop. Sun-up Sunday found us on our way up the grade, and there is no questioning the fact that it is a real grade, and to add to the difficulties, we encountered snow five miles from Bell Springs, and the next ten miles was through mud and snow—in some places a couple of feet deep. We reached the summit about 10 o'clock, and then began the descent to Harris and Audler Point, where the Eel River is crossed. Some very deep mud was found on this piece of road. From Audler Point to Blocksburg the roads were in better shape, but lots of mud was encountered between Blocksburg and Bridgeville, where the third night's stop was made.

"At Bridgeville we were told that the washed out section of the road along the Van Dusen river had been repaired, and that we had only 13 miles more of bad road ahead of us; so we started on the last lap of our journey Monday morning in a very happy frame of mind.

Buick truck near Harris

In the Humboldt Redwoods

"The scenery was grand but the roads were not. There is an end to all things—even bad roads—and at Strong's Camp we came to a gravel road which was as good as any one could ask for, and the thirty miles into Eureka was made in fast time.

"Humboldt and Sonoma Counties are both working hard on their roads, and they will be in good shape this summer. Mendocino County, however, does not appear to consider good roads necessary, and for that reason motorists will not enjoy their trip through this county until the State Highway is completed. Judging from what we saw of the roads, it will be at least 60 days before the roads will be open to pleasure touring.

"In spite of unfavorable road conditions, the 300 mile trip was made without the least bit of trouble of any kind, and averaged better than 12 miles to the gallon of gasoline.

MACHINE GUN BATTERY MOUNTED ON LIGHT CAR
MAKES RECORD RUN

Now that we have actually entered Mexico with our military forces, we may have an opportunity to observe at close range the usefulness of the motor car in actual warfare, although the roads in Northern Mexico hardly are a fair test. It may be noted, however, that General Pershing, in command of the forces, crossed the border in an automobile. The following account of the work of a motor mounted machine gun battery at Plattsburg, N. Y., last summer will be of especial interest at this time; and California, as the greatest per capita auto State, should not lag behind in this class of equipment.

Attached to the automobile machine gun company at the Plattsburg camp last August was a chassis mounted with a Benet-Mercier machine gun, belonging to the Sand Hill Machine Gun Battery of North Carolina. The car was manned by three North Carolinians and did effective work in the maneuvers held there. It was found that this car was able to carry the gun, which weighs thirty pounds, two thousand rounds of ammunition, three men and their equipment, and travel at a satisfactory pace. In addition, the light car was able to negotiate rough places, move across plowed fields and swampy spots without danger of getting bogged, and on one occasion it pulled a big Delaunay-Beauville, attached to the outfit, out of the mud.

When the encampment broke up, the Sand Hill battery car started on a record run to New York to demonstrate how fast a machine gun, so mounted, with men, ammunition and equipment could be moved from one part of the country to another. For the sake of comparison, assume that this car represented a battery of eight guns, sixteen cars and forty-eight men stationed at Plattsburg, N. Y., and that the country had been invaded and the command ordered to move to New York City as rapidly as possible.

To move a regular army battery in which the guns are carried on mules would necessitate several freight cars, and would be a cumbersome thing to load. With the paralysis of the railroads that would occur in war time it is safe to assume that it would require thirty-six hours to move such a battery and very probably much longer.

But the Sand Hill Battery left Plattsburg at 10:30 a. m. Sunday morning, September 5th, and reached New York at 3:30 the next morning. The distance is roughly 340 miles. The speedometer of the car was out of order, so no record of the mileage could be kept. The elapsed time was 18 hours. An hour was taken out for supper at Albany, and three-quarters of an hour was lost at Poughkeepsie on a detour where a mistake in the roads was made. Fifteen minutes was taken out for luncheon at Schroom Lake on Sunday, so that counting time lost on other minor stops the actual running time was close to sixteen hours. The car was shipped to North Carolina by freight.

Machine gun batteries are essentially rural militia organizations, for their main drill requirements are easily accessible target ranges and opportunities to practice concealment of the guns, which is not possible in the cities. The nation is short of machine guns, and it is easy to see how batteries of the nature described, either independent or connected with existing militia organizations, on account of their great mobility could be of tremendous service in any scheme of national defense. Scattered over the East, South and Middle West they could rush to any given point ready for action much faster than the number of men and guns they carry could be rushed by train under war conditions.

The object of the association is to encourage the organization of automobile machine gun batteries throughout the country.

A WORD CIRCUIT

From posing I am not immune,
And yet—in words—I'm not insurgent.
Wherefore I seldom say "jejune,"
And never, never use "abstergent."
—N. Y. Tribune.

To posing we, perhaps, incline,

PARAMOUNT INTERRUPTER FOR FORDS

The Detroit Engineering Products Co., Detroit, Mich., has brought out the first of its new accessories for Ford cars, the Paramount interrupter for ignition. This ignition device does away with the vibrator which is fitted to the Ford.

The regular Ford commutator is first removed from the end of the camshaft and the bracket of the Paramount interrupter is attached to the front end of the crank-case at the end of the camshaft, a vertical shaft in the instrument itself being operated by the camshaft, to which the Ford commutator or timer is attached at the top of the apparatus, and can be advanced or retarded from the wheel, as at present. The vertical shaft runs at the same speed as the camshaft, which is one-half the speed of the crankshaft.

The Paramount interrupter is wired into the circuit between the coils and magneto, the regular vibrator of the car being rendered inoperative. No battery is required, the current from the Ford fly-wheel magneto being used.

KEYLESS MOTOR CAR LOCK

George Kehner, Savannah, Ga., has secured a patent on a keyless motor car lock, and the invention now is on the market. The invention is attached to the coil box of the car, the lever of the switch being replaced by a friction clutch. This clutch turns freely either way without moving the switch. To unlock the switch certain buttons are pressed on the dial. The clutch will turn the switch to magneto or battery as desired. Before leaving the car simply press the button in the center of the dial, and all electric connections with the motor are severed. The invention may be attached to any car, and may be moved in any direction without closing the electric connection between the source of electricity and the motor. Press certain buttons and the current is released and can be sent to the motor through the action of the switch lever from battery to magneto. To lock the car a disc in the center of the dial is turned. The combination on the lock can be changed easily as to number and location of the buttons.

THIS DIMMER IS COLLAPSIBLE AND CHEAP

A feature of the Clark dimmer is that it easily can be removed from the headlight and folded up small enough to place in the pocket or under the seat. The dimmer is manufactured and sold by the Cherry-Clark Guard & Dimmer Co., 115 South Dearborn street, Chicago, Ill., and Style No. 1, for lamps up to 9½ inches in diameter, lists at $2.50, while style No. 2, for larger lamps, lists at $2.75 per pair.

The design of the dimmer is such that it projects the light forward and sideways, due to the fact that when the searchlight rays from the parabolic reflector come in contact with the dimmer element they are diffused in all directions.

NISWANDER RIM REMOVER

The Niswander Mfg. Co., Quincy, Ill., has a demountable rim remover in which the contracting and expanding is done by a threaded hand wheel giving an even and steady pull and contracting the rim anywhere from 1 to 4 inches. The rim hooks, together with the braces, are so constructed that the harder the pull the tighter they grip the rim. The device sells for $3.

SHELBY GARAGE DOOR HOLDER

A garage door holder known as the Shelby is made by the Shelby Spring Hinge Co., Shelby, O., and is designed automatically to catch the door as it is swinging open and hold it firmly until released by a slight pull on the chain. It also will lock the door as it is closed, the spear head of the latch entering the strike on top of the door frame. It is made of wrought steel, and there are no springs or frail parts to get out of order or rust. All parts are heavily japanned, and installation is easy as well as the operation. They are sold at $18 a dozen.

SIGHT FEED OILER

The Perkins Mfg. Co., Des Moines, Ia., is marketing a sight-feed oiler for drivers of Ford cars. This oiler is designed to feed an adequate amount of oil every minute the engine runs. The speed of the engine determines the amount of oil fed. The connections to the bottom of the flywheel gives a substantial supply of oil.

TIRE PRESSURE WARNING DEVICE

C. E. Johnson, Grand Rapids, Mich., has invented a simple device designed to be attached to the standard valve stem of any pneumatic tire and automatically to warn the car driver when the air pressure in the tire falls 15 pounds below the initial pressure. The warning is in the form of a whistle and at every further reduction of three pounds the whistle sounds. It is not a continual whistle that is given, but only of sufficient duration to be heard by the driver.

WILLSON RESILIENT RIM

F. R. Willson, Worthington, for many years engineer of the Jeffrey Mfg. Co., has invented a resilient rim for passenger cars and trucks. A company is being formed for the manufacture of the rims and the factory will be located in Columbus, O., according to the industrial bureau of the chamber of commerce, which has become interested. The invention consists simply of a resilient rim, which can be placed on the center and spoke portion of any wheel and embraces a series of steel coil springs, a number of which are in a radial position and a portion in a circumferential position. Those springs are in units, eight to the rim. The inner and outer rim consists of steel channels. On the outer rim is the solid rubber tire.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

IMPORTANT CHANGES URGED IN THE SEAMAN'S BILL.

San Francisco, along with other leading seaports of this country, will be glad to learn that a nation wide referendum on the suspension of certain provisions of the much discussed Seaman's act, is sweepingly recommended by the Chambers of Commerce of the United States. It was the twelfth referendum which has been taken by the national chamber with the purpose of ascertaining, for the benefit of Congress and the President, the business opinions prevailing throughout the country on questions of nation-wide importance. The largest number—311 commercial organizations—that ever participated in a national chamber referendum, covering 45 States, Hawaii, the Philippines, Porto Rico and Alaska. Through this referendum vote the committee recommended to Congress to suspend at once sections 4, 13 and 14 of the Seaman's act, which discriminates against American ships and American ports, and which are restrictive of American commerce until such times as by international agreement the requirements of these sections can become equally applicable to the shipping of all nations.

Section 4 has to do with the demand of half-pay at American ports by seamen on foreign ships; section 13 deals with the language test and the complement of able seamen; and fourteen refers to life saving appliances and the manning of life boats. All three received a practically unanimous vote. The committee recommended that the Seaman's act dealing with deserters should be repealed as to foreign vessels, and that the State Department should seek the arrest and imprisonment of seamen for desertion abolished by other nations. A heavy vote also carried this recommendation. The committee also recommended that Congress should be asked to request the President to withdraw at once the notices the United States has given regarding abrogation of treaties. This carried by a very heavy vote.

The fourth recommendation received the strongest opposition of the four, 57 against 809 in favor of the proposition that a Federal shipping board should be created. It was recommended that this board take over the staff and duties of the Bureau of Navigation and the Bureau of Steamboat Navigation, the two departmental bureaus which administer the laws regarding the American merchant marine, to proceed at once to revise existing laws, and to propose amendments which provide comprehensively and adequately for the comfort and welfare of crews manning and all other matters relating to our merchant marine, especially the design and construction of vessels with regard to safety.

President Wilson: "Now, gentlemen, perhaps we can come to some understanding."

HOLDING DOWN THE IRREPRESSIBLE JITNEY.

The jitney continues to be a serious danger confronting the United Railroads Company, according to President Jesse W. Lienthal. True, numbers of competing jitney drivers drop out of the game weekly on account of the keen competition, but other adventurers think they can squeeze out a profit and jump into the procession to take a chance. It may surprise the public to learn that there are more jitneys operating on the street to-day than ever before. This means that an increased stream of nickels is being diverted from the cash boxes of the United Railroads and the Municipal car lines. Argument is made that this is a free country, and the streets are open to all; ergo, the jitneys have the same right to operate on them that the street cars have. An examination of the situation discloses that the jitneys are enjoying far better privileges and more profitable fields than do the regular street electric cars. Street car companies cannot use the streets till they have obtained the proper franchises and agreed to make such payments on the privilege as a board of supervisors may exact. The jitney escapes this burden. The railroad must pay the State five and one-half per cent of every fare taken. The jitney avoids this toll. The State Railroad Commission makes all manner of regulations regarding the local street electric lines. The expert jitneys dodge all such restrictions. The railroads are held responsible for the condition of the roadway adjacent to their tracks; the jitneys are not called upon for any such repairs on streets. The railroads are restricted to definite routes, while the jitney at any time can shift its route in any direction that points a more profitable way; on big popular outing days they can thereby cut heavily into the special receipts of the car lines. In this respect they are an exceedingly mobile arm of transportation and active and determined competitors. Numbers of local improvement clubs and commercial organizations have recently united in petitioning the Board of Supervisors to place the jitney under somewhat similar restrictions as those now imposed on the United Railroads Company, so as to equalize in a measure the handicap of the latter. Public sentiment is shifting in this direction of late, as indicated in Oakland, where the jitneys have been ruled off all congested streets. The indications are that a somewhat similar policy will be inaugurated in this city.

—Unmarried women are coming into their own in the way of compensations. A New York bachelor has just bequeathed $1,000,000 to build a rent free apartment house as a home for them.

Conditions are so shaping themselves, through the European war THREATENED R. R. STRIKE and the punitive expedition into FACES A HIGH HURDLE. Mexico primarily, in a way that will in all likelihood prevent the threatened big strike of the organized 300,000 railroad employees for a "basic eight hour day," a strike that would stop the machinery of business both in this country and Canada. Their demands for higher wages amount to $100,000,000 annually, an increase of 25 per cent over the payroll of 1914, when a total of $400,000,000 was reached. These led unionists would prefer to strike, but it is now being duly impressed upon them by the daily papers and by business men that any direct action along strike lines, under the present uncertain conditions threatening this country, would appear an act of disloyalty to the Federal government, and thereby arouse the animosity of the public at large. No strike has a chance of success unless the sympathy of the public is behind the movement. United labor recognizes this fact as a truism. In this new light, the employees are beginning to show signs of making concessions; whether this is to bridge time to a later and more favorable time is a bye-question: the point is that there is a fair chance that the strike will be postponed indefinitely.

Among the business men of the country the feeling generally expressed is that a strong effort should be made to prevent the strike through the Erdman-Newlands Act, passed by Congress, which provides that neither the railroad companies nor the unions shall initiate any action leading to a blockage of railroad traffic in this country. Such action bears most heavily on the public at large, and these two economic branches have no right to bring distress and great inconvenience to cities—for instance, by cutting off food supplies, necessary passenger traffic and the like. Four years ago the Erdman-Newlands act succeeded in preventing a threatened big railroad strike of the enginemen on the railroads east of the Mississippi River in an increase of wages estimated at some 18 per cent. A deadlock between the employees and the railroad managements, and a two hour notice of the strike given, when the Federal officials intervened with the clauses of the Erdman act. The strike leader of the engineers was ultimately forced by his own followers to recede from his demands, and an arbitration board settled the dispute satisfactorily several months later.

In the present case there is a likelihood that the railroadmen would receive some concessions to their present demands provided they were submitted to an arbitration board. Those demands now seek too much, and the men are skirmishing less for fewer hours than for higher wages. The "basic eight hour day" they demand is impractical in railroad freight train service, as most of the men admit. A basic eight hour day means simply that, after an employee has worked eight hours, he shall be paid overtime at the rate of time and one-half. That implies an increase of wages wherever the basic work day is now more than eight hours, so the demands of the employees would furnish the opportunity to work as many hours as one liked over eight hours, and collect the increased pay on the extra time employed. The main objection by railroad managements is that by this "basic eight hour day," wages on the pay rolls will be increased by an estimated $100,000,000 a year. Necessarily, they will demand that the Interstate Commerce Commission shall allow them to increase their passenger and freight rates to meet this huge increase in wage expenditures. If this demand is granted, and it is the only practical way the railroad management can meet the increased pay roll, the $100,000,000 must eventually come out of the pockets of the general public. This is the ultimate result of practically every strike in this country, and is a large factor in the present high cost of living.

"NEAR" PREPAREDNESS ADOPTED BY CONGRESS.

"Near federalization" is the best that Congress has been able to do in the proposition to transform the militia into an elastic form for united national service. This means a wide and unbridgable gap in the plans of those demanding stable preparedness. According to the House committee's report: "Much has been said by well meaning but superficial persons about 48 little armies, commanded by 48 different Generals, and trained in 48 different ways. Even a superficial study of the Constitution would have convinced any unprejudiced person that Congress has the power to discipline, train, organize and arm the militia of the entire country with uniformity." On the showing so far made, it is strikingly evident that the two Congressional committees do not contemplate adopting the idea of complete federalization. The reason is as fundamental as State rights, and impinges on what many citizens believe to be inalienable individual right under a democracy.

As the proposition now stands, Congress may spend whatever money it cares to set aside for the training, arming and paying the militia in California under the Washington legislation so far developed, but the man in the Governor's chair in this State will continue to dominate the military situation within its borders, and to appoint and command the officers, subject of course to the State's forms covering the situation. The regiments will continue to be recognized as an arm of this State in the face of the preparedness bills so far adopted by Congress. As usual, the militia will continue to be prepared to answer all calls from the Governor in case of riot, disorder and Fourth of July parades. A thin filament of federalization in case of national extremity is over the States, but is of no practical service in case of dire necessity. However, these bills are still in their formative condition and are amenable to searching criticism. There are, of course, many features that will manifestly strengthen the nation's position from a military point of view. Two propositions are on file regarding the number of men mustered to join the regular army on a peace basis: the Senate's proposition calls for 180,000 men and the House bill calls for 140,000. Very likely a compromise will be made on 160,000 men, on a peace basis, of course. To the superficial, this force of trained soldiers may seem extremely costly to the nation at large on account of the high cost of living and wages in this country, but it seems clear to those in touch with the arguments covering this debate that the Senate recognized that a proper substitute in the shape of a larger standing army of at least 178,000 men should constitute its basis for the ideal federalized militia which went a-glimmering. So far this piece of legislation has been a matter of compromise between the two vehement and insistent parties of Peace and Preparedness. The work already completed on the bills indicates the stubborn contest still prevailing between the two parties, and gives a fair idea of which way the Congressional wind is blowing.

—The trial of the Rev. Slaughter at Oroville is unique in several particulars. Perhaps the most striking feature in the testimony adduced during the trial is the extraordinary position taken by Mrs. Lamson, the mother of the girl who makes the grave charges against her pastor. A mother invariably rushes violently to the defense of a daughter in a case of this kind, and makes every effort to comfort and defend her. In the present instance, both the mother and the father declare that the girl is lying against the minister. It is practically certain that the mother, the stronger character, has induced him to take this position. Both parents are reported to have said that they will cast off their daughter. This abnormal position taken by the mother denounces her as subject for investigation.

—Now that aspiring San Francisco has caught its stride as a dyed-in-the-wool and a really-truly neophyte of Art in its highest conception it becomes disgustingly canaille for kickers in our midst to oppose the transplanting of the statue of Hall McAllister, the well known pioneer attorney, from his old base in the shadow of the Hall of Records into the untaxed sunlight that plays in front of our new City Hall. That miscast motif of McAllister never did take proper root in the original planting; why not give the slab a chance in its proposed new position? Symphony, synchronism, perspective, mortuary statistics and agricultural reports all unite in the showing that within a few feet of the entrance to the new City Hall is the logical position for the last resting place of the nightmare of the knock-brained Phidias that materialized this misconception. By all the rules of technicalities, delays and appeals, what is more natural than that the effigy of a lawyer should stand at the main entrance of our City Hall and hold up the throngs both coming and going? Aside from this, the present statue is in perfect harmony with the rest of the animal life that dwell in the arboreal fastnesses in the square, that is being reared to provide work for the gardeners' union. Any student who has taken a superficial summer session art course at the University will readily recognize the harmonious and striking resemblance of the noble phiz surmounting the torso of McAllister with the almost human looks of the mugs that deface the bison, the grizzly bears, the pterodactyls, mylodons and dinotheriums so industriously ornamenting the surrounding grounds. It would be a crime against aesthetics not to place the statue among such monstrosities. The city must provide a burying ground for most of its statuary somewhere, and it might as well block the entrance to the new Civic Center, which was evidently planned for that purpose.

—The raging Demon of War is incontinently loosing his yelping dogs of destruction on the hitherto pastoral northern cities of Seattle and Astoria, cities that were supposed to be languishing in the lap of dear old Mother Dry, who took up her residence there at the last election. The bitter invectives and vituperative expletives now being exchanged between those two chaste and habitually retiring cities arises from the recent suggestion of the Naval Department at Washington that a naval base should be planted somewhere on the northwest coast. As only one site will be selected, the battle is waging over the question whether it shall be at Astoria, "the logical strategic center at the mouth of the Columbia River," or at Seattle, "the guardian at the gate of a western empire?" Not even the Ford party "shooing" before them a flock of Peace doves could salve this bitter strife. Liver plasters cannot extract the spleen nor a stomach pump the virus. As the hot air combat stands, the intrepid hosts are approaching each other with suicidal nonchalance and with equal assinnity bray defiance. For the love of Mike let no one restrain them. See the newspaper bulletin boards this evening for list of casualties.

—The public generally will be greatly saddened to learn that Rosika Schwimmer has resigned. It requires great fortitude to resign from the Ford peace board when the treasury is packed with a million dollars impatient to be disbursed. Mme. Rosika Schwimmer put the Ford peace party on the map and she bossed it up to the time when the temperamental schism split the party into several parts during the Stockholm period. Since then Rosika has been plentifully beplastered with all kinds of charges by those who resented her power in the organization. She was dubbed "Mrs. Jonah," and every effort was made to get her goat, her number and her Blavatsky aura. She was pried loose from her august position as counselor, chief peace elector, grand commander and keeper of the key of the treasury by charging her of being the secret emissary of the German Emperor. Fancy! Every American citizen acquainted with Emperor William knows that he would rather publish his peace proposals in the London Times at regular advertising rates than tie up diplomatically or in secret service with a woman dubbed "Mrs. Jonah." Now that the Ford party has lost its greatest publicity agent and sapient counselor, there is nothing for the members to do but tie up their craft in the sluggish waters of Salt River.

—Pancho Villa is a villain deserving the noose end of the rope, but having hurdled the stunt of "watchful waiting," he is just now unconsciously doing the United States an unusually practical benefit, and that is trying out our army and commissariat in a way to demonstrate its superficial weaknesses. In the pursuit of this rascal it has already been demonstrated that the army's wireless is a makeshift as compared with the results and elasticity developed by the European belligerents. The commissariat has badly broken down in a number of stiff traveling places, according to report. Such breakdowns in the nasty places are, of course, of vital consequence, and would prove disastrous if taken advantage of by a vigilant and vigorous enemy. One of the most serious upsets reported is that of the aeroplanes, which are damned by the aviators as being out of date and dangerous to their drivers on account of their low horsepower and uselessness in high flights. Some of the aviators declare that it is as much as a man's life is worth to make an ascent in them. These delinquencies seem to be the three leaders in the grilling pursuit now going on by our troops in efforts to round up the notorious bandit. Of course, our troops have other troubles. This is cheap experience as compared with the war with Spain, when "enbalméd beef," rotten contract supplies and rotten holes in the service developed as rapidly as the days. Rotten things happened in those days that might have proved disastrous had a first class military power confronted us. Preparedness is a great thing, but experience seems to show that in most cases it requires at least a year for a national army to find its gait and form.

—Has Lillian Russell lost the bloom of her beauty and found a new limit to her embonpoint? The fair Lillian is the country's sole beauty, and the ordinary boulevardier finds it difficult to imagine her as anything else. This transient shock regarding her bloom is occasioned by the suspicion that she is resorting to the spotlight press agent. A letter from the East is to the effect that our Lillian is ambitious to be a candidate for Mayor of Pittsburg on a child's welfare platform. Those who recall the marathon list of marriages of the fair Lillian, beginning with the orchestra leader Solomon, will remember that her mother, Cynthia Leonard, ran for Mayor of New York in 1888. At that time Mrs. Leonard's husband controlled a local newspaper that helped her pyrotechnically in her contest. By providential grace, Lillian's present husband controls a newspaper that may be of very material influence in advancing her fortune and reputation in politics. With Lillian Russell as Mayor of Pittsburg, Harry Thaw as chairman of the film board of censors, Andrew Carnegie as treasurer, and Charles Schwab as nerve inspector at the City Hall, Pittsburg would attract streaks of political limelight that would rival Washington.

Torpedoing Constantinople From a Submarine

Making history in a submarine seems as fascinating as it is perilous. A young English sailor of Turkish extraction sets forth in a recent letter to his mother numbers of extraordinary adventures on board the British submarine E-11, the first vessel of that character to bombard a place on shore. The narrator was compelled to serve in the Turkish army, and was twice captured by the British.

Revealing the fact that his sympathies were with the Allies, and also that his knowledge of Turkish waters would be of value to his captors, he was accepted as pilot of the submarine, and served aboard the vessel in that capacity for twenty-four days in operations in the Sea of Marmora and beyond.

He has no love for the interior of a submarine. Taken at its best, he declares, "the submarine is a sneak," and he does not believe that the most ardent naval commander calls it any better name down in the depths of his heart.

"If any one wishes to know how terribly difficult it is to operate a submarine boat while she is cruising under water all he has to do is to spread a map upon the ceiling, and, sitting on a chair, holding a mirror in his hand, let him try to study that map. It is telling on the nerves, especially on the nerves of those responsible for her when she is running under water. While running submerged the atmosphere is fearfully awe-striking. When a submarine is running on the surface it usually uses its oil-burning engines, but once under water it starts its electric motors. The steady, grilling noise of these motors and the peculiar vibration produced through the gliding of the body of the boat through the under-water makes the uninitiated shiver with cold chills. Naturally the steering of the ship is done by chart and compass, so you can hardly tell where you are going. The air is bad, and as it gets hot it becomes foul. You lose all ambition and would feel like crying: "I would give my life for a bed."

"When our submarine suddenly submerged after a steamer had been sighted, our commander ordered every one to be silent and in a second deathly stillness reigned in the already quiet boat. I noticed that our commander was listening. Unconsciously every one in the boat followed the mental attitude of our leader. We all listened. Like the sounds of the submarine bells, so the propeller of the steamer about two or three hundred feet above made its steady splash in the water heard in our boat. To me it sounded like the noise one hears in approaching a water-power mill. Then it became apparent that we had already passed our victim and were about a mile ahead of her toward the west.

"We opened our water-ballast tanks, and in a second all motors were pumping out water. As the water-ballast tanks became empty we steadily rose to the surface, and when we fairly reached the top of the sea sun-rays entered the interior of our boat through the large glass trap-door next to the observation platform. At last, when we came out to the surface, we observed the Turkish steamer, which we had been chasing during the last four or five hours, between us and the northern shores of the Sea of Marmora.

"No sooner had our victim seen us come out of the water than she began to turn back toward Rodosto. But as she made this attempt she exposed her entire length and became an easy target for our torpedo-attack. We had already directed our torpedo toward her bow some few yards ahead of her course, and in exactly 1 minute and 20 seconds—as our commander told us—it reached her. Besides troops, she must have been carrying munitions, because a few minutes after our torpedo had taken effect and the Turkish steamer began to go down slowly, there occurred a terrific explosion on board the sinking ship.

"After being led astray three separate times, the E-11 started again for the harbor of Constantinople, and this time met no tempting convoy of transports or supply-ships to persuade her from her course.

"On May 29th we submerged to the very bottom of the sea, at least I thought so, as our boat that night did not have any of its usual motion. Early the next morning we raised far enough to stick out our periscope a little, but she was still under water.

Our commander was the only person on that boat who did any seeing. The rest of us did not know where we were.

"When we came out of the water on that spot I thought we were in the harbor of a friendly nation. Everywhere around us there were steamers, and we could see with our naked eyes people on various quays moving about. Our boat ran full speed toward a supply-ship that was lying alongside the arsenal pier. On the north side of the arsenal pier lay the old Hamidian yacht which had recently been converted into a training ship.

"As soon as we had launched our torpedoes, we opened fire with our gun and commenced to bombard the arsenal itself. The commotion and confusion can hardly be imagined. While we were firing we were steadily withdrawing toward the sea. When we were about one and a half miles from the arsenal pier we heard a roaring explosion. Some of our gun-shots must have ignited the munition boxes that were piled high on the pier. The explosion was so terrific that at that distance our boat rocked as though one of our munition boxes in the boat had exploded. Other explosions followed, and the next moment the old Hamidian yacht was covered with flames.

"I cannot tell the extent of our destruction to the Turkish shipping in the harbor of Constantinople, but we made things lively, and the whole affair continued just twenty-one minutes. Then a shot fell within fifteen yards of our boat. The Turkish gunners were on the job. Order was given, and as we submerged we spouted lots of steam and oil to convey the idea to the Turks that we were sunk."

This shrewd trick came near being borne out in verity by the succeeding events, for the E-11, sighting smoke in the distance and fearing retribution in the shape of a torpedo-boat, found herself, on attempting to escape this fancied peril, caught in a dangerous net of her own weaving. She came within an ace of meeting with a bit of poetic justice which would have precluded our ever reading the following tale:

"Our propeller was working as usual, but we were not going. We forced electric lights through our glass trap-doors on top of our boat, and then by the help of our periscope we discovered that we were caught in the network of the masts of one of the sailing ships we had sunk some few days before. It was difficult to learn to what extent we had entangled ourselves among the cross ropes of the ship below us. Finally it was decided that one of the officers don his diving suit and leave the boat through one of the torpedo port holes in the stern of the boat and find what ailed us on the outside.

"So, instead of releasing the torpedo into the water, we withdrew it from its bed, and, still keeping the outer hole closed, we put the third lieutenant-commander in the space just vacated. Then, after having closed the inner door, we opened the outer end of the torpedo-bed as though we were going to shoot out a torpedo, and then we shot him into the water. It was a perilous job, for if he had found out that we could not release us from our tangle he could not return to the boat, as we could not open our hatches unless he had risen to the surface of the water. The lieutenant, Guy d'Oyly Hughes, had taken along with him a small steel saw, a service revolver, and a dozen sticks of dynamite.

"In ten minutes he had cut the ropes that had entangled our propeller and pounded on the shell of our boat twice, which was an agreed signal to reverse motors and pull back. In another five minutes we were out of the water, our heroic third lieutenant clinging to the torpedo-hole, just above the propeller.

"The reception we got in the harbor was great. The whole fleet and everything manned the rails and cheered us madly. Just imagine us—all dirty and unshaven, the flag with bullet-holes all over it, and conning-tower all dents from bullets and rusty—steaming through the lines, and thousands of men cheering like mad. Battle-ships, cruisers, torpedo-boats, transports and the captains leading the cheers.

"It was great. I have heard cheers before, but this was the real thing. Poor old Cochrane's eyes were full of tears as he saluted to cries of 'Are we downhearted?' and 'Well done, E-11.' At present I am resting on land and basking in the light of popular favor. It is very nice to be a hero among one's own cloth, you know, because they really mean it, and they really understand."

Dr. Byron Haines, Dentist, has resumed practice at his office in Gunst Building, S. W. corner Geary and Powell streets.

Miss Sears and Red Corpuscles.

Miss Eleonora Sears, hands in slashed pockets of sports coat or riding breeches, head high with the joy of living, and feet ever ready to go where the whistle of the sportsman calls, has brought what H. G. Wells would undoubtedly call the "equestrian" touch to life at Hillsborough. To ride a horse acceptably, even to be a superlative horseman, would not put one into the equestrian class—indeed, there are those who do not ride at all who go through life as equestrians—always doing the thoroughbred thing.

"Bobbie" Sears, as her friends call her, has never lived the "mere" life of the society girl. She has always managed to put a dash and a daring, a colorful quality into everything that she does which lifts it out of the category of the commonplace. There are plenty of girls who go in for sports and yet have no valid claim to any of the distinction which always envelops the personality of this young woman. Item: She has always enough eligible suitors in her train to commend her to the attention of all students of cardiac fluctuations. Most young girls who decide to cut themselves after her pattern follow the dotted lines so carefully that they lose sight of the other markings, and the result is a garment for an amateur male!

That is just what "Bobbie" Sears escapes. She is always the girl doing things in a delightful boyish manner, but there is always the Rosalind behind the doublet and hose, always the eternal girl element, never the amateur and unsuccessful male. Her first visits here bred a crop of affectations that were of the spurious male sort, but the girls who adopted them soon realized that their popularity was on the wane instead of the increase, and now there is no danger of that kind of thing breaking out in Blingum.

But what will happen is a general inventory among the women of all their lazy habits and a consequent reform that will put them into the fit and fine class. The wag who warned the world "that early to bed and early to rise, and you'll never meet any prominent people," need not sound his philosophy in these parts, for Blingum knows that the pursuit of fitness may involve early morning exercise now and then, but it does not demand excessive fidelity to early hours at both ends of the day.

However, it does mean putting some punch into whatever one does, instead of going at things with enthusiasm faint with white corpuscles. As a pacer for doing things in the red corpuscle way, "Bobbie" Sears is without peer, and one may expect to see the blase manner peel off most of that set during her stay.

Clark Relines His Wallet.

Rumor has it that Charles Clark has cleaned up a plethoric purse in stocks, and the Clarks are listed among those who will entertain lavishly during the summer. With Miss Sears as their house guest, there will be added incentive to get rid of some of the recently acquired shekels. Senator Clark gives each of his sons an allowance befitting the princes of the house of a copper king, but even magnificent allowances sometimes have to be stretched to meet both ends of extravagant desire, and when one of his sons oversteps his allowance, Father Clark can be very stern in his refusals to loosen the strings on his money bags.

One of these periodic retrenchments hit the Charles Clarks some time ago, and their dictionary was abridged to omit the word splurge. But just before stocks began to aviate, Clark with a number of others in that set got aboard the flying machine, made a few corkscrews and spirals and a neat landing.

Feelings Sprained at Hunt Breakfasts.

The Beagle Hunt Breakfasts are giving indigestion to some of the members of the club. There are several hundred members, and of course no one host has included all the members in the invitation list to breakfast. As a result, the uninvited practice the don't-give-a-care expression assiduously when the breakfasters happen to mention that they are going to So-and-So's, but in spite of much dramatic ability, it is very evident that there is some feeling, and that the left-outs are losing their enthusiasm for the noble sport of beagling.

There was some talk, at first, of having breakfasts at the club, but the Carolans and the Kohls, the Templeton Crockers and the Charles Clarks, immediately sent out invitations for breakfasts, and others have announced their intention of doing likewise, so that several Sundays to come are dedicated to the service of hot rolls and little suckling pigs, squabs, waffles and the ubiquitous coffee.

Society Balancing on Ice Skates.

Mrs. Fred McNear, Mrs. Gene Murphy, Mrs. Templeton Crocker, and a number of other young matrons have assiduously practiced skating on the ice in one of the down-town cafes during the morning hour, when the instructors are free to tutor a few favorite pupils. As a result, they have become fairly adept, and when the pavilion opens, they will not have to fumble in line with the others who were born the sunny side of the great snow belt. Mrs. Walter Martin was so interested in becoming expert on ice skates that she hesitated about joining the Jackling yachting party because it meant an interruption in skating lessons that would give the others an advantage over her that she could not hope to overcome this season. Which gives one some idea of the vehemence with which this group attacks a new thing.

Dorothy Churchill Engaged.

The engagement of Miss Dorothy Churchill and the young man who manages her father's ranch at Napa came as a complete surprise to her friends in San Francisco, where she has spent the winter season and has taken part in all the frivolings of the younger set. Her fiance has been in town so little that his rivals here had no idea of how strong an adversary they had for the favors of this fascinating young lady.

Miss Churchill was the Commere at the recent Fashion Show, and introduced the models of beauty with all the charm and challenge of a professional, playing her part with the utmost gayety and winsomeness. She made a tremendous hit, and the society set that goes in for amateur theatricals realized that here was new and unusual talent to add to the play-acting contingent.

Miss Churchill made her debut a season or two ago, after several years spent in Europe, where she had her voice trained under the best masters. Her father is one of the rich men of the northern part of the State, and her mother a great beauty, who looks more like the sister than the mother of this engaged girl. The wedding date is not set, but it will be an event of the summer.

Mrs. Will Crocker, Impresario of Onions and Orchids.

Plans for an open air market in Union Square Park have now assumed definite enough shape to pique the interest of those who see the picturesque possibilities of such an affair. Painters have always found inspiration in the market of Europe and the Orient, and here we have the setting for as picturesque an open air market as ever delighted an eye that responds to color. Mrs. Will Crocker is the chairman of the committee that has the affair in charge, and the proceeds are to go to the Belgium Relief Commission.

Poultry, fish, fruit, vegetables, meat, everything from an oyster to a side of beef, from a green onion to an orchid, will be displayed in the most picturesque way that the patronesses in charge of the booths can invent. Mullgardt is designing the booths themselves, which assures the beauty of the scene. Mrs. Templeton Crocker is an enthusiast who has deferred her trip to Honolulu in order to take charge of one of the booths. Belgian peasant costumes will be worn by all those acting as market women for the day. The produce will, for the most part, be donated by the owners of the estates down the peninsula way, where succulent vegetables, prize poultry, fruit and flowers are brought to a standard of perfection regardless of the cost of production.

The idea of a market of this kind has been boiling over the brim of the imagination for some time, but the group interested felt that Mrs. Will Crocker was the only woman who could successfully engineer such a feat, and it was not until she would consent to undertake it that the project shed the upper part of the interrogation point and proudly wears the period. Some of the women who will assume charge of booths have already completed their plans, for the day chosen is Saturday, April 8th, which is just around the corner. Mrs. Fred Kohl, Mrs. Clarence Smith, Mrs. Charles Clark, Mrs. Templeton Crocker, Miss Genevieve King and several others have devised unique and beautiful ways of displaying their wares, which are bound to tempt the most hardened purchaser to buy lavishly.

Society to Keep Boys on Outing Farm.

Women from society and club circles have joined their efforts with those whose sole object is artistic attainment to insure the success of California's second Wild Flower Fete. The festival will be held at the Fairmont Hotel for three days, commencing Saturday, April 22d, for the benefit of the San Francisco Boys' Outing Farm at Saratoga. Among the patronesses are: Mesdames James Rolph, Jr., Prentiss Cobb Hale, Homer King, A. W. Scott, Austin Sperry, Hugo Mansfield, Frederick H. Colburn, D. J. McMaster, Manfred Heynemann, J. C. Hawver, Leonard Stocking, Minnie Sabin Cooper, Franklin T. Griffin, Harry Palmer; Misses Ina Coolbrith, Alice Eastwood.

A large number of parties were given at the Hotel Oakland last Tuesday, following the Fashion Show and Dansant for the benefit of the Ladies' Relief Society. A few of the hosts and hostesses were: Mr. and Mrs. Edward Lacy Brayton, Mr. and Mrs. Granville Abbott, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Gillman, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Williamson, Mrs. Wm. Griffith Henshaw, Mr. and Mrs. Percy Murdock, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Pierce Johnson, Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Rau, Mrs. Lillian Brown Everts, Mrs. Louis Ghirardelli, Mr. and Mrs. W. Letts Oliver, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Proctor, Mrs. Wm. de Frmery, Mrs. Wm. Ede, and Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Noyes.

Mrs. J. D. Sproule and her daughter, Marian, have returned from Coronado, and have taken apartments at the Hotel Oakland.

The Indoor Yacht Club has unanimously elected Mrs. Alma de Brettville Spreckels to an honorary life membership as the only woman member of that organization. The election was based on the club's "cardinal principle, devotion to the greatest of all work, charity, wherein Mrs. A. B. Spreckels has distinguished herself as a woman of broad understanding and kindness towards her sisters and fellows, and whereas she has just completed a tremendous undertaking wherein she impressed her goodness, humanity and capabilities in a most admirable manner." The work refers chiefly to the intense interest that Mrs. Spreckels has contributed in assisting war sufferers in France and Belgium.

PERSONAL ADVENTURES IN STAGELAND THIS WEEK

BY HENRY McDONALD SPENCER

The Orpheum Programme Upside Down

Humiliating as it may be to make this confession, and knowing full well that whatever I say may be used against me in the future, nevertheless I am constrained to state that at times I feel the Vaudeville managers know more about their own business than I do; although, to be sure, I venture to tell them from week to week what acts are good, what are bad, and how improvements might be made. There may be a certain amount of mock humility in the confession, yet is out of my system anyway, and cannot be recalled. The cause of all this is Ed. Morton—yes, just Ed. Morton, who is billed on this week's Orpheum programme with "Songs as You Like to Hear Them Sung." To me, Ed has nothing; and yet he got three recalls at the Monday matinee, more than any one on the bill, and it is not a bad bill at that. He has a thin voice, lacking in quality; is not funny, romantic nor pathetic; has neither the vis comica, nor the air of mystere; he looks like an ex-cop, and gesticulates with the easy grace of a village constable flagging a flivver. It may seem unfair to Ed to pick on him like this, and I do not do it to be mean, unkind or smart at some one else's expense; and, as his turn is unassuming, it might be passed up with a word or two if I did not like it. But it cannot hurt him, as he is the favorite of the week (a pat to offset the scratch), and I merely use his case as a text to show how monstrously mistaken I can be.

When the curtain rolls up on Stone and Hayes in "Green Goods," your heart gives an extra throb, for the dear old punk Zone is suggested. Marion Hayes as the girl in charge of a walking-stick booth, trims Arthur Stone as the boob of the act. It seems to me that they might have made more of the comedy stuff—but there I go again telling other people their business. Friend Ed then comes on, and, believe me, the audience keeps him long enough to give Harry Green & Co., the holdover, plenty of time to dress their act, which is next. Warren and Conley, in a set suggesting "Green Goods," have a lot of fun playing around the Boardwalk. Then there are the Sultanas, with good voices and a sumptuously mounted stage. Clark and Verdi are old favorites in their wop stuff, although I cannot understand how two Italians would talk broken English to each other; they would talk straight Italian—one of them should have been an Irishman or a Swede.

I have turned the programme upside down this time and reserve the best for the last. Desiree Lubowska—lovely name, "Desiree"—is an illustration of the truth of Oscar Wilde's epigram to the effect that nature imitates art, for she was invented by Aubrey Beardsley thirty years ago—he was the first of the so-called decadent school of English art. He conventionalized the lines of the human figure, and was the originator of that type in black and white with the small, cruel face and extremely long, tubercular lines—the original slate pencil and then some. Well, Desiree—I like to call her Desiree—closes the plastic show with some weird and wonderful dancing and posturing. She has two active young lady assistants, but to her they are as the stars when the moon doth arise.

Au Revoir to the Lytell-Vaughan Co.

It is with a feeling of sincere regret, slightly tinged with sorrow, that I record the last performance of the Lytell-Vaughan players at the Alcazar for some time to come. They have been improving with each performance of late, and when Evelyn goes so far as to sacrifice her modern type of pulchritude and make up as an extremely unattractive slavey, I have hopes for their artistic conscience. "A Full House" is not a poker play, but is literally true on both sides of the foote, and is so funny that the Lady Who Sits Next to Me laughed so much and was put into such a good humor by the excellent fooling of the farce, that she actually omitted to call me down when I went out between the acts.

Last week was Bert Lytell's, but this week's performance just as surely belonged to Miss Vaughan, who omitted no "word nor deed"—to paraphrase a great writer's expression—to represent truly the awkward Swede servant girl who had but one idea in life—to get back to Sioux City. What matter that Bert Lytell was a little too gentlemanly for a second story worker—or at least any second-story workers that I have known; or that Ethelbert D. Hales played Parker, the English butler, or rather second man, judging from his costume—a little too unctuously, too much like my friend Harry Leon Wilson's "Ruggles;" it all went on an unroarious evening. As Otilie, the bride of a day, Jane Darwell had a good part and did it full justice, being properly excited and bridish, but not too fulsome in her apprehension over husband's absence. Restraint, that is the thing—always the impression that you could do a little more. That nice young couple, Mae Thorne and Phillips Tead, made acceptable foils for the husband, George Howell (Alexis Luce), and Jane Darwell. Also there were some real cops with just the right touch of exaggeration. As this is in the nature of a little send-off for the players—don't fail to see them before they go—full justice to the play has not been done, although you can imagine my opinion on reading the opening paragraph. I can only add that it absolutely maintained the Greek form; the unities of time, place and theme were scrupulously preserved; in fact, all of the supposed action could have taken place in the time spent at the performance.

Pantages Stage Festooned with Girls

It is sex o'clock this week at Pantages, and the stage is festooned with an assortment of hand-picked actorettes of all sizes, shapes and varying degrees of pulchritude. Athena is the leader, or co-leader, according to the billing—you will remember Athena in the Streets of Cairo at the late Fair. Well, Athena is there, but with rather more clothes on than she wore in public last year—perhaps it is colder at Pantages than it was in the Turkish attraction. Athena is as painstaking as ever, and for her engagement here has added a strong woman or lion jaw act; she picks up a chair with her teeth and swings it around her head. However, even without that, the fair Egyptian gives a very interesting performance and has clothes enough—off—to satisfy the most satyristic. Will J. Ward takes along five girls in his musical melange, while six others appear in "The Bachelor's Sweetheart," with Wm. Brandell as the lead. Maidie de Long is welcomed back in her English characterizations; or rather she is an English comedienne doing such essentially American impersonations as "The Office Boy," a "Baseball Bug," and a Swedish slavey from Minnesota. By the way, English stuff peeps out in this last billing as we have no "slaveys" in this land of the independent—only indifferent "help." A wire act and the usual song and dance in one make up the bill along with the movies.

Frederick Jacobi and the Symphony

BY BETTY

It is certainly with regret that we realize that the coming two concerts are to be the last of this season's symphony with no assurance as to what the outcome of the matter may be with the expiration of the five years' guarantee. However, we feel sure that some arrangement must continue the good work Mr. Hadley started and Conductor Hertz has sent along its way so splendidly.

There were but three numbers comprising the program of March 24th and 26th respectively, but therein lay the same variety and interest we have enjoyed the entire season. The first, Haydn's "G" Major, was played in a manner which showed an affection for the composition and an intelligent understanding of its import. Then we heard the "Pide Piper," a Symphonic poem from the pen of a local man. The composition is certainly an achievement, and bodes well for so young a composer. The manipulation of the themes showed an intimate acquaintance with the value of orchestral arrangement, and while I did not altogether agree with his conception and what certain themes might indicate, yet in the main the work is so very far above the attempts of young aspirants for the laurels in composition, that praise, unstinted, should be accorded. It was certainly refreshing to note Mr. Jacobi's innate modesty in receiving the ovation which met him when he finally came before us to bow his acknowledgment.

It was the final number, I must say, which warmed the cockles of my heart, and although Schubert's Symphony in "C" Major takes nearly an hour to perform, it was never wearisome, and left a desire after each movement, seemingly more charming than the last, that still another might follow.

The concerts of March 31st and April 2d will give Beethoven's "Eroica," the Overture from Schumann's "Genoveva," and for a closing number, "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks," Op. 28 of Richard Strauss.

Advance Notices

Symphony Music at Popular Prices.

The Peoples Philharmonic Orchestra, which has been successful in popularizing the works of the masters in San Francisco, announces a series of ten concerts, the first of which will take place next Thursday evening, April 6th. During the season, concerts will be given at intervals of two weeks, Thursday being the night, except for the second, when it will take place on Wednesday, the time being Holy Week. Nikolai Sokoloff, the talented young Russian who succeeds the late Herman Perlet as conductor of the orchestra of sixty-five picked instrumentalists, has made an excellent impression regarding his capabilities as a leader, and he promises many novelties during the course of the season. At each concert there will be a soloist of repute, Miss Marie Sloss, the pianist, being chosen for next Thursday night, when she will play Grieg's Concerto in A minor, a work she has played most successfully with several European orchestras. The principal symphonic number for the first concert will be Schubert's "Unfinished Symphony." Later in the series will be given the Symphony in B Minor by Chausson, a new composition; an unfinished Symphony in A minor by Borodine, the D Minor Symphony by Cesar Franck, the Symphony by Kalinnikow, the Fifth Symphony of Beethoven, the Fourth Symphony of Beethoven, the Fourth Symphony of Tschaiikowsky, and the D Major work of Brahms. One of the novelties will be "Fireworks," an ultra modern composition by Stravinski. Other numbers on the first program will be Wagner's Tannhauser Overture, the Rosen Kavalier Waltz of Richard Strauss, the Enchanted Lake by Laidow, the Ballet des Sylphes of Berlioz, and the March Hongroise by the same composer. Pavilion Rink, where the acoustics are excellent and the seating capacity is very large, has been chosen for these orchestral concerts, and the season sale, for which the price is five dollars for the ten concerts, is now progressing at Sherman, Clay &

Company's. On Monday morning, single tickets for the first concert will be ready, the price being fifty cents for reserved seats and twenty-five cents for general admission.

The Last Pair of S. F. Symphony Concerts.—The San Francisco Symphony Orchestra, Alfred Hertz, conductor, will give the last of the tenth pair of concerts of the current season at the Cort Theatre on Sunday afternoon, April 2d, at 2:30 o'clock.

The symphony will be the "Eroica" of Beethoven, and was written according to Anton Schindler, the close friend and biographer of Beethoven, for the purpose of doing homage to Napoleon, the hero of the day.

Interpreters innumerable have attempted to read the meaning of this baffling symphony, with its funeral march followed perplexingly by a gay scherzo and an energetic and jubilant finale. Berlioz found the scherzo and finale akin to the rites celebrated by Homer's warriors over a dead hero. Still another elucidation, in which the license of the interpreter is more than a little stretched, found the first movement to convey "a grand idea of Napoleon's determination and character."

The program will close with the "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks" of Richard Strauss, one of the most original and individual of composers. With a master of every technical resource of the modern orchestra, acquired by deep and patient study, Strauss has given us music of wholly new value and importance.

In "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks," Strauss makes, possibly, the greatest demand of all his works on an orchestra.

Marie Sloss, the brilliant pianiste, who will be the soloist at the first concert of the People's Philharmonic Orchestra at Pavilion Rink, next Thursday night.

As it will be played Sunday afternoon, "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks" is one of the most bizarre and amusing works in the repertoire of the orchestra.

Seats are on sale daily at the box offices of Sherman, Clay & Co., and Kohler & Chase, except on days of concerts, when after 1 p. m. on Friday and 10 a. m. on Sunday the tickets will be on sale at the box office of the Cort Theatre.

Orpheum.—The Orpheum program next week is particularly attractive. With almost every European opera house closed, many operatic celebrities who have heretofore turned deaf ears to the pleadings of American managers, have now consented to hearken to them. One of these luminaries is Signor Ciccolini, who is said to be one of the most remarkable tenors of the day. Melba, with whom he sang in concert for several seasons, wrote of him: "I consider Ciccolini the world's greatest tenor." Ciccolini came to this country without an idea of a professional engagement, but yielded to the lure of the "two a day." His repertoire is an extensive one, and he sings not only in Italian, but also in English and French. Willa Holt Wakefield will be heard in an entirely new repertoire of "Song Sayings." For several years she has been a favorite in vaudeville, and chiefly because of her radiant personality; She calls herself "The Lady of Optimism," because in her work there is invariably the desire to create happiness. George Howell, an actor of distinction, and a supporting company, will appear in Agnes Scott's rather different sketch, "The Red-Fox Trot," which furnishes a page of to-day's "Butterfly Life." Benny and Woods are two young musicians who excel respectively on the violin and piano. For the most part they confine their efforts to popular music, but their program also includes classical selections. Valentine and Bell call their offering "The Furniture Removers." This man and girl are bicyclists par-excellence. The name, "The Furniture Removers," of course, has a bearing on the act itself. The second of the series of the beautifully colored travelogues secured exclusively for the Orpheum Circuit, will be exhibited. Clark and Verdi, the Italian comedians, and Desiree Lubowska, the impressionistic character dancer, will be the only holdovers of this week's bill.

Strong Vaudeville Bill at Pantages.—"The Misery of a Hansom Cab," one of the few comedy classics in latter-day vaudeville, starring Al. Fields and his own company of funmakers, will head the new eight-act show which opens at the Pantages Theatre to-morrow (Sunday) afternoon. Fields and his old time partner, Lewis, year after year have been a comedy hit on every vaudeville program that they have appeared, with. A bevy of pretty, twinkling-footed, pink pajama maidens will be seen in a droll little "tab," featuring Miss "Tommy" Allen, a tom-boy comedienne, the title of the production being "Boarding School Girls." Fletcher Norton and Maude Earl, a twain of smart dancers, who have been associated with Jules Steger, Frank Daniels and other luminaries of the stage, are a feature of the new bill. Other acts will be presented by Flavilla, the original "white accordion dancing girl;" Reed and Woods, the "American basso and the Queen of Pianistes;" Morris Golden, the "yiddle on the fiddle fellow;" Cooke and Rothert, in a novelty acrobatic dancing act, and the third installment of "The Iron Claw," Pathe's mystery serial.

—A Belgian cripple stumped about Brussels declaring: "We gave those Germans a rare hiding before they got to Brussels." He was handed up before a stony-faced circle of German officers, who decreed: "You will be shot—unless you become a German." The cripple thought it over and was sworn in as German there and then. The chief German officer took him by the hands, saying: "You are a German now!" As he left, the cripple muttered: "Those Belgians gave us a rare hiding before we got to Brussels."—Tit-Bits.

—One day at Little Rock, where the Detroit team was playing an exhibition, old Red Donahue, who in his day was the sharpest-tongued man in baseball, was tossing them over and letting the Little Rock batters hit at will, to the great delight of the spectators. "Oh, Red, you're easy, easy, easy," shrieked one very wild fan, who was getting on Red's nerves. "I'm not half as easy as you are," retorted Red. "You paid fifty cents to see me do it."—The American Boy.

Willard and Hearst, Which is the Worse?

The Hearst papers of March 26th print a communication from their owner, Mr. W. R. Hearst, addressed to the clergymen of the United States, but for the benefit of all of his publications' readers, of which the following contains the first four paragraphs:

"A widely advertised, largely attended prize fight is to be held in Madison Square Garden to-night. The largest place of entertainment in the greatest city in the world is to be devoted to an exhibition that is both brutal and brutalizing.

"Thousands of young men will attend this demoralizing exhibition, and what is worse, hundreds of women will be present.

"This exhibition is to be held partly under the authorization and protection of an improper law and partly in violation and defiance of law, because Madison Square Garden is not the kind of boxing club that the law is meant to authorize. The newspapers will report this fight, but they do not approve of it. The newspapers report the facts of the Waite murder, but they do not approve of murders, and they labor to secure proper laws and penalties and adequate police regulations to prevent murders and other criminal and immoral acts.

"I think the press should move to prevent these demoralizing prize fights. I think the newspapers should campaign to secure the repeal of the laws authorizing brutalizing exhibitions of this kind."

The italics are mine.

For weeks past the Hearst papers have been playing up this "exhibition that is both brutal and brutalizing." For weeks past Willard, the party of the first part in this fight which is used as an analogy of a murder, has been employed by Mr. Hearst to report daily all of the details of his training—what he had for breakfast, how far he ran during the day, and who rubbed him down. For months prior to that, this same "brute" has been filling the Sunday edition with pages of canting drool advising young men to do certain things if they would be like him. Mr. Hearst, therefore, is in the position of any other person who has been profiting by pandering to what, as he himself implies, is an immoral act. Mr. Hearst, therefore, has been making money by stimulating an immoral appetite in "thousands of young men." and, "what is worse, hundreds of women."

In the very issue of the Examiner in which Mr. Hearst's letter is printed there is a page and a half devoted to the details of this "demoralizing exhibition," while the Chronicle, which endeavors to keep its readers supplied with the sporting as well as the other news of the day, covers the story with one page only. So much of an attraction, indeed, does Mr. Hearst make of this "criminal and immoral act," that on the day previous to the report of the fight he advertised that famous novelists and ex-champions had been engaged by him to give the "best and most complete accounts of the Willard-Moran bout." While I have no objection to this as a newspaper policy, yet the contention that he is covering the story as he would a murder is purely disingenuous. Newspapers do not print columns daily leading up to a murder and inciting people to witness a murder. Mr. Hearst, as a newspaper man, knows perfectly well that the interest in prizefighting is largely artificial and is created to a great degree by the press, and if the papers did not "play up" the fights in advance and dismissed them with a paragraph afterwards, there would not be tens in the audiences where there are now thousands.

Now, I hold no brief for prizefighters—their vogue is a psychological survival from the days when life depended on physical prowess, and which therefore came to be the most admired possession of mankind—but the man who, after making a profit on their work, starts a hue and cry against them surely is somewhat more despicable than the poor overmuscled and underbrained moron that knows no better and whose only talent is his ability to provide a "brutal exhibition" for Mr. Hearst's indirect benefit.

In the Public Eye

Many will believe that Mr. Bryan is fomenting to the utmost a Congressional uprising against the president in order to regain the leadership of the Democratic party. His telegram recently to a follower in the House was manifestly inspired by the desire to encourage rebellion against the White House. In a real sense, one of the issues in the congressional situation is Wilson or Bryan, for the president's repudiation by his party in either branch on a question which, in its essence, does not differ from the one which impelled Bryan to leave the cabinet, would bring to the Nebraskan a fresh opportunity to take the lead again.

Colonel Roosevelt could now earn more than the celebrated $1.25 a word paid him for his hunting reports from Africa, if he would cable his inmost thoughts about the performance of Gardner, Cushing, Bird and Washington. The flat comment of a very close friend of the Colonel's is that the four did grave injury to his chances for the Republican nomination. The suspicion appears to be spreading among Republicans that of the four, Gardner and Cushing were thinking more of their own political advantage than of anything else.

An interesting sidelight on the now dead issue of Panama Canal tolls is the testimony of shipowners who say the cost of coal for voyages around the Horn, made during the recent canal obstruction, was greater by a considerable amount than the tolls would have been, to say nothing of interest rates, pay of the crew and other multiform costs of navigation. Three thousand dollars was the estimated decrease in profit of one vessel forced to take the long way round.

Much was made of the success of the federal reserve banking system by the New York Democrats in their survey of the party issues, and it has to be said that the Democratic party is entitled to a great deal of credit for the legislation. The second annual report of the federal reserve board, recently published, is an excellent summary of the system's achievements, its steady influence and its future role. Republican orators in arranging Democratic rule invariably ignore this very creditable chapter in the record of the present administration. In replying to Mr. Root, ex-Governor Glynn could not resist the temptation to taunt the former New York Senator for his opposition to the new banking law. It was a fair hit at Mr. Root. Mr. Lodge is in the same boat.

It is common enough for mayors to receive appeals for aid from the matrimonially inclined who either have not made the acquaintance of the commercial wedlock agency or have tried it in vain. These appeals usually get scant attention, but one so touched the heart of the chief executive of York, Pa., the other day that he advertised in a local paper in an effort to help the lonesome man who sought his assistance. A score of answers were received from York girls and were placed on file. This became noised abroad, and other wife-seekers immediately sent in applications. Now the city finds itself threatened with a municipal matrimonial bureau. Why not? We have State and municipal employment agencies. Perhaps it would be too expensive to establish the matrimonial bureau as a separate city department, but it would seem that the work might possibly become a function of the department of aids and charities. San Francisco is playing the same matrimonial game.

—Just as a detail of record, it may be well to note that the organization which formerly rejoiced in the name "Simplified Speling Sosiet," is now called the "Simplifyd Speling Sosy-eti." When men set out to hasten the process of the evolution of language there is no safety in predicting what they will do, or where they will stop.

Captain Ellis, Fourteenth Cavalry, Ordered to the Front

While the world is wondering as to whether the German autocratic system or the French ideals of democracy are preferable as applied to the military service, and the score seems to be tied at the present writing, Uncle Sam has gone ahead on his own account and freely promotes the men who have shown conspicuous fitness regardless of their coming from the ranks or not. The most recent example of this policy is the case of Captain Rowland B. Ellis, who has just been raised from First Lieutenant to Captain of the Fourteenth Cavalry, and who is under orders to proceed to the Mexican border and take part in the punitive expedition directed against Villa. Captain Ellis received his first commission, "for bravery in action," during the Philippine war, and will be remembered here as having given up an excellent opportunity for advancement in civil life by electing to serve his country. On enlistment as a private, Ellis took part in the campaign in the Philippines, and after minor promotions, was recommended by General Elwell S. Otis as second lieutenant of volunteers. Subsequently, in command of a scout's detachment, he was noticed for his distinguished services in advance of General Swan's and General Wheaton's brigades in southern Luzon. In 1901 he was appointed second lieutenant of the 13th Cavalry, U. S. A., and afterwards as First Lieutenant 14th Cavalry, gave a good account of himself in the various Island operations. Captain Ellis is prominent in society and club circles, a Southerner by birth, and is from a stock that has supplied many of the nation's fighting men.

Captain Rowland B. Ellis.

The Background of the War Zone

That able journalist, F. W. Hirst, editor of the Economist of London, prophesies gloomily about "the fate of the landed gentry after the war." Taking into consideration Lord Inchcape's belief that it may be necessary after the war to add as much as 50 per cent to the present war taxation, Mr. Hirst sees the landlords faced with an income tax ranging, according to income, from four or five to perhaps nine or ten shillings in the pound. He doubts whether it will be possible materially to increase revenues from the ownership of land. Consequently many large country houses will be thrown on the market, to be bought by the "war profiteers," if they desire to attain to the position of country gentlemen. But he does not believe that there will be a sufficient number of these plutocrats to bring about that competition for the purchase of property that would result in high prices. Pictures, no doubt, will be sold at high prices to the neutral countries which have been growing rich, while the belligerents have been growing poor.

Despite the perils of submarine warfare 400,000 persons crossed the Atlantic between American and European ports as passengers last year. Figures assembled last week in the bureau of navigation at Washington show that 250,000 of them traveled on vessels owned by the belligerents. One hundred and fifty thousand took passage on neutral ships. Slightly more than half the Atlantic travelers were east-bound, and Italian ships carried more than vessels of any other nation. Only 38,000 of the passengers traveled first class. Two hundred and seventy thousand went in the steerage.

The Gazette de Lausanne announces that the town of Brussels has been fined a sum of 500,000 f., as the result of the recent alleged murder of the betrayer of Nurse Cavell. The Germans justify this fine by declaring that the crime was committed with a revolver, whereas, according to the regulations, all arms should have been deposited at the Town Hall. It follows, therefore, that some inhabitant must have infringed this regulation.

A strong squadron of aeroplanes and an airship or two could be used to very good advantage on the Mexican frontier just now, and the emergency shows the need of putting this branch of the service on a sound footing as soon as may be. A single aerial scout would probably have prevented the Custer massacre by giving warning of the ambushade set by Sitting Bull. In the dry, clear air of the Southwest an adequate force of aeroplanes, flying low, as would be possible when not threatened by anti-aircraft guns, would be able to patrol a wide sweep of territory, so that no considerable body of men could pass unobserved.

A private wire message quotes Sir George Paish as saying that although the national income of Great Britain has increased $3,000,000 since the war, the national debt has risen from $3,535,000,000 to $12,000,000,000.

Great Britain has just closed a contract for eight hundred ferrets, to be sent to Flanders to kill the enormous numbers of rats infesting the British trenches.

A REVISED JUDGMENT.

When I was somewhat younger, I opined
('Twas what they always taught me as a lad)
The two great classes of our humankind
Were these: good men and bad.
I've touched men in a thousand ways since then,
Sometimes as creditor, sometimes as debtor;
And I have found the two great types of men
To be: good men and better.

ENGAGEMENTS.

BENNETT-BRIZARD.—Mr. and Mrs. Philip E. Bowles of Oakland announce the engagement of their niece, Miss Kate Bennett, and Henry Brizard of Arcata, Humboldt County. Miss Bennett has made her home with Mr. and Mrs. Bowles for a number of years, and has many friends on both sides of the bay. No date has been set for the wedding.

CHURCHILL-ILESS.—Cards sent through the mail this week brought news of the engagement of Miss Dorothy Churchill, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. Wilder Churchill of Napa, and Hermann Iless.

COOK-WADSWORTH.—Mrs. Wm. Timson gave a luncheon at her home on Russian Hill recently at which announcement was made of the engagement of her niece, Miss Alice Miller Cook, to Joseph Hilton Wadsworth of Pasadena.

NEWMAN-LEVEY.—Mr. and Mrs. John S. Adler announce the engagement of their niece, Miss Emily C. Newman, to Edgar C. Levey, prominent attorney of this city. They will receive on Sunday afternoon, April 3d, next, from 2 to 5 o'clock, at the Adler residence, 1899 California street.

WEDDING ANNOUNCEMENTS.

COLE-BOARDMAN.—June 3d is the date set for the marriage of Miss Elizabeth Cole and Dr. Walter W. Boardman, which will take place in St. Paul, where the bride-to-be makes her home.

KOHN-RANSOHOFF.—The marriage of Miss Enid Kohn and James Ransohoff will take place on April 27th. It will be an elaborately appointed affair, with more than a hundred relatives and friends in attendance, and will have for its setting the Century Club.

MOON-FAIR.—Mrs. John B. Moon has issued invitations for the wedding of her daughter, Miss Marjorie Moon, and Harry Heasley Fair. The marriage will take place on Tuesday, April 11th, at the home of Horace Miller in Piedmont. Only relatives and close friends will witness the ceremony, and there will be no attendants. The bride-to-be is a niece of H. M. A. Miller, C. O. G. Miller, Horace Miller and Miss Annie Miller. Harry Fair was a former resident of Riverside, but last year moved to Oakland. He has built an attractive house in Claremont, where the young couple will make their home.

RAUCH-TAYLOR.—Miss Nell Rauch, the pretty daughter of Mrs. William Alexander Rauch, will be an Easter bride, her marriage to William Allan Taylor taking place in time to permit them to enjoy springtime in the East. The date of the wedding is to be announced soon.

WOOSTER-RICHARD.—Miss Orville Wooster and Walter L. Richard will be married in Yonkers, N. Y., on Easter Monday.

WRAMPMEIER-POWELL.—Miss Ethel Wrampmeier and Stanley Powell will be married Easter week. The wedding invitations are to be sent out early next week. The ceremony is to take place at St. Mark's Episcopal Church, with a reception to follow at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Wrampmeier.

WEDDINGS.

BLOCK-CARPENTER.—The marriage of Miss Medora Block, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James N. Block, and Grant Carpenter, took place Saturday evening, at which Rev. William Kirk Guthrie officiated. Mr. and Mrs. Carpenter will make their home in Hollywood at the conclusion of their honeymoon.

BRADFORD-SIDEBOTTOM.—Miss Doris Bradford, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Bradford, was married to Wilfred Sidebottom of Providence, R. I., Tuesday night at the Bradford home on Locust street. The Rev. Robert Wallace read the ceremony in the presence of the members of the two families. There was no reception. Mr. and Mrs. Sidebottom will go East to reside.

GOLDBERG-GERSON.—Miss Rena Goldberg, the eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Goldbers, became the wife of Eric Gerson at noon Sunday, the ceremony taking place at the Pacific avenue home of the bride's parents. Afterwards, there was a wedding breakfast to which about sixty of the relatives and friends were seated. Mr. and Mrs. Gerson left Sunday night for Southern California, and will return in a couple or three weeks. They will make their home for a time with Mr. and Mrs. Goldberg.

HINCKLEY-BOWMAN.—Less than a score witnessed the marriage of Miss Helen Hinckley, daughter of Mrs. Mary Grayson Hinckley, and Melville Bowman, which was solemnized Saturday afternoon at 2, at St. Luke's Church. Reverend Edward Morgan read the marriage service. Leroy T. Ryone was the best man; the bride was unattended. She was given into the keeping of the bridegroom by her mother. Mr. and Mrs. Bowman left Saturday for New York, and will visit also in Washington and Boston for the next three months, returning by way of New Orleans, the Grand Canyon and Los Angeles. They will make their home in Beowawe, Nevada.

VAN HATTEN-COUSINS.—Cards are out announcing the marriage of Volney D. Cousins, a prominent member of the Olympic Club, and Miss Thekla Van Hatten. The marriage took place at the home of the bridegroom's sister, Mrs. C. C. Hebel, in Oakland.

WILSON-MOORE.—Miss Madge Wilson and Dr. Chester Moore chose the little Swedenborgian church for their ceremony, which took place at noon on Saturday, and which was witnessed only by relatives and close friends. Rev. Dean J. Wilmer Gresham officiated. The bride, was given away by her father, James K. Wilson. The ceremony was followed by an informal reception at the home of the bride on Pacific avenue.

"The Girl from the Big Horn Country."

There are specially written books that appeal strongly to girls, and this story by Mary Ellen Chase is a sterling example of that character. Virginia Hunter, born on a big Wyoming cattle ranch, and filled with the Western spirit of buoyant, healthy exhilaration and hearty appreciation of the mountains, pines and rivers of her home, goes East to visit relatives and attend school as a "broadening experience." Her Western ways, daring horseback riding and independent convictions amaze and confound many of her relatives and schoolmates, but her happy nature and fine sense of the values and realities carry her through to success. The new Western tricks and "plays" she introduced into the boarding school revolutionized the atmosphere of that formerly unruffled establishment. After all these entertaining adventures are over she returns delightfully to her mountain home in the West, "the loveliest place in the world," and without "becoming a young lady," as her greatest admirer approvingly decides.

"Drifting Waters."

The Putnams have just published a new story entitled "Drifting Waters," by Rachel Swete Macnamara, author of "The Fringe of the Desert," "The Torch of Life," etc. There were three incidents in Anne Tudor's early life which stood out as milestones upon the road over which her young feet wandered. The first was an episode which opened the gate to a new field of thought; the second, an event which gave her first glimpse of the Tree of Knowledge; the third, an epoch which eventually led her to taste for herself of the fruit of that forbidden tree. The episode occurred in her tenth year, and took place in the dusk of a November afternoon when she and her mother sat by the fire in the sitting room of the little house in Caroline Place, where all the days of her memory had been spent; and it is with this episode that the story opens.

A Great Novel.

"Behold the Woman," by T. Everett Harre, author of "The Eternal Maiden," which created something of a sensation over two years ago, will be published by the J. B. Lippincott Company on April 4th. Mr. Harre's new novel deals with a period never before treated in English fiction, and has been compared by critics who have read the manuscript to Flaubert's "Salammbô" and Sienkiewicz's "Quo Vadis." "Behold the Woman," treats of a subject uppermost in the minds of men today, and according to the publishers, displays the lyrical beauty of expression, imaginative fervor and scholarly research finding their finest expression in the masterpieces of French literature.

Within the next few weeks, The Century Company will publish "Principal English Plays," edited by Professor John S. P. Tatlock, of Leland Stanford University and Robert G. Martin of Northwestern University. The volume will contain a collection of about twenty-five representative plays, showing the development of the drama from earliest times to the present day.

John D. Dunn, author of "A-B-C of Golf," which was published recently, is a member of a famous golfing family, and one of the first British professionals to come to this country. Mr. Dunn is now the head of one of the largest and most successful indoor golf schools, and among his pupils are many well known men. Published by Harper & Brothers, New York.

REASONS FOR RAPID RISE IN PRICE OF SUGAR.

C. M. Warner, a prominent New York refiner, and in close touch with the sugar supply of the world, gives the following reason for the unusual high prices now developing for that commodity:

"On account of the unusual demand for sugar that has prevailed since last fall, the beet sugar factories of the United States, and, particularly, of California, have very little of the last crop still on hand; in fact, none at all. The increasing price of sugar is, in my opinion, due absolutely to the law of supply and demand. The island of Cuba, with its three and a quarter million ton crop, is to-day practically supplying the world's demand. All European nations and some of the South American republics are and for some time past have been drawing in the New York markets for very heavy amounts of refined sugars, and England has been drawing very heavily on the raw supplies in Cuba. These countries, heretofore, were supplied with European beet sugar and sugar made from raw cane produced in Java and other parts of the world.

Since the war began a large part of the best fields of Europe have been destroyed on account of the lack of tonnage, freight rates on sugar from Java to the United Kingdom have reached 300 shillings, which rate would be prohibitive even if the tonnage were available to carry the crop, which it is not. Freight rates from Cuba to the United States have increased fourfold, from 12½ cents per 100 pounds in normal times to 50 and 55 cents at present. This naturally increases the cost of raw sugar in New York.

Tonnage is even so scarce in this trade that the Cuban planter is to-day loading cars of sugar in Cuba, ferrying the cars on car floats across a stretch of ocean from Havana to the terminus of the Flagler Railroad on the Florida Keys, and thence by rail to Philadelphia and New York. So great is the demand for sugar, on account of the heavy export business and the unusual domestic call, that it is difficult to get sufficient raw sugar to New York to keep the refineries in operation. Some refiners, like myself, are so heavily oversold that we have actually had to withdraw from the market and refuse to take on new business.

It is my opinion that if the war were to cease to-morrow there would be a temporary recession in price for a short period and the market would then recover and remain on a generally high level for two or three years. It will probably take all of that time for the raw sugar supply of the world to reach normal again."

—The annual report of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation for 1915, issued recently, disclosed that the net earnings of the corporation and its subsidiary companies, after deducting expenditures, amounted to $24,821,408, as compared with $9,649,667 in 1914, an increase of nearly 260 per cent. Orders on hand December 31, 1915, aggregated $175,432,895 as against $46,513,189 on the corresponding date of the previous year.

—Shipments have continued regularly from the developments under way at the new strike in the Rescue-Eula Mining Company's property during the past week, averaging between 15 and 20 tons per day. The total weight of the shipments for the week, which were sent to the West End mill, was 138 tons, and the grade was satisfactory.

—For the first time in a very long period every clearing house city in California reported, last week, an increase in bank clearings. San Francisco recorded $57,616,059, an increase of $12,200,256, and Los Angeles, $23,000,887, a gain of $4,854,493.

—Net profits of American zinc for the year 1915 show an increase of $5,216,186. The company earned last year $67.41 per share. It is now quoted around $7½.

—Pacific Telephone declared its usual quarterly dividend of 1½ per cent on the preferred stock, payable April 15th, on stock of record March 31st.

—Tonopah-Belmont shipped bullion, for the week ending March 25th, valued at $128,866. This estimate is made on the new price of silver, 58 cents.

—West End shipped a two weeks' clean-up of bar bullion valued at $41,714.

—The Tonopah producers totaled shipments valued at $179,052, during the week ending March 25th.

—It is reported that an Ottawa evening paper is trying to stir up resentment against Walter Damrosch's New York Symphony orchestra, which is booked to play an engagement there soon. People are urged to stay away from the concert, and not spend their money to support an orchestra which is largely composed of Germans. Newspapers of violent temper are likely to make almost any suggestion, but this one is specially regrettable, inasmuch as Mr. Damrosch has wisely kept all discussion of the war out of his organization from the very first, and has not associated himself with any pro-German activities of any sort.

SEVENTEEN.

Very cminous is the number 17 for Germany, according to an interesting calculation in a recent issue of Figaro. Germany became a world power in 1871 (1 plus 8 plus 7 plus 1 equals 17.) The numbers affixed to the names of the Prussian kings in the order in which they ascended the thrones of their ancestors: Frederick I, Frederick William I, Frederick II, Frederick William II, Frederick William III, Frederick William IV, William I, and Frederick III—summed up are again 17. Add together the number of belligerent rulers: George IV, Nicholas II, Albert I, Victor Emanuel III, Peter I, Nicholas I, William II, Frances Joseph I, and Ferdinand I, and again the total amounts to 17. And finally there is the year 1916 itself (1 plus 9 plus 1 plus 6 equals 17.) While the editor of the Figaro denies superstitious inclinations, he thinks it worth while to muse upon this mysterious incident of the number seventeen.

A FABLE.

There was once a man who devoted himself to his fellow creatures. Such of them that is, as were in need. A lame dog or a deformed child caused him to shed tears. He never forgot to put ashes on the sidewalk in winter, or to give his employees good wages, good advice and many holidays. He paid his taxes honestly and his dues promptly. He subscribed to all charities and visited slums on Saturday nights. And everywhere he spent freely of his money, his time and his kind words. And in all this there was no thing he neglected except one—his wife. After a few years she began to notice this, and she said: "My husband is what is called a Humanitarian, and is concerned only with the sick or the sorry. I must endeavor to become either the one or the other."

And so, finding herself in invincible health, she eloped with another man.—Dorothea Loomis.

RECORD OF THE SEVEN SLEEPERS.

You have humorously alluded to a stupid or a drowsy person as "one of the seven sleepers," and perhaps you have paused to wonder who the seven were, how long they slept and what caused their ultimate awakening. To the modern skeptic, who has not fathomed all there is to learn of marvelous scientific knowledge, and has no faith whatever in the miraculous, the story will be laughed as a foolish bit of imagination. Yet there are devout ones who still believe it actually happened, just as it is recorded in the annals of the early church. The long-drawn-out nap began in the year 250 A. D., and ended in 482, on the 27th day of July. That was, in the parlance of 1915, "some sleep." Those who indulged in it were named Serapion, Dionysius, Maximian, John, Constantine, Martinian and Malchus. They were inhabitants of Ephesus, during the reign of the Emperor Decius, that short and bloody reign which began when Decius turned against his emperor, Philippus, conquered him in battle and himself assumed the scepter and the purple. One of the first acts of his two year reign was to order a massacre of all those who had professed the Christian faith. The seven young men took refuge in a cave in Mount Celton, and when the searchers were unable to find them the emperor ordered the cave hermetically sealed. After 232 years, so the story runs, the part of the cave where they had been asphyxiated was broken into, in the course of some excavation work. As soon as the air reached them the seven sleepers awoke. They died a few hours later.

SUDDEN DEMISE OF COLONEL BURDICK.

George Rice Burdick, assistant cashier of the Anglo-London-Paris National Bank, and connected with that institution for over 33 years, passed away at his desk this week of heart failure. For a year past, he had confided to his nearest friends that he was not feeling his usual normal health. He practically resided in San Francisco since his birth in August, 1856. As a youngster, he entered the banking business with the pioneer firm of Lazard Freres, an institution which later was developed into the thriving Anglo-London-Paris National Bank. His great relaxation from bank duties was an intense interest in the development of the militia forces of the State, and at one time he was a very prominent figure in local military affairs. He was made major and later lieutenant-colonel of the old first regiment, and served under Colonel John H. Dickinson and Colonel Wm. Sullivan. Later he became an enthusiastic member of the Commonwealth Club, and took a lively interest in the betterment of the city. He is survived by two brothers, Edwin and Benjamin E., and by a sister, Miss Fannie Burdick, with whom he lived.

WHO THREW THAT ROTTEN EGG AT HILMER?

What star jokesmith among the throng of wits that inhabit the produce section of the city shifted the cut on Hilmer and substituted Egyptian eggs of the 1283 B. C. cold storage stock for his prime fancies, shipped to the local government stations on contract, and thereby brought contumely and ridicule on his honest head. Hilmer has always stood in with the boys, politically, socially, fraternally, and in cornering the market for marketing of eggs. He possesses a sixth sense in manipulating the egg market; in creating a successful corner he could play all around any combination or "trust" manipulated by the late Pierpont Morgan. Despite suspicion and innuendoes, charges and suspicions of one or two rivals in the trade, nothing like this shocking trick played upon him by some lunk-headed rival, who wanted to upset the Hilmer popularity, has ever punctured his wholesome and unblemished bonhomie as a juggler of "Petaluma fancy firsts." Hilmer will clear himself, of course, if given half a chance, but the trouble with the courts these days is that they don't always give the good fellow one-sixteenth of a chance, as was recently illustrated in the West-ern Fuel cases.

ONE MILLION DOLLARS ON TIPS.

James Hebron, who for thirty years was doorman at Delmonico's at a salary of $1 a day, told Supreme Justice Gavegan how he amassed a fortune of $1,000,000 on tips. The occasion was the trial of a suit brought by Hebron against a mortgage company to set aside a deed to property valued at $30,000.

"Barnum had only a three-ring circus when I first knew him," Hebron said with a chuckle, "but it was not long before I had very successful irons in the fire while still holding down my humble job as doorman at Delmonico's. People called me their 'political barometer.' Being college bred, I was able to converse intelligently with any of the prominent men who dined regularly there, and it is needless to say that without the friendly advice I got on such occasions I never could have made $1,000,000 in Wall street.

"I started in with only $20," the aged witness continued. "I used that in Wall street. With my profits I gradually branched out into other lines, until I had not only a very successful real estate business, but also three livery stables, starting with one horse."

THE END OF THE TURKISH EMPIRE.

A rich Armenian who lived at Buyukdere on the Bosphorus says, in part: "I agree thoroughly with the Turks. If I were a Turk I should hate the Christians. Turkey is not, cannot be a political State; it is a theocracy, and the only organic law is the Mohammedan religion. . . . And yet the Turks are so simple, so childlike in this mature world of cut-throats and adventurers that they think they will get rid of the Germans, too, after the war! You and I know better—it is the end of the Turkish Empire. Yes, it is the end whichever side wins."—John Reed in the Metropolitan.

RECORD PAYMENTS OF LOCAL LIFE INSURANCE

The Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Company paid out two notable checks recently on accident insurance policies. One was in the case of Captain Peter M. Knudsen, master of the S. S. "Aberdeen," who lost his life when the vessel was wrecked a short time ago off the Golden Gate during a violent storm. The liberal increase provided by the Pacific Mutual policy was greatly appreciated by the thankful widow, who wrote to the company and thanked it for the remarkable promptness in paying the claim. "Three days after proofs were submitted to your San Francisco office I received a check for $3,000 by the home office in Los Angeles. The policy was originally for $2,000, but through your liberal increase provided in such policies it had increased to $3,000. Signed, Olia Knudson." The second case was that of Chester F. Parks, an optician of Corte Madera, who came to his death by inadvertently handling an electric drop cord in his garage while repairing his motor car. Payment in his case was also made in record time, and met with the appreciative thanks of the recipient.

HASSAN AND HIS WIVES.

And it was at the hour of the full moon, the doors of the castle were pushed open, and there entered silently into the garden, Hassan and his seven wives, crossed over to the melodiously splashing fountain, disrobed and seated themselves in a semi-circle. And Hassan Bedr-ed Din said:

"I am your master, creatures of the curved rib, but verily rather would I be a hunchback beggar than your master solely! Because my soul is thirsty for love."

And he looked into the deer-like eyes of Butheines:

"What is the utmost that you can do for me, woman?"

"Singing and dancing will I do for thee, O lord!"

Hassan shrugged his shoulders and turned to Kuttel Kulub:

"And you also, only singing and dancing?"

"I will tell you a thousand fairy tales: About the Prince who was turned to stone, about the veziers of the King Junan, and Isrit and about the old Scheichs."

"What can you give me, Scherezade?"

"Every lust of the body, lord! My blood boils like the wind of the desert!"

Nushet-es-Saman said: "I can be true to you, from the bottom of my heart, oh Hassan! And not because I have to!"

And Sophia: "I can relate to you the works of the Prophet, and I can explain them, and I know the secrets of the stars!"

And the dark-haired Dunjaisai I, the one with the queen-like figure, fell to the feet of Hassan, covering them with kisses, and her voice vibrated like leaves in a hurricane: "I could die for thee, oh lord!"

A happy smile passed over the face of the master, and he kissed Dunjaisaid.

The seventh woman sat still unquestioned, near the fountain. And she opened her mouth and said: "Why should I keep silent and make a secret of my love, because you, oh Hassan, do not look at me?"

Hassan smiled snobbishly: "Arise! What on earth could you do for me after Dunjaisaid is ready to die for me?"

"I could live for you, oh lord!"—After the Persian by Guido Bruno.

—"The appointment of Lord Chelmsford as Viceroy of India caused general surprise," says the Nation. "His past gives no such promise of greatness. A good University record, some rather modest service on the London County Council, and a reputation for tact and popularity as the Governor of two Australian States—a path so quiet seldom leads direct to Simla. There are times when India may look to her head. No one objects to this choice, and one can only say of it that it must justify itself by the event."

Senate Recognizes Importance of Auto Development. Stupendous Traffic Figures

There is a measure now pending before Congress, known as the Bankhead bill, which is of vital interest to all auto owners and to others concerned in the prosperity of the nation, and yet it has been practically ignored by the press generally, and remains for the News Letter to state its progress from week to week for the benefit of local readers. Forty-three of the forty-eight States will qualify for Federal aid in roads under the Bankhead bill, recently reported favorably to the Senate by its Committee on Postoffices and Post Roads.

Indiana, South Carolina, Georgia, Mississippi and Texas are the five States which have yet to equip themselves with a centralized direction of road improvement. Indiana has an active campaign in progress which ought to prove successful, energized in great degree by the Hoosier State Automobile Association, which is affiliated with the American Automobile Association. Indiana is a great automobile producing State, and a large percentage of its farmers have adopted the self-propelled vehicle.

South Carolina is giving the question of a State highway department serious consideration. Georgia is in an equally hopeful condition, while Mississippi in its House of Representatives recently voted against the creation of a State Commission. The legislators opposed the legislation because it called for an engineer with a salary of $2,500 a year. Maine pays $5,000 and possesses an unusually competent official.

The memorandum which accompanies the Senate substitute bill contains this reference to the phenomenal traffic growth:

"Backwardness in the building of public roads has been all the more marked by contrast with the enormous development of traffic. Within the brief period of about ten years the motor vehicle has been introduced and developed until it is now asserted that there are over 2,300,000 motor vehicles in use, or about one for every mile of public road. If these vehicles are estimated to average only 25 horsepower it would mean a total of over 57,000,000 horsepower brought into use on our public roads with a suddenness which has no parallel in industrial history. This new and domestic traffic has, by its peculiar effect upon road surfaces and its great strain upon bridges and road foundations, rendered infinitely more complex the problem of road construction and maintenance, which our systems of management had already proven utterly inadequate to meet.

"Ordinary horse-drawn traffic has also increased to such a point that we now speak of tonnage, not in millions, but in hundreds of millions, and of the ton mileage in billions. It has been estimated that to move the wheat crop alone in 1915 involved the hauling of more than 30,000,000 tons over the public roads at a cost of over $50,000,000. Some conception of the immensity of our farm production and the consequent movement of farm products over the country roads can be gained from the estimate prepared in the Department of Agriculture that the production of corn, wheat, oats, potatoes, cotton and hay in 1915 aggregated 270,807,000 tons, while the total agricultural production for that year was valued at nearly eleven billion dollars."

Weekly State Statistics

H. A. French, superintendent of the State Motor Vehicle Department, gives the following figures to last Saturday: Registrations: Automobiles, 156,646; motorcycles, 19,483; chauffeurs, 5,812; automobile dealers, 1,114; motorcycle dealers, 170. Receipts: Automobiles, $1,640,894.55; motorcycles, $39,058.50; chauffeurs, $11,624; automobile dealers, $28,523; motorcycle dealers, $760; miscellaneous, $662.50. Total $1,697,794.70.

San Francisco to Enter Speed Game

San Francisco will have one of the best motor speedways in the country if the plans of the promoters are fulfilled. An association, to be known as the California Speedway Association, has been formed and incorporated under the laws of the State of California, the project having been promoted by Nat T. Messer and Ivan R. Gates. A board of trustees has been formed consisting of Stephen S. Rau, John J. Doyle, John F. McLain, Nat T. Messer, and F. M. McAuliffe.

According to reports, one of the most accessible tracts of ground has been secured, adjacent to San Francisco, on the tracks of the United Railroads and Southern Pacific systems, approximately twelve miles from the city. On this tract a speedway will be constructed, closely resembling the Sheepshead Bay track. The plan calls for a mile track, built of 2x4 inch planks laid on edge, eighty feet wide on the turns and seventy feet wide in the straightaway, the turns having a paraboloid banking and the track having a concrete foundation; subways under the track and with ample and commodious bleachers with a seating capacity of 50,000 spectators. On this track it is planned to have four major races each year, besides rodeos, circuses, local contests, polo, football, baseball and other games, and some high class attractions throughout the year.

Notes by the Way

Crude oil is selling in Oklahoma at better than $1.20 per barrel when only last August that same oil went begging at around 40 cents per barrel. No Standard Oil nor any one else is blamable for this advance. Nature has simply grown tired. Just for example, last year the Cushing pool was pouring out 300,000 barrels of crude oil per day; now it is barely sending up 90,000. Can you wonder then that gasoline has advanced, and can you find in these facts any warrant for a belief that prices will re-act to their former level? If you can do anything of the kind, you are a wonder.

With the supply thus steadily decreasing and the demand forever increasing, and laying aside all question of war demand, there is no reason why gasoline should not advance to more than 30 cents per gallon and stay there. There are approximately 2,000,000 automobiles in this country at present, using not less than 2,000,000 gallons of gasoline annually. To these will be added this year perhaps 1,000,000 more cars, which in turn will demand and get gasoline. Pay for it they must, and we will all pay just what those who sell it to us demand, whether we like to do so or not. All history has shown us the folly of attempting price regulation, so what is the good of trying to fool each other or ourselves?

If the figures used in the foregoing are even approximately correct, this means that by the end of the current year we will see the ratio of an automobile to every eight families in the United States attained. Even as it is now, the proportion of automobiles to population in the United States is one to forty-eight. Placing the average price of these 3,000,000 cars at $800, those who figure such matters are inclined to believe that it is possible for any one with an income of even as low as $1,200 per annum to afford a motor car. Since there are 1,300,000 people in this country whose incomes, according to the data gathered by the Federal Tax Income Bureau, range from $1,200 to $1,800,000, and 1,500,000 whose yearly incomes vary from $1,800 to $3,000, there seems to be no reason to fear that the market for the lower-priced cars will become overstocked in the near future. The average income of each resident of the United States is about $350, hardly enough to warrant every one of them owning an automobile, but not so far removed from the $1,200 as to make the thing beyond the possibility of any one on the average.

Remedy Carburetor Troubles

"One of the supposedly great sources of trouble to the motorist is the carburetor," says E. A. Cornley, Lozier Expert at Rayfield Carburetor Service Station, 1445 Bush street. "True, it is the heart of the motor, but too often mechanics blame it for the motor trouble, when time and time again it may be traced to ignition, spark plugs, valves, etc. All manufacturers of carburetors have their service stations spread about the country where experts are on hand to make the proper adjustments, and who will readily inform owners where faults are located."

Seattle Traction Company's Report

Traction companies in Seattle, Wash., report to the State Public Service Commission that they lost 9,000,000 fares during the past year owing to the operation of jitney buses, which took many passengers from their lines. Naturally, Seattle traction magnates are not kindly disposed to the automobile in the guise of a public conveyance. But suppose the public were to report? The jitney is not rapid transit. It never was, nor will it ever be. It can never compete in conveying thousands from one section of a city to another distant one at high speed. But the motor car does offer comfort and cleanliness in transporting those whose needs it satisfies. Having won its place in public service by proven merit only the jitney will continue to be an ever increasing competitor of the trolley car and such like methods of urban transport. Any one can realize the impossibility of a street car service adequate at all hours—the mere physical limitations of space and cars would prevent it from having enough equipment for rush hours, and which would perform be idle at other times. But why should the companies not control an auxiliary service to meet this condition?

A Plea for the Missions

With the exceptions of Santa Barbara, Ventura, Los Angeles, San Francisco de Asis and San Francisco Solano, the Missions of California, both north and south, are "dependents"—dependent on the small communities near which or in which they are located. Very often they stand isolated at the side of a smooth, paved highway over which hundreds of motorists flash each day. Natives of the State seldom accord them a glance, while Eastern motorists usually stop and often journey out of their way to see a ruin, and it is these "ruins," which are situated in deserted spots, the Landmark Club is endeavoring to preserve, points out a local automobile dealer, E. E. Wickstrom, of the American Auto Co., who is a "landmark" enthusiast.

Besides climate, California has its missions as no small attraction to Easterners, he says, yet the support accorded the organizations endeavoring to preserve them is not sufficient to put a new roof on the San Juan Capistrano Mission.

He says: "That of the number of Marion owners who motored to California last spring and summer, almost all of them asked for information on the location of certain missions, and the majority before they returned home expressed sorrow that America's relics linking the present 'hustle' to the sleepy romance of the Latin races were so rapidly falling to dust, literally from neglect.

"If the motorists of California alone would contribute their mite as they toured the small boxes usually found at mission entrances the sum would go far to keep them in repair.

"Eastern automobile owners usually purchase souvenirs of the caretakers, if there are any, and this is a help, but people living here naturally do not consider that. So long as it is the motorists who are able to get to the more distant and out of the way places, it must rest largely with them as to the amount of direct contributions.

"The San Juan Baptista is an excellent example of the need of the Missions. Hundreds, almost thousands, of cars pass there each week, and 5 cents or 10 cents, to get down to cases, from them would stop the walls from caving in and the roof from crumbling off. Think of it sometime, and also remember what is happening to the San Diego mission, situated in one of the most beautiful of California valleys.

"Many other missions could never continue to exist upon the community in which they are situated were it not for the tourists, not motorists, who patronize their little store. Stop some time and have a little talk with the father of San Juan. It'll be an eye-opener."

Gasoline Cost a Mere Bagatelle

It is evident that recent agitation and newspaper articles in connection with the increased cost of gasoline has left an uncertain impression upon the minds of present and prospective automobile owners.

This is especially the case in connection with the man who is contemplating purchasing an automobile at this time, as he naturally views the question from an economical standpoint and grasps the idea that the increased cost of gasoline may make the cost of operating his car prohibitive. W. B. Cochran, of the Cole-Pacific Motor Car Company, says:

"The truth of the matter is, that the gasoline expense incurred through the general operation of a motor vehicle is an item of no consequence whatever. The old automobile owner, who will give this matter thought, can realize that even if the cost of gasoline reached 25 or 30 cents a gallon, which is predicted, it will be an item of no particular consequence.

"When we consider the question of the price of gasoline as it affects the car owner, don't let us overlook the fact that it is evidently, at its worst only a temporary condition, and that sooner or later the price is bound to come down to normal again.

"In California, where weather permits the use of a car practically the entire twelve months of the year, a generous estimate of the average mileage per car of a year is about 5,000 miles. This would be equivalent to about 380 gallons of gasoline. The average price heretofore in the summer has been about twelve cents per gallon; say, for instance, the price does reach 25 cents, it would only mean an additional cost per year of $50, or about 90 cents a week. This does not represent more than a few good cigars or a pound box of candy."

Interesting State Statistics

In Missouri there was an increase of 366 per cent in the number of motor cars registered between the record of 1914 and that for 1915. For 1911 the number of cars registered was 16,387. For 1915 the number was 76,462.

New Jersey now has more than 90,000 automobiles, of which 79,300 are passenger vehicles and 11,000 motor trucks. All told they pay annual license fees of $1,155,000.

In Maine, 21,574 cars were licensed in 1915. Maine is working out a State highway system which will connect 73 per cent of the population of the State and make all the points of interest accessible to tourists over good roads.

According to the figures of the Iowa State Highway Commission there are in that State 140,168 cars, which pay in registration taxes $1,137,500.

Kansas is another Middle Western State that is crowding to the front in number of automobiles owned. Kansas now has 73,000 cars.

That good roads and automobiles go together is shown by the record of registration in California. More than 170,000 cars are now owned here.

New York State leads in the sheer number of cars owned; but when the number of cars in proportion to population is considered the leading States are all forming States—California, Iowa, the Dakotas, Minnesota, Washington, Oregon, Kansas. Iowa is the standing wonder of the automobile business, for one car out of every ten made last year was sold there—fifty thousand cars!

Figures lately gathered in Minnesota show that, of the twenty-two thousand new cars purchased there last year, sixty-three per cent went to towns of less than three thousand population, and therefore largely to farmers; while sales of the lowest-priced cars traced directly to farmers were fully seventy-five per cent.

A gain of more than 45 per cent in the number of cars owned in Nebraska at the close of the year 1915, as compared with the previous year's reports, is disclosed by the annual statistics compiled by the Secretary of State. Nineteen fourteen closed with 40,598 cars owned in the State, while on December 31, 1915, the number of cars owned was 59,140.

Thirty thousand cars will be registered this year in North Dakota, if the estimate of the Secretary of State is realized. Last year the receipts were $74,724 for 24,000 motor cars, and of this amount the county funds received $71,434.45.

In Wisconsin the 1915 registration of private owners was 79,791, and it is figured that the total for 1916 will be at least 110,000.

Trucks for Milk Delivery

The motor truck is motorizing the dairy delivery service, as can be seen by the installation of Vim trucks by the Merced Dairy.

After exhaustive tests made with one Vim truck, the Merced Dairy has now installed a complete service of six Vim trucks to handle its milk business in San Francisco. It is a well known fact that milk wagons have to use a greater speed practically than any other vehicle. This is also possible from the fact that deliveries are made in the early hours of the day, when the streets are almost free of traffic and the drivers are able to cover greater territory than would be possible later in the day with due regard to "safety first."

Another point that has been added to the advantages of the motor vehicle in this respect is its quietness over the clattering of horses' hoofs in the early morning hours. Many a quiet citizen has had his rest broken by the daily call of the milk wagon. Now, however, with the silent motor and quiet running of the motor truck his coming has been unannounced.

Not only has the Merced Dairy found that the installation of the Vim truck decreased their operating expense, but it has also resulted in the addition of one motor truck, as the original order was only for five.

A First-Class Garage

There are many garages in town, and the motorist is often in a quandary as to where to go, especially for permanent service. There are very few who give you the QUALITY of service of Dow & Green, in Taylor street, between O'Farrell and Geary. Here your car will receive something more than the "once over," and the prices are moderate.

FASHION'S FADS AND FRILLS

For those of us who have, as it were, stacks and stacks of passe frocks to be remodeled, this should prove a banner season. Fashion has been very lenient with our little economies for several seasons past, but this spring, whether it is the war, with its consequent deprivations to many, which has turned her in this direction, or just because she fancies evolving the odd little conceptions and combinations one sees on every side, certain it is that economy just now is being made very easy and very fascinating.

Girdles, Bretelles and Jumpers.

Let us suppose, for instance, that one has a dark blue serge dress of last season. It may not be worn to any great extent, but nevertheless it needs something to make it look more up to date. We may add a deep skirt yoke and a high girdle, with perhaps a bretelle over each shoulder, of black satin or moire. Cuffs and collars, too, add greatly to the effect. When cleverly done, the frock has none of the made-over appearance it would have had some seasons back, but is a delightfully chic little costume in the new deep waist effect, for shopping and general daytime wear. Coatee-peplums, quillings, bands and insets of contrasting material may work wonders, too, with slightly worn frocks, suits and blouses. Should a hem be slightly frayed or worn, whether it be the lower edge of blouse or skirt, one of those stiff, quaint little quillings, or a contrasting band may be set on to cover it most attractively. Around the bottom of a sleeve, which has not just the most becoming curve or finish, a double ruffle of picot edged Georgette, banded through the middle with a narrow black velvet ribbon may be added, the ribbon being drawn as tightly as desired and tied in a perky little bow. Deep cuffs of satin or taffeta with a matching collar may be attached to a blouse which has an unbecoming or old-fashioned sleeve, or an ugly neck finish. When these deep cuffs are used, the sleeve, if sufficiently full, may be gathered into the cuff, thereby lending another modish touch, for much fulness is noticed in the new sleeves.

Long, short and three-quarter length sleeves will be worn this spring and summer. There is still a strong tendency to the transparent effects of the fall and winter. That this should be so for summer is quite logical. Net is nearly as popular for sleeves and bodices as chiffon and Georgette, and it wears equally well. Many a pretty taffeta or satin frock is being made with net sleeves and upper bodice, and many a last season's taffeta or satin dress is being remodeled in this way.

Color Combinations.

Blue serge naturally takes to black, blue faille combines effectively with black, many shades of gray, the greenish, coppery tones, orange, terra-cotta and similar shades. These dark combinations of course are correct for the street; for the indoor dress or afternoon gown, one may allow the color fancy a little freer rein. There are some wonderfully vivid touches of color brought in now and then in a sombre frock, quite transforming it. As a general rule, however, pale tones will predominate this season. This is owing to the present condition of the dye market; naturally pastel colored fabrics require much less dye than deep shades. It is most timely that this should happen in the summer season when we are all of us inclined toward white, pale pinks, blues, mauves and lavenders, which are so particularly fascinating this season. By fall, if the war is not at an end, perhaps we shall all take to white, but we will not anticipate anything so extravagant unless we may take the present vogue of white shoes and spats as forerunners.

A Word About Shoes..

While speaking of shoes it might be well to say a word or two about the new pumps for the dainty, airy frocks of the girl of spring and summer, 1916. She will wear the old-time Colonial pump again with its accompanying buckles. And these buckles will be real buckles, not mere pretenses, some of them measure as much as two and one-half inches across. They range from the conservative leather covered buckle to the glittering novelty in rhinestones or colored semi-precious jewels.

The high white shoes with white stitching, heel and sole, will be a general favorite for the simple afternoon dress or the white flannel or serge suit. A pair of sport shoes should be found in every wardrobe, and for those who enjoy skating, a pair of skating shoes may also be included in the spring outfit, for it is promised that the indoor rinks will remain open well into the warm weather.

INSURANCE

The new three story structure adjoining the L. & L. & G. building in California street, San Francisco, intended to house the Pacific department of the Hartford Fire and Hartford Accident and Indemnity Companies, is rapidly nearing completion. The ground floor will be given over to the city department, the second floor will accommodate the country and underwriting departments and afford space for the private offices of the management, and the accident and indemnity branch will have the entire upper floor space to itself. Every feature of the new building has been planned expressly for the needs of the department management, and when completed will be as perfect as the architects could devise. The front of the building will be of Alaskan marble and Manti limestone, topped with a Florentine hooded cornice of Mission design, the whole producing a particularly pleasing effect.

Now comes the Attorney General with the ruling that before the State can enact legislation toward establishing a social insurance system the constitution of California must be amended. An attempt will be made to do this at the next Legislature. The snags encountered by the commission was a section of the constitution that prohibits the gift of State money to any individual, and that section providing that franchise taxes now paid by public utility companies are in lieu of all other taxes. The State may desire to have employers, including public utilities, and the State itself contribute toward the premium for insurance, but the constitution in its present form does not permit such action.

—Whang! Baseball is on again, and the war bulletins are hidden by the score board.

—The Slaughter trial cost Butte County more than $7,000. A big laundry bill for one community's dirty linen.

—The stories that come back from Mexico about the hikes over the hot sands should inspire the Shriners to enlist.

—Governor Johnson has registered as a Progressive. It is hard to imagine anything more lonely than being a Progressive.

—It is a pity that some of the harmony produced by our symphony orchestra cannot be injected into the board of managers.

—Roosevelt's noisy criticisms of Wilson are inspired not by any sincerity, but by an itch to again slide into the presidential chair.

—This little brush with Mexico has served one good purpose in demonstrating that the United States is some ten years in arrears in the science of aviation.

—Proprietor of the "So Different" saloon was arrested for selling "near beer," which wasn't "so different" from the real thing that any distinction could be made.

—It has been shown that a group of Canadian politicians have been playing a shell game on their government in buying munitions.. They should be made to shell out their illegitimate profits.

—"Life has become a sad April Fool," wrote a young woman who tried suicide on April 1st. And the day, true to its traditions, fooled her through the medium of a doctor who pumped the poison out of her.

—If you go into the country in an automobile you travel too swiftly to observe the scenery properly. If you walk, you are too busy dodging automobiles to be able to observe your surroundings. Therefore, we are forced to the conclusion that scenery is a waste of time and effort on the part of nature.

—When Columbus was raided it was announced that Villa's chief lieutenant, Pablo Lopez, had been killed. When Dodd whanged into Villa's band last week and left dead Greasers all over the landscape, it was announced that Pablo Lopez had been wounded. Wherefore, we wish solemnly to predict that if they keep after this Pablo Lopez they'll get him.

—Woman in Oakland claims that her baby's hunger drove her to forge and pass a check for $75. If she had passed a check more in proportion to a baby's size and appetite the story would have sounded more plausible.

—The police, by raiding the uptown gambling places with search warrants instead of axes are able to salve their consciences by reporting that they can find no gaming outfits. It is like hunting deer with a brass band instead of a gun.

—Chicago man knocked two of his wife's teeth out, felled her to the floor, poured oil on her, and touched her off with a match. She can hardly be blamed for complaining to the police about it. There is such a thing as carrying discipline to extremes.

—There are predictions that the war will end in June, July, August, September, October, November and December, with once in a while the actual day thrown in for good measure. Give a prophet a war and a good durable calendar, and he is perfectly happy.

—Kansas man killed himself and his wife with a razor in front of his two grandchildren. No matter how popular this particular form of diversion becomes, we shall steadfastly maintain that it is something that should not be done in the presence of children.

—It is recorded in the newspaper that when a Japanese entered a Fresno restaurant, killed his divorced wife, slaughtered her new husband, winged the cook and blew his own brains out, there was a panic among the customers. Some sensitive souls are so easily fussed.

—Palo Alto conducted a hobo hotel all winter, housed and fed 1,500 workless men, made them chop wood and plant gardens for a living, and cleared $300 for the season. Which shows that the unemployment problem isn't so bad when it is approached with a little common sense.

—There have been 334 people killed in England by Zeppelin raids. While this was distressing to the victims and their kin, it must be acknowledged that in comparison with the war and its issues, it amounts to almost nothing. The Zeppelins are terrorists, but they haven't really earned their keep.

—Over at Emeryville the voters had to elect a dead man to office. The name was on the ballot, and the owner of it died too soon before election for another name to be substituted. San Francisco has elected quite a number of dead ones in its time, but they would never acknowledge the deceasedness.

—Ishi, the Indian, roamed through the woods, lived on berries, stole an occasional calf, and had a prospect of happy years ahead. But he didn't know what money was. He was captured, brought down to civilization, accumulated $369.90—and died of tuberculosis. Dig out your own moral.

HELP THE MOVEMENT FOR A LOCAL ART CENTER.

Every effort should be made by influential local residents and also by the people of the bay counties to successfully promote the movement now underway in this city by the San Francisco Art Association to establish a permanent art museum, an establishment that will be an adequate center to stimulate and educate the people of the Pacific Coast and delight the finer senses of tens of thousands. The country has reached an era in its feeling for art where the citizens are realizing that art museums are part of the necessity of the higher and broader civic life. Already this movement in America has developed 119 of these institutions in as many leading cities. Forty-two of these centers are connected with educational institutions. How vigorous and natural has been their conception and development is indicated by the fact that they were instituted by private initiative either independently, or as an outgrowth of and connected with other institutions like our universities. Not a single one is a public institution, a tribute to the energy and aspirations of those who achieved these successes.

Very recently the movement to develop art centers in this country has taken a new turn. The people are awakening to the merits and uplifting educational advantages of art museums—and enterprising municipalities now regard it as part of their civic duties to apportion an annual sum for the upkeep and development of a local art museum. The record shows that 24 such cities are now receiving support to a greater or less extent from sums raised by the usual taxation. Many of these fine art collections, like the Corcoran gallery, Washington, and the Field Museum, Chicago—eighteen, according to the record—were started by generous benefactors. Several have originated from international or national expositions, as in Chicago and St. Louis. This is the spring of the movement now underway in this city. Of all the stimulating ideas absorbed by local residents from the recent Exposition, the beautiful landscapes, the architectural and mural effects, the lighting and coloring, and the ideal surroundings and contents of the Palace of Art, made by all odds the deepest and most lasting impressions; impressions that are now appealing strongly for a steady continuance of like aesthetic stimuli. The details of transferring the foundation of such an art museum from what is at hand on the Exposition grounds must be left to the judgment of a competent committee familiar with the intricate details. The upkeep and the life of the present Palace of Art, competent critics declare it can last only a few years, are hard conundrums to crack. A duplicate building of smaller size on the edge of one of the lakes in Golden Gate Park would be ideal, but under the present financial prospects such a materialization is impossible. At present the only practical initial step seems to be to take over the Palace of Art and use it as long as possible, and at the same time form some definite plan for advantageously housing the collection later in some attractive and permanent place.

GUNNING FOR GASOLINE PRICES.

The Federal Trade Commission is still pursuing its inquiry into the reason for the soaring price of gasoline, the quotations of which have jumped fifteen times in less than a year in the East. In the West, the advancing price has been trailing some distance behind the Eastern pacer and gave every sign of attaining a record high price when the associated automobile companies of the country got together and voiced such a vigorous and influential protest that Congress took up the matter, and since then the market price of gasoline has snuggled into a hole, and is as quiescent and shy as a locust chrysalis. It is significant that the price of oil at the well continues to advance in price both in California and in the midcontinent and in the Eastern fields. Dollar oil for low gravity production is now the slogan in the San Joaquin fields, and the prospects are regarded as good to attain that price. Apparently the market price of gasoline is not tied to and conditioned to the fluctuations of the price of crude oil at the well.

Very likely the Federal Trade Commission will poke an interrogative stick into this phase of the problem. Just now it is probing into the large producing and distributing oil concerns by requesting data from all the principal jobbers in the country, seeking the differences in prices which obtain in different localities. Every city over 2,500 population will be compelled to gather jobbers' tank wagon prices on motor gasoline sold to garages, January 1, 1915, and the fluctuations in price which followed during the year. Relative data that influences the price, as transportation charges from the refineries, handling, etc., are likewise being accumulated. It is expected that a preliminary report to Congress on the cost of gasoline will be submitted to Congress early in March. Reports on production and distribution will follow, and the data will unquestionably shed an illuminating light on the peculiar movements in the market price of gasoline generally throughout the country. A preliminary report will be filed within a few days on the increases in the price of gasoline, and something will be said about the discrimination in prices. Suspicion is rife that rebates are being given. The report is expected to develop that this country, the largest producer of crude petroleum in the world, exported about 18 per cent of its total gasoline production last year; that any illegal practices will be prosecuted and punished, and pipe line rates regulated, and that permanent relief can be had by making gasoline from the Rittman, the new government process. Rittman has just left the government service to head a big corporation that will make gasoline under this process.

The recent active rising prices in gasoline has wrought up the choler of several representatives in Congress, who claim to know something about petroleum and its by-products. Randall of California urges government regulation and ownership as the only remedy to solve the gasoline problem. "We shattered Standard Oil to smithereens four years ago," he says, "and to-day it is stronger than ever." To relieve the situation, Bailey of Tennessee has introduced a bill empowering Secretary Lane of the Interior to sink oil wells on government naval reserve lands, and put the product on the market, giving preference by selling to independent refiners. Senator Phelan has submitted a number of practical suggestions bearing on the subject in the shape of a report on the petroleum resources of the United States prepared by M. L. Requa, a local expert and consulting engineer of the Bureau of Mines. With this lively bombardment of lucid and pertinent information, Congress should be able to get a very fair line on the gasoline situation. It is evident that Standard Oil, as usual, is being made the goat in this investigation, and as usual the many companies of that name will most likely submit data and personal information from their experts which will show that quotations on gasoline followed the natural course of supply and demand.

ROOSEVELT AGAIN IN THE SADDLE.

This week, Roosevelt skirmished into a position in the presidential field where he seems to have a commanding hold on the Republican nomination at Chicago. It goes without saying that he will carry also the Progressive following—and he will need them both. The working understanding he is said to have made this week at the Roosevelt-Bacon-Root dinner is a triumvirate as energetic, powerful and united sufficiently to befuddle the "lame ducks" helplessly striving to tumble someway into the presidential pond. This triumvirate is getting team-work out of its colonels and lieutenants, not least of which is Governor Johnson, who is working overtime to advance their interests on the Pacific Coast, his field of action. Though thin in voting strength as compared with like extent of territory in the East, the Western States furnish a patch of ballots well worth solicited handling in the present plight of the Republican party. Only two States of the group, with little Utah leading Wyoming, are regarded as being safe in the elephant column.

Roosevelt on a cayuse and carrying the guidon of the Republican party, if cast into exposition plaster, would make a powerfully crumbling representation of the crumbling processes now underway in the Republican party. After persistent urging for nearly a year, Hughes and Root, the only prominent relics of stand-pat Republicanism, have steadfastly turned down the acceptance of the nomination, realizing full well that there was not the slightest hope of success. Roosevelt, that perennial and insistent child of the limelight, easily shook off the Fairbanks and the Smiths, Jones and Robinsons that sought newspaper nominations in their respective States. So the irrepressible Teddy and his eternal smile are now on the waterway to the November election via Salt River.

Preparedness will naturally be Roosevelt's slogan, and with Preparedness behind him, Teddy, as usual, is eager to imbroil himself and the country into any old kind of a mix-up. Teddy is a broth of a boy for any old scrap so long as he can read his name in the newspapers and fill chapters of American history, with his vivid adventures in world politics. Roosevelt spells War, if placed in the presidential chair: Wilson means Peace, Peace with honor. The voting public of the country are alive to these distinguishing facts. Roosevelt would make this a militaristic nation after the manner of the imperialistic Germany; Wilson is striving to supply such military preparedness as will protect the honor and safety of the country along the ideals of a democracy. Congress, filled with the representatives of the nation, has largely bent its energies along the course suggested by him. Concessions have been made on differences relating to important points, and the indicated result meets the general approval of the nation. Four years ago Roosevelt was told by the votes of the people to go way back and sit down. At the forthcoming November election he will receive a more decisive rebuke. Teddy completed his manufacture of American history when he left the presidential chair after his "second" term; his insistence on butting in on a "second" presidential term creates more comic cartoons than sentences in history.

Bandit Villa is now playing the part of the lively flea in Mexico after the manner of Aguinaldo in the Philippines, but it is only a question of persistence and time to capture him. His kind are growing less and less in this world, and like the bison and the sabre-tooth tiger they are rapidly disappearing from this continent. Mexico is practically the last of the virgin ground for them in this neck of the woods. Villa, like the coyote, the catamount and the rattlesnake, is a difficult animal to catch once he disappears in the fastnesses he knows so well. He has all the advantages to make characteristic gallery plays to show his contempt and derision for his pursuers. The hot chase by Pershing and Dodd is encouraging, and indicates the excellent spirit of the American soldier. Villa is in his element, and will unquestionably dig deeper into the wilderness so as to string out his pursuers and make it difficult for them to communicate with their base of supplies. Carranza's soldiers will be of great assistance in such a situation, and are as anxious as Uncle Sam's boys to round up the bandit and bring peace to prostrated Mexico. Turmoil will continue in Mexico so long as Villa is on the map, and a dead Villa is the only good Villa. Carranza realizes this, and will put forth every energy to end this cut-throat's career. Obregon and the other bandit leaders are second raters, and can more readily be removed from the present zone of their activities. Meanwhile the pursuit will furnish American newspapers at least two broadside pages a day of incidents that ought to have occurred, and help the citizens on this side of the line to digest their breakfast food while awaiting the capture of Villa. When will it be? Quien sabe?

—Lewis D. Brandeis, nominated by President Wilson to fill a vacancy on the United States Supreme Bench, has started on his course to that dignified position by the preliminary vote of 3 to 2 given this week by the sub-committee of the Senate Judiciary committee. It is reported that the full committee will present its report to the Senate on a strict party vote, and that Brandeis will obtain the position on such a vote, an extraordinary action according to the records of such nominations in Congress. From the beginning, the details of this affair have been unusual, and it is evident that the outcome will be of an unusual character, and a surprise to both sides. Brandeis needs no vindication, according to the records, but it is in human nature for his determined opponents to declare that if he fails to attain the nomination he fails of vindication. Those who personally know the man scoff at such a mental attitude.

—The verdict in the Reverend Slaughter case is a commentary on the junk-head of the ordinary jurymen. Attorneys usually accept jurymen on a panel for their low grade of intelligence; they prefer to have headpieces in the jury box that may prove amenable to their magnetism and oratorical persuasion. The Slaughter jury was obviously somewhat of this character, and in addition it possessed a collection of some of the weakest spines on exhibition in Butte County. This was shown in its determined efforts to bring in a compromise verdict so that both the belligerent parties interested in the case would be mollified. The result was, of course, a mix-up, and both parties are more vindictive than ever. The reverend gets a mental splash of the tar brush because he failed of acquittal by an emphatic margin. His henchmen will boldly insist that he was not convicted, "and he never will be," probably not in Butte County, where the feeling is so intensely bitter. But for all practical purposes, the public, outside Oroville, have decisively made up their minds regarding what the result should be. The eager appeal of the jury to make a dicker verdict with the judge reflects the bitter animosities behind the proceedings. The case is one that is a stigma on trials in this State. However, it can sedately take its place without a blush among some of the criminal proceedings as practiced in this city.

—What's in the wind? The irrepressible Jack London has resigned from the Socialist party because they are too tame. He denounces them as having a plentiful "lack of steam, fire, ginger and fight, and a loss of emphasis in the class struggle." Jack has accordingly developed into a Hercules of direct action, in politics, morals, literature and swell togs handled by a personally conducted, intrepid valet. As always, Jack is unique in the method he adopts to develop a more revolutionary movement. He has the author's instinct of holding in suspense just what he intends to do in order to whet keen the curiosity of the public. Just how revolutionary do you intend to become, Jack? Are you with the I. W. W.'s, and the limit of the direct action, or do you intend to plant the red flag a stone's throw further toward the ramparts of plutocratic wealth. It is the rule that all radical men, while garnering wealth, become more conservative, and acquire the mental tenets of the plutocrats, but London, who has been fattening on an increasing income ever since the movies began to picture his vivid tales, has taken the reverse course and is becoming more revolutionary with his increasing bank deposits. Does this mean, Jack, that you will break out later with the Carnegie eczema of giving away endowed libraries?

—To Americans of the second generation, and filled with the fundamentals of democracy, it is inconceivable to find any good reason why the war crafts of any belligerent nation should fly over the cities of its enemies and drop explosives on the streets and houses below with the object of killing and maiming the residents below. The explanation usually given is that it "creates terror," and this terror is supposed to spread till the terrorized nation begs for peace. The result is almost the reverse, and naturally creates hatred, a determination for revenge and further enlistments in the army to attack the ranks of the bomb throwing nation. This has been the usual result in the nations so attacked. The maiming of helpless women and children, and non-combatants, can create no other feeling. Such attacks are no more than a sting of a gadfly on the nation at large. If the war has taught any lesson it has shown how strong are the brutal passions still rampant in man, despite the so-called civilization and culture inculcated for the past two thousand Christian years. With the new chemical gases, blast flames and special shells for maiming their foes, the belligerents surpass the ancients in deforming human beings. The ancients made it a practice to kill all of their defeated foes; the moderns slaughter all they can with the use of large calibre guns made expressly for general slaughter, and make cripples of countless thousands. Others are saved from the poisonous gases to go through a burdensome existence for the rest of their days. The Devil seems to have won out in the game of War.

—Somebody kicked into Gossip Row this week a tip "from the inside" that Mayor Rolph was to be handed the Lieutenant-Governorship to fill the chair made vacant by the demise of Eshleman, and that he is to succeed to the nomination of Governor at the regular election. Supervisor Eddie Wolf is to be promoted to the vacant Mayor's chair, a shift which will create a vacancy in the Board of Supervisors, and which will naturally be filled with some favored son of labor, according to the likes and dislikes of the leaders of that party. This tip furnishes a nifty scenario to stage at the present political juncture, and the labor leaders would work overtime to bring it about. That Rolph is being groomed for the Governorship has been an open secret for some time. The News Letter gave notice to that effect early in last November. The only political misplay of any consequence that Rolph has made was his surprising and determined effort to carry his favorite Supervisor, Kortick, to victory at the last election, a move that upset the plans of Supervisors Vogelsang, Murdock and other old-time cinches who fell by the wayside and smashed the machine. Like Johnson, Rolph has been as consistently a good friend of labor, and labor, as usual, will get out of him as Governor all that they can screw, following their usual custom—and the taxpayers will pay the bills.

—What's wrong with the traffic movement on this peninsula? Every Monday morning the daily papers print a list of names of people who have been killed or mangled in Sunday's automobile accidents. Apparently nothing is being done to prevent this slaughter, for the casualties are increasing with the months. Last Sunday there was one killed outright and twelve who received grave injuries, varying from a broken spine to bodily bruises. At the rate these casualties are occurring, the automobile will acquire a reputation as a "killer" that will rival that of the notorious 42 centimeter guns of the Germans. With a few scythes projecting from each side of the chassis, it would easily eclipse the death dealing records of the scythe chariots of the ancients. Any ordinary automobile that has loaded up at a beach resort seems to be a loaded possibility of destruction on a Sunday outing down the peninsula. Some machines without these "loads" seem to contract a contrariness of gait and steering when they get mixed in the throng of wheels that form the two processions going and coming along this and other great highways. Under present conditions, competent drivers are as apt as the "loaded" ones to be caught in a sudden mix-up. The most conservative of residents, taking their afternoon airing in leisurely fashion, are almost as likely to end their drive at the Coroner's, or the Emergency Hospital, as at their own homes. The present system is a thriving one for the doctors, and a taxing one on the accident insurance companies. Action should be taken at once to remedy this increasing evil.

TAMALPAIS

By Fred Emerson Brooks

O, Tamalpais! O, Tamalpais!
Beside the gate to paradise
Where vessels ride;
Where Nature's gathered wonders lie:
Sequoia old as Sinai;
An opal bay where sweeps the sky-
-Caressing tide.

Lone Mountain Cross to consecrate
The City Beautiful in fete
And festival.
Where would a mountain rather be
Than by the eternal summer sea,
Where mermaids riot in their glee
And sea-birds call.

No thunder echoes come to thee
From heaven's concealed artillery,
Nor fire-bolts fall;
No armies come with brogans red
To reap the harvest of the dead,
But thousands come with joyous tread
At Pleasure's call.

And when the lamp of day burns low,
The halo and the after glow
Around thee cling,
Till in the half-light we discern
The woodland sprites their incense burn
To Manito, as thru the fern
Their censers swing.

The Golden Gateway of the globe
Where charming Nature dropped her robe
To lure the sea.
The dawn-shot arrows pierce thy breast;
The Day-God drinking in the West
Flings purple wine upon thy crest,
Baptizing thee.

Thy feet are in the Orient tides;
Thy crest the East and West divides.
How leisurely
The sluggish sea mist hovers o'er,
Thy purple splendor to adore;—
Far sentry on the outer shore
Of the greater sea.

Some Manito made thee his shrine
And on thy crest lay down supine
Athwart the blue.
His form in silhouette we trace—
The torso and the upturned face,
While moon and stars forget their pace
To gaze anew.

Squadrons of dreadnaught cumuli
Make moving pictures on the sky;
While Manito—
His locks flung down the Northern slope—
Reads us the heavenly horoscope
That gives the halo of our hope
A brighter glow.

SPORTS AND PASTIMES

BY OUTSIDER

"Outsiders see most of the game."—Old Saw.

Now that the baseball season has begun the corner of Market and Kearny streets will be impassable again during the early hours of the afternoon, and the perspiring sporting writers on the dailies will have an opportunity to justify their princely stipends.

From now on the Mayors of the United States will go into practice for the quaint ceremony known as "throwing the first ball."

There are certainly a new lot of boobs come along with each generation, but to men whose memory of sporting events goes back over twenty years it is difficult to see how the public could ever fall for the old wrestling bunk again. I suppose that there will yet be six day bicycle and walking hippodromes, and even mounted sword contests. What a world of encouragement this must be to the gold brick, green goods men, and other artists of that ilk.

There is keen competition among the peninsula golf clubs to secure the northern Californian championships this month, but if the award were left to the writer, the Menlo Country Club would get the event. It is the only prominent local club that has not had some big general tourney in recent years, and certainly it has a course which is stiff enough to try the skill even of a Harry Davis or a Douglas Grant.

The dailies have filed their usual monthly report to the effect that Harry Davis is back in his old form; also Jack Neville. While I do not put these two in the same class, yet from from what I have seen of Douglas Grant's playing, I am of the opinion that he is in a class by himself, so far as this coast is concerned. Without knowing the names of entrants to the Western Golf championships to be held at Del Monte in July. I am willing to risk my judgment on him against any other one man that may be picked.

Makers of Good Glasses

A Phenomenal New Lens Invented

The newly patented double vision glasses called "Caltex Oneplex" Bifocals are without question the most perfect and satisfactory lenses of their kind being made in the world today. The necessity of using two pairs of glasses has been entirely done away with as these wonderful lenses combine both reading and distance corrections in a single lens. Many who could not heretofore wear bifocals are wearing the "Caltex" in perfect comfort as all the annoying features of other bifocals have been excluded from the "Caltex." Remember the name and insist on "Caltex" as there are imitations of the genuine.

Fashions vs. Convention

BY GORDON DUVAL.

(The Editor wishes to emphasize that the foregoing article must not be construed in the light of championing any cause. It merely seeks to probe the fundamental reasons prompting the "flirtation epidemic," against which there has been such an outcry during the past few years, and in plain language serves to remind one wing of the fairer sex of their subconscious share and burden of responsibility in contributing to prevailing conditions.)

In dealing with a subject so delicate as that of feminine display, it must in no way be concluded that I am inclined to prudishness or narrow thinking. On the contrary, I frankly admit, in common with most men—a sneaking regard for a pretty ankle or a shapely calf, and the object of this discourse is not so much to condemn the display of these charms as it is to argumentatively point out the inconsistencies of modern convention, or, to make my meaning clearer, the conflicting elements existing between modern convention and modern fashion.

For instance, to address a woman in the street with whom you are unacquainted now constitutes an offense punishable by a fine or imprisonment, and many women, approached in this manner, are inclined to be appalled at such an insult, and unable to account for the presumption of the rebuffed one, whom they immediately designate as a cad.

This is all very well in its way. No one would suggest for an instant that a woman should respond to the advances of a stranger. But looking matters straight in the eye from the other viewpoint—is not the woman equally, and in many cases more so, to blame than the man? In most countries the law forbids the actual tempting of thieves as a means to conviction. You are not allowed, for instance, to drop a wallet in the street and stand by to arrest the first person who picks it up without endeavoring to return it. Therefore, the argument naturally arises: Is it not a common sequence of events if to-day's convention walks hand in hand with to-day's fashion, for after all is said and done, one is controlled more or less by the other, and if the present-day Eve chooses to tempt the present day Adam by a similar modus operandi to that employed by her primitive and less cultured sister of Eden, why raise her voice in outraged dignity when the inevitable result is attained?

For some years the trend of feminine fashion has inclined to one direction only, the direction to "minimize" in every conceivable way, incidentally displaying openly and to advantage all that an elastic convention and still more elastic modesty does not actually forbid, and even that which positively cannot be openly displayed is made doubly suggestive and alluring by well calculated and clinging confections.

From the crinolines of our grandmothers, the twentieth century has brought with it the hobble, slit and abbreviated skirts of our sisters, and but recently the diaphanous skirt bid well to transparently veil the limbs of other people's sisters. The desire of many maids of to-day appears centered upon parading in public showing as much seductively encased limb as possible, as much alluringly powdered breast as she dares, and to have everything in her dresses as transparent as man-made laws will permit. But, mark you, this display is to be looked at, merely to be absorbed for optical edification only, and ill-betide he who, with impulse likened to the child in the museum, stretches out his hand to seek a closer acquaintance with so lavishly displayed charms with the stereotyped "haven't I met you before" sort of thing.

I was present at the police court finale of such a case a short while ago in New York. "Ten days," said the magistrate to the erstwhile Lothario, and no doubt the fallen one disconsolately pondered at leisure in his cell upon what the woman who was instrumental in putting him there would have thought of his chivalry had he meted out the same contemptible treatment to her less fortunate earthly sisters of Broadway, when he had been subjected to the smirking blandishments so common to their kind.

However, this is only by the way. We hold no brief for the man who makes a habit of seeking promiscuous female acquaintances and most heartily condemn the practice, but we have less sympathy for that spiteful species of womankind who, either for prudishness, malicious satisfaction or cheap advertisement, is pleased to construe the slightest overture into one of evil intent and hastens to hail the humiliated delinquent before a magistrate, and thus converts what in all probability was only comedy into something, in many cases, approaching tragedy.

I put it to you, Readers of the Jury: Why are sparsely clad limbs, seductively encased bodies, powdered busts and painted faces coupled with alluringly and immodestly dolled up feminine charms, flaunted with such lavish disregard, if not to attract and excite the feelings of the opposite sex? Is the blame for sometimes attempting to seek closer acquaintance to be laid wholly on the man?

It is an indisputable fact that outwardly the man is infinitely more modest than the woman, which is emphasized by the fact that it is only man-made laws which prevent a great percentage of women from "minimizing" further in their apparel, and incidentally robbing the rising generation of that splendid respect and courtesy paid our grandmothers by our grandfathers, in those dim days when maidenly modesty gave a touch of feminine mystery that doubled a woman's powers of allurements and commanded for her worshipful respect.

When the day comes, if it ever does, of meeting men on a common ground, she will find that the "legal rights" she has won are belittled into insignificance as compared to the "courtesy rights" she has lost, and before she can even hope for this she must learn to rely more upon herself for repelling unwelcome blandishments emanating from the opposite sex.

I am one of those who staunchly adhere to the belief that in the vast majority of cases any girl is safe from the "masher," who wishes to be. She has merely to look ahead and continue her way unrelentingly, when ninety-nine men out of a hundred will accept this frigid lack of response as his "conge," and evaporate with all possible speed.

There is, of course, the more annoying and dangerous species of "masher," and for this class the law provides many statutes under which he can be dealt with. This article does not deal with such hybrids. It deals exclusively with the theory, a theory the reader may find difficult to challenge, that were it not for the trend in which feminine fashion is now advancing, involving, as it does, a superfluous display of hose and everything tending to arouse feelings otherwise than platonic within the breast of the average full-blooded young man of to-day, this sort of evil would be very considerably decreased.

Eve bore the brunt of the punishment for first tempting man, but even she is supposed to have conducted her operations without additional aid in the way of seductive adornment. Had she, like her modern sister, tantalized poor old Adam with the glorified suggestion of the unseen, I venture to think he would have fallen more quickly, for surely the evolution of fashion makes the present-day Eve infinitely more seductive than her pristine sister, who, in the way of physical allurements, was at least modest enough to leave well enough alone.

The nearer to civilization we arrive, the further from nature we stray, for what healthy-minded individual would dispute the fact that woman as she was created is far less likely to inspire the physical emotions in man than the average woman of to-day, whose admitted sole ambition is to dress and exaggerate the charms nature bestowed with the one idea of appealing to the opposite sex.

If an allowance of modesty is to be sacrificed at the shrine of fashion, it is only compatible with those precise scales of human nature that the same allowance of modesty must be sacrificed at the shrine of convention, and broad-mindedness exercised toward overtures which the general style of the modern Eve undoubtedly courts.

Miss Maynard and "De Monk" IT.

At this writing it is too early to dress the chief event of the week in the past tense, and drape it in the glorified adjectives of successful achievement. But there is no doubt that if the weather does the proper thing, this open air market which Mrs. Will Crocker and her cohorts are conducting will be the hand-illuminated event on the crowded calendar of Benefits which Mrs. Crocker has sponsored since the war took the plug out of the noblest resolve to let charity begin and end at home.

Many amusing incidents have propped up the preliminaries. For example, not less than six women were seized with the same inspiration, each one secure in the belief that she had the only idea of the kind that was lodged in the human brain. By the process of evolution each one arrived at a monkey, which may be inverted Darwinism, but is a perfectly scientific statement of the fact.

Miss Sallie Maynard captured the monkey. The other five women, each with the showman's instinct for the value of the little monk, trimmed up their best Italian accent and went out in search of the Italian who owns the monkey, only to find at the end of the long trail that Miss Maynard had broken all speed laws in pursuit of man and monk, and had signed up the monk for an all day feature at her booth.

Two of the disappointed ones met somewhere on the trail where the underbrush was not too thick for recognition. Said one: "The only tip I had on his whereabouts was a recollection that not long ago he was arrested—so I got a man who knew Chief White to have his address looked up at the Hall of Justice, and by the time that I got it, Miss Maynard had him."

Said the other one: "I chased him on foot and by motor around the streets of town, but could never run into him, and finally an Italian grocer over in North Beach gave me this Oakland address. To think that I should come all the way over here only to be disappointed!"

The "Monkey Man" does not realize that he is probably the only suburbanite who has had calls from five members of the San Francisco smart set in one week. Or at least, if he does appreciate it, he is careful not to show how set up he feels, and goes about his business of getting pennies in the little tin cup of the monkey in the same picturesque rags that he wore before the smart set descended upon his hovel.

Secret Archives of the Belgian Market.

One of the human elements to be reckoned with in every game of this sort is the desire for the most favorable location. Mrs. Crocker assigned the places, and thereby showed that she has matchless courage, for of course there were many who were disgruntled at the assignments and the listening ear could detect mutterings about social wires being pulled for outside stands, and all the usual manifestations of discontent. The German desire for a place in the sun could not be much stronger than the demands of some of the amateur Belgian market women for favored places in Union Square. However, every one was finally placated into a semblance of contentment, and when Union Square transforms itself this Saturday morning into a vendors' market, the buzz of competition will doubtless be just the necessary and legitimate kind to make a noise like a success.

However, it must be admitted that during the preliminaries there were sounds that smote the air that could not be confused with the cooing of doves. For example, one morning two women met in the park and discovered that they were each in charge of the same kind of commodity, whereas each had been laboring under the impression that she was to have a monopoly of that particular thing. It took the united efforts of the committee to convince them that it was good policy to duplicate in this way, and they went their way festooned in smiles. Mrs. Crocker and Mrs. Vernon Kellogg were deep in consultation with Mr. Mullgardt, who designed the booths when, from opposite paths, each woman was seen scurrying back, and where the paths converged they met to their discomfiture, but not final discouragement, for in chorus that could be heard several benches away, they dueted about the right of each to the superior location of a booth. How the committee finally adjusted these affairs and pulled all the kinks out of the temperamental is a matter of the secret archives.

Mrs. Whitelaw Reid and Spellbinding Germs.

There is no doubt that the New York women of wealth and fashion respond more quickly to the modern demands made upon all women these days than the women of any other city in the country. In New York there are so many women in the smart set who could not truthfully say "Unassustomed as I am," that an Ananias Club on that basis would have to put weights on the membership lists to keep them from climbing above the sky line.

Mrs. Norman Whitehouse is just one of the many Newporters who have gone in for public affairs, and can make a rattling good speech under any circumstance from a soap box on a street corner to an after-dinner background. The women interested in public affairs in New York always have an embarrassment of choice when it comes to getting a representative of the smart set on the program, so many are the women of social rank who are qualified as orators.

California women uphold the reputation of their sex when it comes to private loquaciousness; they show proper form in the indoor and outdoor pastime of all branches of conversation, including soliloquy, but there are few, if any, women in the smart set of San Francisco who will make a speech in public. Somehow, the germ has never inoculated B'lingum.

However, a way has now been paved for any germ that is not too devitalized to be worthy of the name. Perhaps in the future we can put up a B'lingum team of spell-binders against Newport. For Mrs. Whitelaw Reid, who is visiting here, paved the way by accepting an invitations to speak at an open meeting of the Navy League at the Fairmont Hotel. Mrs. Reid, unlike some of the younger New York women who go in for a great deal of that kind of thing, does not particularly enjoy the sensation of facing an audience, but when she is interested enough—as she is in this preparedness campaign—she does not refuse to raise her voice in the cause.

Take example from Mrs. Reid, all High-and-Mightynesses who have potential possibilities as speakers for the local platform needs the social lustre.

Dansants Trip on Heels of Easter.

The list of people working for the dansant to be given at the St. Francis Hotel on Easter Monday, April 24th, is a guarantee of the success of the affair, and insures a large sum of money for the Canon Kip Memorial Mission. About fifty tables were subscribed for the day that the reservations were opened, and the others are going like the proverbial hotcakes. The women interested in this settlement are the representatives of most of the old California families, and include the Mesdames Seward McNear, F. R. Beaver, Louis Monteagle, Cyrus Walker, Ira Pierce, Philip Lansdale, Richard Girvin, Joseph D. Grant, Sidney Smith, James Carolan, Henry T. Scott, William B. Bourne, H. M. A. Miller, Edgar De Pue, Henry J. Crocker and a score of others.

This will be the first big tea dance after Easter, and will bring out all the new afternoon finery. A number of the sub-set who are home for the Easter holidays from boarding school and college are with impatience twirling their toes in anticipation of the dansants that trip on the heels of Easter.

On Tuesday evening, April 25th, there will be a supper dance at the St. Francis Hotel for the benefit of a Chapel at Fort Winfield Scott. Mesdames William Hinckley Taylor, Frank Griffin, A. M. Hunter and Andrew Welch have banded themselves into an intrepid quartette, determined to raise the funds for this place of worship for the enlisted men.

Any one of this quartette could singly accomplish more than a dozen of the average women, and together they cannot spell anything but success. So the new chapel is as tangible and assured a thing as though the contracts were let and the bricks and mortar for the foundation delivered.

Mr. and Mrs. Williard P. Hawley, Jr., of Portland, Ore., recently entertained with a dinner at the Hotel Oakland for Mr.

and Mrs. C. N. Barlow and son of Oakland, and Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Sewick of Berkeley.

Friday night, Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Clark of Honolulu, who are staying at the Hotel Oakland, entertained with a dinner for Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Wetmore, who have recently returned from Honolulu. Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Scotchler and Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Richards were the other invited guests.

Monday, April 10th, the Daughters of the American Revolution will hold their monthly affair in the Rose Reception Room at the Hotel Oakland. The business meeting at 2:30 will be followed by tea, which will be served at 4:30.

That the Kindergarten of the Hotel St. Francis has found a very warm response from society is evidenced by the number of entertainments which are being given for the smart youngsters who patronize this unique institution. The latest affair which was given last Wednesday was a birthday party for Ramona Vinson, in celebration of her eighth anniversary, and it developed surprising ingenuity on the part of the children in carrying out a real "Mother Goose" affair—there being a Jack Horner pie, with favors enclosed, and other features from the classic story books. The clay modeling of these young hopefuls is really astonishingly good—chickens and rabbits being the favorite subjects. Other features at the party were songs and pantomimes.

A military atmosphere, in which, however, the kind note of relief predominates, pervaded the Hotel St. Francis this week. There has been the private view of Albert Besnard's paintings in the ball room, at which Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Clark, Mr. and Mrs. Francis Carolan, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. H. Crocker acted as sponsors. The money raised from this exhibition has been sent to Europe for the families of French soldier artists.

The pleasure of seeking California wild flowers in their native haunts is in store for those persons who attend the Wild Flower Fete at the Fairmont Hotel during the three day exhibit, commencing April 22d. Tiny trees from mountain forests, bits of sod and mosses from distant meadows, will be brought into the city to provide miniature field and forest setting for the dainty blossoms. The fete is given as a benefit for the San Francisco Boys' Outing Farm at Saratoga. Individuals, clubs, botanical societies and counties will offer exhibits from every part of the State. Miss Elsie Zeile will preside over a table devoted to choice specimens secured in Marin County by the Sierra Club. Admission to the fete will be 50 cents.

Bruguere's San Diego Exposition Photographs.

Francis Bruguere's photographic studies of the San Diego Exposition will be exhibited in the gallery of Paul Elder & Co., beginning April 10th. The nation-wide reputation of Mr. Bruguere's work, together with the interest occasioned by the recent dedication of the 1916 Exposition at San Diego, makes this exhibition most timely.

PRESENCE OF MIND.

Court had been in session, and there were a lot of visiting lawyers who proved to be congenial souls, and consequently a little game of poker was started down at the hotel. A young local attorney had stayed out several nights, but finally the breakfast-table arguments became of such a nature that he promised to be home early that evening. But the game proved too alluring, and when he arose for his hat and coat the clock showed two-fifteen. He mounted the front porch with much trepidation, slipped off his shoes, pulled off his clothes in the hall, slipped into the bedroom, and began crawling into bed with the stealth of experience.

"Our pet dog had a habit of insisting on jumping on the bed on cold nights," he confided to a friend later, "so when I began to slide under the covers my wife stirred in her sleep and pushed me on the head. 'Get down, Bruno, get down!' she said. And I want to tell you," he smiled, "I just did have presence of mind enough to lick her hand, and she dozed off again!"—Harper's Magazine.

"What is in the mail from daughter?" asked mother, eagerly. "A thousand kisses," answered father, grimly, "and sixteen handkerchiefs, two waists and four batches of ribbons for you to wash and mend."—Kansas City Journal.

THE AMERICAN PEERAGE.

The Yankee Peerage is a thing
That soars to-day on buoyant wing
With Lords and Markisses and sitch
Selected from our home-made rich.
The glad news cometh o'er the sea
That George of sovereign majesty,
Because of service mixed with coin,
Exalts our Lord of Tenderloin.

And there be others who anon—
A simple term for later on—
May seek the gilded coronet,
Like Claude, my Lord of Kitchenette,
Most worthy vassal of the crown,
For that he holds our navy down,
And keeps our army in control
Hid deep within a pigeonhole.

And Baron Viereck we may see
Ere many days have ceased to be,
For that sweet George of Teuton fame
Has helped to play the Briton's game
With sundry gibes and barbey gaffs,
And vitriolic paragraphs,
The which have served to weary us
And make the hyphen odious.

And possibly ere many days
An Earl of Jitney's verlant bays
Will decorate the brow adroit
Of Henry, Lord of all Detroit,
For venturings of Peace whereby
The Bird was landed high and dry
And everybody came to pipe
The time to eat him wasn't ripe.

And—oh, the score of Candidates
That on the sovereign favor waits!—
His Grace the Duke of Theodore,
Who'd ease the monarch of his War,
Now straining at the leash to get Into those trenches dank and wet,
And make the quarrels of the Throne
No longer George's, but his own.

And Baron Bill of tongue so free—
They'd spell that Baron with an E—
For vast expenditures in breath
To talk Bellona grim to death;
The list runs on and on and on,
From Ponkapog to Washington,
Of worthy lords, dukes, earls and barts,
Ripe for the plucking in our marts.

PERSONAL ADVENTURES IN THE "HALLS" THIS WEEK

BY HENRY McDONALD SPENCER

"Gee," said the ex-Leading Lady, reflectively, as she switched her chewing gum after reading last week's "Personal Adventure"—"Gee, why don't you say something about the performers occasionally, instead of filling your columns with 'Ts'? You writing ginks sure do hate yourselves."

"I am prepared to admit, my dear," I said, "that as modest violets we shrink from the public gaze with a trepidation almost equal to that displayed by the ladies of the stage—especially the burlesque stage." The latter I added for good measure, as my vis-a-vis had been a queen of burlesque; and would be still if there were any burlesque and she were not too fond of sweets and other fat producing foods.

"I suppose you think that's a quick come-back," was the full-throated reply. "Well, suppose we call the score tied, what then?"

"You are at the bat and started this thing, then what?" I signalled the waiter, and after the mystic "the same," she replied:

"Why don't you write about . . . ?"

"About what?" I said, with a large gesture, waving aside the change. And when you come to think about it, the fact hits you in the face that aside from a small, neighborhood theatre in the Mission there is not a single house in San Francisco this week where the spoken drama is played; and those to whom the personality of the play is an important factor in their enjoyment of the thing played are obliged to seek consolation in the vaudeville houses, which, incidentally, also present pictures.

And so to the Orpheum

One of the by-products of the war has been the closing of many of the European opera houses and the consequent release of song birds who otherwise would not be available for American engagements. It seems almost callous even to suggest that we are by way of benefiting through the world's agony; nevertheless, it is to these circumstances that the Orpheum management assures us the presence of Ciccolini is due. Even the ex-Leading Lady, with all the natural jealousy of another and a past performer, could find no fault with the wondrous volume of melody which poured from the young Italian tenor's throat. In character and quality surpassing anything we have had in the two-a-day for so long back that I can remember no further, Ciccolini's voice is heard in French, Italian and English songs—popular enough to please the groundlings and classic enough for the illuminati. A marked feature of his singing is its being absolutely true; in fact I would say that he tends to sharp, if anything, when excited, instead of flattening. Perhaps an American audience would like a little more tenderness in songs such as "Peggy Machree," and he has a tendency which is noticeable in the Italian method to produce that dramatic catch, gasp or sob in the throat; but after all, these things are mere matters of personal predilection, and do not detract from the merit of the rendition. This number is well worth the price of admission, and, indeed, about exhausts the credit side of this week's bill, among the newcomers at least.

A perfectly good skit is presented by George Howell & Company, called the "Red-Fox Trot," in which the dear old familiar characters of a giddy young wife fond of dancing, her hard-working "noble American" type of husband, and a sly young serpent who invades their Eden with a proficiency in the latest dancing steps as the bait instead of the apple of theology. The young cabaret sharp mistakes the lady's interest in dancing for a more personal feeling, and promptly proceeds to make love to her, while the husband writhes in an agony of doubt and jealousy behind a curtain in full view of the audience. Needless to say, the lady is no hussy, no indeed; she promptly spurns her would be lover with the usual "you are mistaken in the kind of a woman I am." Husband then appears in view of the performers as well as of the audience, and does the old "There's-the-door" stunt. There was only one depth of banality left unplumbed, and that was to have threatened to slap Lothario on his wrist watch, which would indeed have got 'em going. I present this suggestion in all seriousness to George Howell and Co., for surely both actors and playwright realize the kind of stuff they are putting over as well as I do, and I can only say that they are getting away with it.

Willa Holt Wakefield is an old time performer who caught her auditors' sympathies from the start; Valentine and Bell had a bicycle act with some new features, although bicycle acts surely would have been given in the Ark if there had been any bicycles then. Benny and Woods got a number of hands for a piano and violin number, but there again I disagree with the public, and—Benny and Woods.

At Pantages this Week

"The Misery of a Hansom Cab" is the featured attraction at the Pantages, and Al. Fields, who served a year at the old Fisher's on O'Farrell street as the principal funmaker, is back again with his famous delineation of the slangy cab driver. Norton and Earl have a smart dancing act. "The Boarding School Girls," with a clever eccentric female comedienne, "Tommy" Allen, is a bright act. Flavilla plays the accordion well. Morris Golden, Reed and Wood present musical acts, and Cooke and Rothert have an acrobatic novelty. The third incident of "The Iron Claw," the Chronicle-Pathe serial, is also presented. This serial, by Arthur Stringer, is described as being the most thrilling ever written, and each episode so far has added to the excitement. Love, jealousy, hate and revenge all combine to put thrills in every line of the printed story, and the startling situations are visualized faithfully on the screen. The next episode, the fourth, of "The Iron Claw," will appear in the Chronicle next Sunday.

Great Ovation at Final S. F. Symphony Concerts

The final pair of concerts were given by the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra on Friday (week) and Sunday afternoons. The performance on Friday was somewhat in the nature of a farewell ovation, and the greenhouses of the peninsula must have been stripped to provide the flowers which were passed over the foots, and which filled the stage. The "Eroica" of Beethoven was the main offering, and it is safe to say that Beethoven was rendered as never before in San Francisco, and the concluding demonstration swept audience, players and leader off their feet.

People's Philharmonic Orchestra.—The People's Philharmonic Orchestra, which gave the first of a series of ten popular symphony concerts at the Pavilion Rink on Thursday evening, will continue to present attractive programs at intervals of two weeks at the same place. As the date for the second concert, however, falls during Holy Week, and as many important musical events are scheduled between now and then, it has been deemed advisable to postpone it for one week, making the date Thursday evening, April 27th, when the orchestra of sixty-five artists, under the baton of Nikolai Sokoloff, will give a Beethoven-Wagner program. Miss May Mukle, the English 'cellist, will be the soloist of the occasion.

Advance Notices

Calve at the Orpheum.—The Orpheum bill for next week will have as its headline attraction Calve, the world's most famous "Carmen," and one of the greatest prima donnas grand opera has ever produced. Her engagement is limited to one week only. Associated with Madame Calve will be Gasparri, the eminent Italian grand opera tenor, and her husband. Madame Calve will sing in French, selections from "Sappho," and the Habanera from "Carmen." Signor Gasparri will render in Italian arias from "Tosca" and "The Girl of the Golden West," and for a finale both will be heard in the famous duo from "Faust."

Lillian Kingsbury and her company will appear in a one-act play called "The Coward." Its situations are strong and dramatic, and Miss Kingsbury, as the wife of a millworker who has heeded the call to arms, is credited with an intensely human performance.

Ray Dooley, with the assistance of Elmer Graham and Gordon Dooley, will give a combination of melody, dancing and jollity.

Pietro, the piano accordionist, will present one of his most delightful programmes.

Miss Catherine Powell, America's international danseuse, will appear in a series of classical dances, assisted by Adele.

The Le Grohs, pantomimic contortionists, will introduce an eccentric novelty.

Benny and Woods in their piano and violin selections, and Valentine and Bell in their bicycle feats, will also be included in this bill.

The third of the series of beautiful colored travelogues, consisting of motion picture scenes taken especially for the Orpheum circuit, will be exhibited.

A special feature of this bill will be Gertrude Vanderbilt and George Moore in singing and dancing novelties.

Columbia Theatre.—The Columbia Theatre announces the opening of its summer season of drama for Monday night, April 17th, when May Robson appears for the first time in this city in her latest comedy success, "The Making Over of Mrs. Matt," an entirely satisfactory vehicle for the display of this inimitable comedienne's clever work. The play is from the pen of James Forbes, who is best remembered as the author of "The Chorus Lady," which won him distinction in this country as well as in England. It is replete with quaint sayings and witticisms, develops a picturesque love story, and offers Miss Robson an ideal role. The play has a moral, and exudes sunshine and laughter, as well as choice comedy. It is intended for young and old, as it touches the hearts of youth and age alike with its quaint humor, its well-shaded expressions and its laugh and tear compelling impersonations. Miss Robson will have a large and capable supporting cast in her support. An excellent stage setting has been provided for the production. The sale of seats for the engagement opens Thursday morning, April 13th. Matinees will be given on Wednesdays and Saturdays.

Big Bill at Pantages.—Chris Richards, the noted English eccentric comedian, who has achieved the impossible in having Alexander Pantages sign a contract for the rest of his natural life, will top the new show at the local Pantages Theatre on Sunday. The theatrical magnate says that the dapper Richards has his countryman, Charlie Chaplin, whipped to a frazzle when it comes to mugging in the movies, all of which we will judge next week. Another one of the allies on the same bill is dashing Michael Emmett, the romantic young Irish tenor, who has been picked to take the place of Andy Mack. Chauncey Olcott and other aspirants to the throne of Celtic musical comedy. "A Glimpse of Old Ireland" is Emmett's vaudeville packet. "The Dream Pirates" is a three-a-day version of the "Peter Pan" type with bloodthirsty pirates, pretty dancing attendants and a full rigged pirate ship. The seven Bracks,

ONLY A DAD.

Only a dad, with a tired face
Coming home from the daily race,
Bringing little of gold or fame
To show how well he has played the game,
But glad in his heart that his own rejoice
To see him come and to hear his voice.

Only a dad of a brood of four,
Out of ten million men or more,
Plodding along in the daily strife,
Bearing the whips and scorns of life
With never a whimper of pain or hate
For the sake of those who at home await.

Only a dad, neither rich nor proud,
Merely one of the surging crowd,
Toiling, striving, from day to day,
Facing whatever may come his way,
Silent, whenever the harsh condemn,
And bearing it all for the love of them.

Only a dad, but he gives his all
To smooth the way for his children small,
Doing, with courage stern and grim,
The deeds that his father did for him;
This is the line that for him I pen:
Only a dad, but the best of men.

BY THE WAY.

The Chosen (Korean) Governor-General has recently ordered the repair of the ruins of the old Shiragi dynasty tombs with a view to preserving the historic remains of ancient Korea. The workmen employed in the repair of a nine-story tower discovered an old stone coffin of about two square feet in the third story of the tower. In the coffin were a jeweled ornament, a gold bell, a silver bell, some old coins, a gold vase, a stone gourd, some comma-shaped jewels and several other rare articles, all relics of ancient times, dating back one thousand three hundred years.

The busy silkworms of Japan are to find a chemical-mechanical rival. At Yonezawa a plant has been secured for the purpose of manufacturing artificial silk. This is the first attempt in the industry in Japan. In compliance with the request of the company, professors in the Yonezawa Polytechnic Institute have been engaged for some time past in the perfection of the process of manufacturing the goods, and a patent has recently been taken out for the result obtained. The invention of the process has been arrived at quite independently of the German invention, and it is reported to show a great improvement on the foreign method.

A shipbuilding company just incorporated at Albany has standardized its designs and methods so that it will save 20 per cent of the cost and 50 per cent of the time of building a 6,000 ton cargo steamship. Specifically it hopes to be able to turn out such ships in 15 days. The efficiency and the preparedness experts will be delighted—if accomplishment equals expectation.

—The Techau Tavern Show Girl Revue is as charming an entertainment as one can find in the city. The costumes, gorgeous yet artistic, the songs, new and catchy, the girls themselves, piquant, chic, vivacious, create an ensemble which is very satisfying to lovers of the unusual and the beautiful. No expense has been spared to make the Revue a performance which would be creditable to Broadway. Mr. E. G. Wood, the successful Eastern producer, has a happy faculty of creating a smooth and finished production, and his piano accompaniment to the songs proclaims him a musician of rare accomplishments. Last Saturday large quantities of La Boheme perfume were presented as souvenirs to the lady guests, and the same famous perfume will be distributed each Saturday.

—“Have you any creepers about your house?” “Sure I have—one.” “What kind is it?” “Remarkably fat, breaks up everything that it can get hold of, and also makes me walk the floor with it all night. Oh, yes, I have a creeper.”—Baltimore American.

—Crawford—I see the belligerents are calling out the older reservists. Do you think that married men should be compelled to fight? Crabshaw—Why not? They are used to it.—Life.

—“Look here, Mose, I thought you were going to be baptized into the Baptist church?” “Yaas, sah, I is. But I done been sprinkled into de 'Piscopal till de summeh comes.”—Dallas News.

—“I give my wife half my salary every week to spend on the housekeeping and herself?” “And what do you do with the other half of your salary?” “Oh, my wife borrows that.”—Houston Post.

—“Another embezzlement, I see. Isn't it odd that these are always committed by trusted clerks?” “Not at all. The ones that are not trusted never get a chance at the money.”—Boston Transcript.

—First Mormon—What's the matter with Bueber? He's cutting out his old friends. Second Mormon—How so? First Mormon—Why, he never asks me to drop in and see him married any more.—Life.

—“When I was a boy,” said Mr. Waterstock, “I wanted to go to sea and be a pirate.” “And you changed your mind,” replied Miss Cayenne, “to the extent of deciding to remain on land.”—New Orleans Times-Picayune.

—“The prohibition wave has hit Crimson Gulch pretty strong,” remarked Bronco Bob. “Why, I saw every man in the place lined up at the bar.” “Yes. But seven or eight of the men are learning to take water as chasers.”—Washington Star.

—“Did you ever listen to a play with your eyes shut?” she went on aggravatingly, having maintained an incessant chatter since the rise of the curtain. “No,” he replied, out of patience, “but suppose you try listening to it with your mouth shut.”—Boston Transcript.

—Bill—Were you at the Prohibition meeting? Jill—Yes; I was. Bill—What in the world do you want to listen to those fellows for? Jill—It's cheaper. Bill—Cheaper? Jill—Why, yes; their statements didn't cost me anything, and they made me stagger.—Dallas News.

—“These South Sea Islanders are a queer lot. They have many things which are taboo, mustn't be touched.” “I see nothing strange about that. It is the same principle on which we carefully plant a lot of grass for people to keep off of.”—Louisville Courier-Journal.

—“Sometimes I think,” remarked the timid young man in the parlor scene, “that if I—er—had money I would—er—get married.” “Well,” suggested the dear girl who was occupying the other end of the sofa, “why don't you try and—er—borrow some?”—Philadelphia Ledger.

—“I want you to be nice to the Greens to-night.” “Now, why do you insist on that? You know I have no use for either of them.” “I know, but I've just looked over the guests at this party, and the Greens are the only people here who own a car who go home our way.”—Detroit Free Press.

—“The greeting, ‘How are you?’ doesn't seem to me to represent any sincere and sensible inquiry,” remarked the man who thinks hard about trifles. “That is true,” replied Miss Cayenne. “When I meet several people I know I am always tempted to say ‘why’ instead of ‘how.’”—Washington Star.

—A small boy who was sitting next to a very haughty lady in a crowded omnibus kept on sniffing in a most annoying manner. At last the lady could bear it no longer and turned to the lad. “Boy, have you got a handkerchief?” she demanded. The small boy looked at her for a few seconds, and then, in a dignified tone, came the answer: “Yes, I 'ave, but I don't lend it to strangers.”—Live News.

Northwestern Pacific

"Farm and Fireside" tells us that an impressive testimony to the bigness of American livestock interests was afforded recently. "A London despatch stated that Great Britain alone had bought $600,000,000 worth of horses and mules in America since the war started. Just about the same day the agricultural department declared that, notwithstanding the unprecedented sales abroad, there were just as many horses and mules left in the country as when the war started. All the European countries are taking measures to keep their supply of horses. Various plans to encourage breeding, restore racing to favor, give prizes for good animals, purchase good stallions with public funds and permit them to be used by private breeders, and the like, are being organized in England and France. The horse question is going to be one of Europe's hardest after the war."

One thousand farms will be set aside in Western Canada by the Canadian Pacific railroads for the use of soldiers disbanded after the European war, according to an announcement made at Montreal, recently, by Lord Shaughnessy. The farms will be ready for occupation in the spring of next year. They will be grouped in colonies with appropriate military names. A general instruction farm is part of the scheme.

While the action of Rumania in commandeering half of the 100,000 wagonloads of grain said to have been sold to Germany is not so imperative a casus belli as the seizure by Portugal of the German shipping laid up in its ports, it undoubtedly shows an aggressive temper. It must be taken on the one hand in connection with the battle of Verdun, and on the other hand with the preparations for a spring offensive in the Balkans by the allies, which in some quarters is expected to begin in May. It need hardly be said that the campaign is based on Salonica, which has not seemed very hopeful, would take on a quite different color if Rumania is preparing to cast in its fortunes with the allies. In making such a decision the outcome of the battle of Verdun could hardly fail to be a factor of importance.

Battles in the air become bigger and more thrilling as the war goes on, yet they are insignificant in comparison with what may be looked for in the next great war. When this war began, aircraft were in a merely experimental stage, and most of the models in use were soon scrapped. Exciting as must have been the raid of 65 airplanes on Zeebrugge, and the great battle between German and allied squadrons in Alsace, neither gives any measure of the possibilities. When a well standardized type is worked out a flying machine for two men may cost no more than an automobile, and its upkeep may be less than that of a cavalryman. The potentialities of a raid by 10,000 airmen armed with bombs and machine guns are startling, but a great power could put a much larger force in the air—it would merely be a question of what was worth while.

FLOWERS AND PLANTS IN THEIR RAREST BEAUTY.

When B. M. Joseph opened his originally designed and beautiful flower shop at 233 Grant avenue, he introduced so many distinct and appealing novelties and excellent innovations that he completely transformed the florist trade in the Bay counties, especially in San Francisco. He set a new standard. This change is indicated in the many efforts of other florists to imitate his clever original designs for plants, and his favor novelties, baskets and receptacles, as a background for floral and fruit settings. Apparently he has discovered in some magic garden delicate varieties of special blooms that are richer in coloring, grace and form than can be found anywhere else. California furnishes by far the largest assortment of beautiful flowers on this continent, and the best of them are always on exhibit in seasonal bloom and in their perfection at Joseph's. Frequently, through some botanical legerdemain, he really produces them in all their delicate loveliness when out of season. Eastern visitors to San Francisco should not miss his shop and become acquainted with the loveliest of California flowers in all their appealing beauty.

"About Miss Mattie Morning Glory."

This is one of the sweetest love stories ever told, fairly teeming with humor and pathos. Miss Lilian Bell, who has been uniformly successful in producing so many excellent novels, has woven a charming narrative about little Miss Mattie Morning-glory, a warm-hearted, impulsive diminutive milliner, whose first affections are centered on a worthless scamp, who has deceived and robbed her. The arrest and exposure of her sweet-heart open Miss Mattie's eyes to his perfidy and the subsequent shock sends her to a hospital. Here, while recovering from her grief over her shattered dream, she is aroused from the selfishness of her disappointment by learning that an operation is to be performed on a beautiful orphan child in the cot adjoining hers: an operation which is so dangerous that there is slight hope of the child's recovery. Little Gracie is adopted by Miss Mattie to save her from the operation, and in this act is laid the cornerstone of the beautiful love story of cultivated, fastidious Matthew McCabe and this gentle, innocent-minded old maid—a story through which Miss Mattie's unselfish Christianity shines with a brilliance which is reflected by all who come in contact with her. The plot abounds with many delightful surprises, and appeals eloquently to those who dearly relish a wholesome, healthy, adorable love story.

"My Friend Phil."

This story of a little boy with a question mark following his every sentence is a most unusual and bewitching production, as little Phil takes hold of the heart with a grasp which does not easily let go. Isabel Peacock knows a boy's heart and intuitions, and in quite a natural and keenly absorbing way little Phil plays an important part in bringing to successful issue a love affair. However, it is through two serious accidents to the child that the lovers are closely bound together. He has an uncanny way of delving to the secret recesses of man's innocent misunderstandings. His delusions concerning the most everyday happenings, his absolute loyalty to his big friend and sublime confidence in the omnipotence of God to make all things right and just as his little mind had conceived them, furnish irresistibly comical and enticing reading.

Is "The Civilization Called Christian," Dead?

The following arresting passage occurs in the preface to "The End of a Chapter," by Shane Leslie: "It was while invalidated in hospital during the great war that I began to record notes and souvenirs of the times and institutions under which I had lived, realizing that I had witnessed the suicide of the civilization called Christian, and the travail of a new era to which no gods have been as yet rash enough to give their name, and remembering that, with my friends and contemporaries, I shared the fortunes and misfortunes of being born at the end of a chapter in history."

Both Rex Beach and Zane Grey have put the romance of the Mexican border into their recent fiction—Grey in his novel, "The Light of Western Stars," and Beach in his latest book, "Heart of the Sunset." Contemporary events and personages figure in this latter romance, only a little veiled; and readers may like to think that in the Mexican general who keeps the American heroine a captive, they have found the original of the bandit now being pursued by our troops.

WHERE OUR ARMY OFFICERS STUDY WAR

Because of their highly technical character, the layman finds himself baffled in an attempt to estimate, even roughly, the difficulties besetting the problems set for students of the Service Schools. One reads in the Signal School schedule, "Practical Exercise No. 25; Manipulation of Mercury Arc Rectifier," or in the Staff College summary of courses, "Grand Tactics—Manchurian War;" and even the kindly explanations of the Secretary of the Schools, acting as guide and expounder of mysteries, leave the visitor numbed and groping. Occasionally, however, dazzling simplicity seems to clothe some element of the curriculum, and just when the civilian mind has begun smugly to wrap itself about an understandable fact a distinct jar intervenes and confidence goes glimmering. One of the recently established courses in the Staff College, for example, is the Department of Staff Supply. Captain W. K. Naylor, instructor in charge, explains that the investigation conducted by students under him has to do with the mobilization of national resources, railroad and overseas transportation, the capacity and availability of our merchant marine, etc. Perfectly comprehensible! Doubtless an entertaining and comparatively simple course, say you. "One of our problems," explains Captain Naylor, "presupposes a declaration of war by the President, a call for volunteers, and the mobilizing of a brigade at an available point handy to rail and water transportation in the Northwest. Each student officer becomes for the purposes of the problem a quartermaster in charge of the establishment of the mobilization camp. Now that would appear a comparatively simple problem?" You blunder into the instructor's snare; you opine that all the quartermaster had to do was to see to it that the various units got off their trains and found their camp. Yes, decidedly simple. With a smile the Captain hands you the solution of the problem: thirty-three printed pages, with three accompanying maps. Reading, you will discover that the task of establishing a brigade cantonment involves such widely variant details as the price of 2½ inch wrought iron pipe, advertisements for labor in the nearest local paper, and condemnation proceedings against required land.—Robert Welles Ritchie in Harper's Magazine for February.

JOSSLYN.—Mr. and Mrs. Charles Josselyn, who spent the winter in town, have gone to Woodside for the summer. They reopened their country home last Saturday.

MARYE.—The George T. Marye home in Burlingame, which has been in the charge of caketakers since they left, will soon be a rendezvous for the many friends of the Maryes, as they plan to be here in a very few weeks.

PHILLIPS.—The Misses Rosabelle and Sarena Phillips, accompanied by their brother, Kerwin Phillips, will leave to-day for New York and an extended tour of the Eastern States.

POPE.—Mrs. George A. Pope, who has been in Coronado, is home again. The Popes plan to be in Burlingame shortly, and have been spending several week-ends there this spring.

PRATT.—Mr. and Mrs. Orville Pratt and their two little sons will leave Monday for their ranch near Chico, where they always spend several months each year.

RATHBONE.—Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Rathbone are leaving for Weber Lake as soon as weather and road conditions are settled for the summer. Their home is to be occupied by Mr. and Mrs. John S. Drum.

SCOTT.—Mrs. Henry T. Scott and Mrs. Joseph B. Crockett are at Paso Robles for a week or so.

SPROUL.—Miss Marion Sproul will leave to-day for Chico, where she will be a bridesmaid at the wedding of Miss Helen Fennell and Russell Slade, which will take place there April 14th.

STONE.—Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Stone have given up their house on Broadway, which they have occupied for several years, and are now established at the Inverness on Van Ness avenue, where they have rented an apartment.

WALKER.—Miss Marion Zelle, Miss Helen Keeney and Lieutenant-Commander John J. Hannigan were the week end guests of Mr. and Mrs. Talbot Walker at Menlo Park.

WATSON.—Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Watson, who spent the winter in town, have gone to Redwood City, where they have opened their handsome country place for the summer.

WILSON.—Mrs. Russell Wilson and her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. George Cadwalader, will close their house on Pacific avenue April 15th, and will go to Burlingame, where they will spend the summer at their country place.

GRANDSON OF BRET HARTE ENTERS ART LIFE HERE

R. Bret Harte, grandson of Bret Harte, who founded Overland Monthly in San Francisco forty-eight years ago and awakened the literary world to the argonautic tales of California life, has traversed the countries from Belgium to California, and has elected to make his home here in San Francisco. Young Harte has a touch of his grandfather's genius with the pen, and uses it both in writing the impressions of his travels across the continent and illustrating them with vivid and characteristic drawings of the people and scenes. He made special studies in art in Brussels, London and New York, and spent some time in Paris gathering atmosphere and ideas. This week he established himself in business here with John McMullin, a well known local decorator, who has a studio at 233 Grant avenue. Mr. Harte will confine his line of work there to designing costumes and artistic novelties. His special studies in Europe and New York eminently qualify him for a successful career in this line.

ANNUAL REPORT OF ASSOCIATED OIL.

At the annual meeting this week of the Associated Oil Company the incumbent directors and officers were re-elected. The only flutter at the meeting occurred when a stockholder inquired the prospects for an increased dividend, and received from the president a reply to the effect that he hoped to be able to maintain the present rate. The income statement for the year follows:

Business earnings after deducting operating expenses, maintenance, transportation, etc., were $4,970,087.71. Fixed charges, (Taxes $167,578.85; Interest on Bonds, $748,407.46; other items $61,947.51, totaling $977,933.82); balance $3,992,153.89. Reserved for depreciation, $1,984,805.37. Reserved for amortization of discount on bonds sold, $89,344.81. Balance to profit and loss, $1,918,003.71.

Commenting on the condition of the company the report says:

"From statement of assets and liabilities you will observe that your company is in sound financial condition, current assets exceeding current liabilities in the sum of $5,890,799.63, of which $2,433,170.08 is cash.

Dividends to amount of $1,789,095.16 were paid during the year.

"At the close of 1914 the outstanding funded debt of this company was $15,212,000. During 1915 the company purchased $1,737,000 of first refunding mortgage 5 per cent gold bonds, which it holds in its treasury.

"The outstanding funded debt of the company at close of 1915 is $13,331,000.

"During the early summer we resumed production from our Kern River properties suspended October 1, 1913.

"Our production on all properties during 1915 amounted to 5,400,729 barrels, being an increase over 1914 of 946,665 barrels. We drilled nineteen wells during the year, of which fifteen were in the Midway and four in the Kern River field. Owing to increased demand for fuel and refining oils, your directors have, since January 1, 1916, authorized an active drilling campaign. This work is under way, and the well thus far completed have been of a satisfactory character."

—Mr. H. Zadig, who has just returned from a trip to Tonopah and Goldfield, reports both camps looking very well, especially Tonopah. The rise in silver, the great developments in the Tonopah Extension in the western part of Tonopah, and the find in the Rescue Eula to the east, naturally gives great hope for further developments to both east and west. In Goldfield, the Flotation Process now being tried by the Goldfield Consolidated, has proved such a success that the fifty-ton experimental plant is now being increased to 500 tons. This means that Goldfield can work all the low grade ores which contain a large percentage of copper at a profit. The market on the San Francisco stock exchange has been more active during the past week than it has been for months past.

—San Francisco's export trade by sea is advancing with giant strides. Imports are likewise coming in with big increases. The March figures, as compared show the total exports were worth $9,102,412, as against $6,398,380 in March, 1915, and $4,029,556 two years ago. Imports last month totaled $15,176,156, compared with $7,170,312 a year ago and $5,288,833 in 1914. The receipts of the customs service were $323,392. A year ago they were $425,220; in 1914 they were $441,706.

—Los Angeles advices state that a merger has been consummated between the Southern California Edison Company and the Pacific Light and Power Company. The former company recently sold the country gas plants to the Southern Counties Gas Company. The deal is said to be a stock transaction on the part of Pacific Light.

—A particularly active contest is now underway in the court proceedings of the Western Pacific Railroad insolvency case now before Judge Van Fleet of the U. S. District Court. He has been charged with prejudice by the Equitable Trust Company, and the Trust Company has asked that the case be transferred to another judge. Judge Van Fleet claims he has the right to defend himself. He is charged with being friendly with certain interested financial corporations.

—The rising price of silver bullion has greatly stimulated mining in Nevada. The Tonopah mining companies are largely increasing their monthly net earnings through this rise in price.

San Francisco's New Motor Speedway Will be a Big Boon for City

"San Francisco is soon to have one of the most modern and up-to-the-minute speedways" is the statement just made by Ivan R. Gates, who, with a number of prominent business and professional men, has turned his energies to promoting the building of a speedway here that will be second to none in operation in the United States.

The great need of some concourse where high type automobile races could be held has long been felt, but for lack of some one to take the initiative, the city has hitherto not enjoyed motor racing, which would be the means of bringing thousands of people here and increasing the prestige of the city in motoring circles.

Wherever built, motor speedways have been great financial successes, and in addition they have been the means of giving their home cities a measure of free advertising.

The famous Sheephead Bay Automobile Speedway near New York on its opening day had an attendance of 100,000. The Chicago board track likewise drew 100,000, although their races were held during a rain storm; Minneapolis, Tacoma, Kansas City, and in fact all the big cities with automobile racing courses, have found that they pay handsomely in many ways.

The building of a modern speedway in or adjacent to San Francisco, combined with the movement recently agitated, to hold an annual Pacific Coast Automobile show here, would make this city add immeasurably to the city's importance as the center of motor car activities on the Pacific Coast.

When so many cities in various parts of the country have provided themselves with automobile speedways—and found them profitable—the wonder is that San Francisco, with the ideal climate, excellent geographical location, and other favorable conditions, has not before now taken steps to secure a first-class motor speedway. With a population of one million living within a radius of a few miles, and with weather that permits outdoor racing the year around, this city possesses every advantage found in other centers, and many that cities less favorably located lack.

According to the plans of the California Speedway Association, the now motor speedway will compare favorably with anything of its kind in the country; in addition it is proposed to make the San Francisco track the fastest in the country. On a tract of one hundred and ten acres, the projectors propose to build a one-mile oval track, constructed out of high grade 2x4 lumber planks, laid on edge, and so arranged that the greatest speed, combined with safety, will be attained. The track will be seventy feet wide on the straightaways, and eighty feet wide on the turns, with the latter banked so as to allow motor drivers the full benefit of speed in turning corners.

It is planned to erect a grand stand that will seat fifty thousand people, and to provide bleachers, parking spaces to handle fully as many more. Experience has shown that with favorable conditions, attendance to motor speedway events runs well up into the thousands, and that both from a financial as well as from a sporting standpoint a conveniently located track will be a great success.

Superintendent H. A. French of the State Motor Vehicle Department gives the following figures to last Saturday for 1916: Registrations—Automobiles, 157,998; motorcycles, 19,940; chauffeurs, 6,117; automobile dealers, 1,120; motorcycle dealers, 172. Receipts—Automobiles, $1,656,357.80; motorcycles, $39,978; chauffeurs, $12,234; automobile dealers, $28,742; motorcycle dealers, $770; miscellaneous, $759. Total, $1,738,820.

A National Defense Highway

The National Defense Highway Bill, recently introduced by Representative Stephens of this State, and referred to the committee on roads, provides for the construction and maintenance of a highway completely encircling the United States. This highway is to be constructed and maintained by the United States and used for military purposes and such other travel as the government shall permit. It commences at Los Angeles, California, and goes eastward, by a practical route through the States of California, Arizona, New Mexico, Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama and Florida to Jacksonville, Florida; thence northward through Georgia, South Carolina, North Carolina, Virginia, District of Columbia, Maryland, Delaware, Pennsylvania, New Jersey and New York to New York, N. Y.; thence northward through the State of New York, Massachusetts, New Hampshire and Maine to Portland, Me. Commencing again at New York, thence westward through the States of New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, to Chicago, Illinois; thence northwestward through Wisconsin and Minnesota to St. Paul and Minneapolis, Minnesota; thence westward through South Dakota, North Dakota, Montana, Idaho and Washington to Seattle, Washington, Oregon and California, via San Francisco and Los Angeles to San Diego, California.

The total length of this highway would be approximately 5,000 miles. It would pass through every border State, and afford the military excellent opportunity for maneuvers in time of peace and quick transportation in time of war. It would pass through rich and poor communities alike, and be of uniform construction throughout. The Federal government could well afford to spend $100,000,000 on its construction and a proper amount for its maintenance for the States are spending millions of dollars on highways of transcontinental character which would be feeders to this encircling highway and increase its value. When the Lincoln and Pike's Peak highways, running east and west, and the Dixie and Jackson highways running north and south, and various other roads are constructed, all connecting with the National Defense Highway, the Federal government would have facilities for transporting men and munitions of war to any point in the country as fast as high speed American made cars could carry them.

It is to be hoped that congressmen from States through which this highway does not pass will be broad enough to vote to make this bill a law. The border States get the benefit in times of peace, it is true, but the border States bear the brunt of attack in case of war, and shield the central States by their geographical position.

The bill in brief is as follows:

Sec. 1. Provides that the President be authorized to acquire, establish and construct, improve and maintain, for the defense of the United States, a national defense highway.

Sec. 2. Provides the route in a general way as given above.

Sec. 3. Provides for the acquisition of the right-of-way through the several States.

Sec. 4. Provides that the construction, improvement and maintenance shall be under the direction of United States army engineers.

Sec. 5. Provides for the use of the highway.

Sec. 6. Provides that all employees of said highway shall be physically fit for military duty, and that they shall be drilled for that purpose.

Sec. 7. Provides for a fund for the purpose of constructing, improving and maintaining said highway.

Sec. 8. Provides for a bond issue, not to exceed $100,000,000, bearing 3 per cent interest, for the purpose of creating a fund to be used in the construction, improvement and maintenance of said highway.

Car for Every Nine Persons

The Commercial Club of Larned, Kan., plans a 260 mile tour with 100 cars in line to Kansas City, Mo., this spring, to advertise the fact that Pawnee County, of which Larned is the county seat, owns more motor cars per capita than any other county in the United States. Figures given out recently by State officials at Topeka show that one machine is owned in Pawnee County for every nine inhabitants. How long will Los Angeles allow these figures to go unchallenged? Incidentally, San Mateo County might be heard from.

Sergeant Goff of Traffic Squad Lectures Motorists

In discussing the reasons for the rapidly increasing number of automobile thefts in San Francisco, Sergeant Charles Goff, in command of the Traffic Squad, says:

"Lack of care is the answer to the question, 'Why are thefts of automobiles so common?'"

"What prudent business man would think of leaving from one to six thousand dollars on the streets without safeguarding it in some manner."

"That is just what the average automobile owner does every day of his life, and what is more, he, figuratively speaking, offers the thief legs to carry his property away."

"An automobile left with everything in working order offers just such an inducement to a thief."

"The owner has no moral right to leave such an inducement in the reach of persons of weak moral character. And as oftentimes happens the thief is out of work and is hungry. The average sleek, well fed auto owner does not realize what a temptation he is playing in the way of some one who is absolutely hungry, and any expert will testify as to the length of time it takes hunger and cold to tear down the barrier between honesty and dishonesty, especially when the object of gain affords means of rapid flight with sure promise to temporary luxury besides."

"The earliest possible moment that automobile owners awaken to the fact that they must in a measure try to protect their own property, by locking or properly safeguarding their property, just so soon will thefts of automobiles diminish."

"While not possessed of any specific knowledge concerning the mechanism of an automobile, yet I venture to say that in average cases it is an easy matter to lock or otherwise protect an automobile so that it would be difficult in a limited amount of time to make way with any automobile."

Magnificent Auto Road Soon to Open

The City of Sacramento is making elaborate preparations to celebrate, on May 11, 12 and 13, the completion of the 16,000 foot cement causeway across the Yolo Basin, connecting the east and west sides of the great Sacramento Valley. This causeway opens a magnificent automobile road from Sacramento to San Francisco, shortening the distance between the two cities by 35 miles, and is one of the important links of the Lincoln Highway between New York and San Francisco. One of the events planned is an automobile parade across the bridge, to be led by Governor Johnson, the Highway Commission and other officials. Extensive preparations are being made for this event in connection with a three days' Spring Festival, to be held at the same time.

Massachusetts Motors Car Figure

There are 90,673 motor cars registered in Massachusetts, according to figures made public by the Highway Commission. The number of commercial vehicles has risen to 11,960, thus showing an increase of 44 per cent since 1914. There are also 1,142 cars in the hands of manufacturers and dealers, and the total number of vehicles, including motorcycles, registered in the State during the fiscal year, which ended November 30th, amounts to 113,895.

Business as Usual?

Since February of last year only doctors, surgeons, firemen and ambulance men have been allowed to use motor cars in Germany, and now further drastic restrictions have been imposed on their use. All privately owned cars and motor vans in Berlin are being examined and are commandeered if their owners cannot prove their use is absolutely indispensable. Motor cars placed at the disposal of particular persons, such as doctors for their professional use, are not allowed to be used by their families or other persons for private purposes. The hiring of cars is also forbidden. Doubtless the reason for this procedure is the shortage of petrol, benzole, lubricating oil and tires (especially the rubber for the latter) which are required for military use.

Interesting Features Planned for Oakland Motor Show

When President Wilson formally opens the great Pacific Coast Motor Power Show by talking over the transcontinental telephone on the Afternoon of April 26th, the biggest exposition of the kind ever held west of Chicago will open at the municipal auditorium in Oakland, California. The show will be more than statewide; it has already become known in the East, and from all indications it will make exposition history in the West and place the Pacific Coast on the map as an automobile and motor power center.

The remarkable feature has been the interest shown by manufacturers and dealers in all motor driven machinery. The Automobile Industries Association of Alameda County has taken all the space in the arena and corridors of the auditorium. Nearly forty dealers in automobiles and automobile accessories have already taken space, and many of the big automobile manufacturers of the country will have identically the same exhibits they have shown heretofore in the great automobile shows held each year in New York and Chicago.

Equally interesting will be the exhibits in the good roads making and electrical departments, the aeroplane and hydroplane displays, and the display of domestic products driven by motor power. Another big feature will be the Outdoor Fashion Show, displaying garments on living models to be used in the outdoor sports. This will be in charge of Herbert Jarvis, who is the recognized expert in these shows in the United States, and for a number of years has been in charge of the wonderful fashion shows put on in Madison Square Garden, New York.

In connection with the good roads making exhibit, which will consist of materials, machinery and adjuncts of all kinds used in the making of pavements and good roads, Samuel Hill, the leading good roads advocate of the country, is to attend and show his famous Columbia Highway pictures. Co-operating with the committee in charge of this department is Leslie M. Brown, famous good roads man, who was Horticultural Commissioner at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, and before that was secretary of the Inland Empire Highway Association of the State of Washington, and also a member of the governing board of the State Good Roads Association of Washington. Mr. Brown has arranged for many splendid features, and the good roads department of the coming power show will rank with the automobile display.

A Nation on Wheels

There are 2,423,788 motor cars and trucks in use in the United States. This figure is the total number of registrations in the country January 1, 1916, all duplicate registrations of which records are available being deducted. This is a gain of 686,998 cars and trucks, or a gain of 39.5 per cent over the 1,736,790 registered up to the end of 1914. Contrary to the general impression, over half of this increase was made during the latter half of the year. There is one car to every thirty-eight people living in the United States, and this means that out of every nine families in the country one is the proud possessor of a motor car.

Refuting the frequent statement that the buying power of the United States is nearing its limit so far as motor vehicles are concerned, we may point to the registration statistics. These form a foundation for conclusions which indisputably refute all contentions of these pessimistic prophets.

During 1915 the production of cars and motor trucks by the manufacturers of the United States reached a total of nearly 900,000 vehicles, a goodly percentage of these being exported to Europe, Asia, South America, in all, eighty countries in different sections of the globe, the number of cars and trucks shipped abroad increasing each month, as shown by the government export statistics, the increase for the year being 250 per cent, while the estimated value is $100,000,000. In considering the gain of 686,998 car and truck registrations during the year, it must also be remembered that a large number of cars must have been scrapped, their places being taken by new vehicles which necessarily makes the total gain shown somewhat lower than if these older cars had remained in commission in addition to the newer machines.

The tremendous buying power of the country is well illustrated by the phenomenal increase in the number of cars and trucks in use in the United States since 1911. For that year a total of 677,000 was recorded which, during 1912, jumped to 1,010,483, a gain of 333,843. In 1913 the total was 1,253,875, or 243,392 more than were recorded as being in use during the preceding year. As shown by the 1914 and 1915 statistics in the number of vehicles in use for 1911 to the end of 1915 is 1,746,788, or practically the total number of cars and trucks in use in this country a year ago.

The Magnetic Drive Is An Epoch Making System

What promises to be the greatest revolution in road vehicles since the gasoline motor was perfected is the magnetic drive car now on display at the St. Francis, and called the Owen Magnetic. It is the wonder only that this system was not used before, as the electric drive has been applied successfully to ships for some time past. The advantages of the system are obvious, as there are no gears to shift nor clutches to manipulate, and the flexibility is equal to that of a steam car, with the advantage of gasoline for the primary power, and the simplicity of operation of the electric vehicle. It is in effect carrying the electric starting principle one step further and maintaining it throughout the entire operation of the car. The initial power, derived from an ordinary six-cylinder gasoline motor, is converted by an electro-magnetic device, so that the source is always at hand. Therefore, it does not depend on recharging and the use of a heavy storage battery, and the comparatively weak current employed by the sole electric. It is in effect a trolley car with the current made on the vehicle itself.

Every operation from the starting of the car, thence to a veritable crawl and so on up to a speed of sixty miles an hour is regulated by a single, simple little lever attached to the steering wheel.

The Manufacturers claim:

"The Owen Magnetic, beautiful structurally and perfect mechanically, excites wonder and admiration wherever it is seen because of its fine lines and its freedom from levers and pedals common to other cars. Yet, novel as it is to the general public, it is by no means a recent accomplishment. Electric generators and motors for starting and lighting are regular equipment for the cars you know, and have long since proved their practicability. We have added no additional electrical equipment, we have only made the electrical units larger and so designed them to serve the additional purpose of furnishing the speed variations.

"This transmission involves the partial transformation of mechanical energy into electrical power. And that is a well known principle. It is applied in modern factories where machines are run by separate electric motors. It is applied on warships and all steam vessels, where the steering mechanism, hoists, pumps, etc., are run by electric motors. It is applied in thousands of homes.

"Cumbersome mechanical power is thus converted into flexible energy easily controlled. Speed, flexibility and ease of control are thus attained.

"The transmission does not necessarily add to the weight of the car. It eliminates the engine fly-wheel, the starting motor with its levers, shafts and switches, the electrical generator and its drive, the clutch, the pedal and the transmission. These parts weigh as much as the Entz transmission—often more."

A First-Class Garage

There are many garages in town, and the motorist is often in a quandary as to where to go, especially for permanent service. There are very few who give you the QUALITY of service of Dow & Green, in Taylor street, between O'Farrell and Geary. Here your car will receive something more than the "once over," and the prices are moderate.

FASHION'S FADS AND FRILLS

"Sui-vez-moi, jeune homme, gaily invite the ribbons floating from the brim of a dainty, French garden hat. And "sui-vez-moi," teasingly repeat the ribbons floating from every conceivable point on the dainty lingerie, or silken frock this summer, for ribbons are the trimmings favored by Fashion for hats, frocks, blouses, petticoats and parasols. Many a frock, slightly passe, has been given a new lease of life by this ribbon fad. If hopelessly worn around the lower edge, a width of ribbon, wide or narrow, according to the need, is added, making the frock more attractive if anything, than when it was in its first youth.

Ribbon Bodices on Evening Gowns.

The entire bodice of many of the dainty net and taffeta frocks for dancing or evening wear, is formed of wide satin, taffeta or one of the fantastic, beautifully embroidered, or metallic ribbons. To fashion one of these ribbon bodices is simple enough, the ribbon is merely draped about the waist, well over the bust in front and brought down in back to form a V, finishing in a large softly-tied bow. The transparent material of the frock itself usually veils the ribbon, adding a still softer, more graceful effect.

The Ribbon Pannier or Farthingale.

Many of our skirt draperies, which carry out the demand for the bouffant effect about the hips, constituting the new silhouette, are effected with ribbon. On a most attractive model of dark gray taffeta, with the new Premet collar was a drapery of wide black moire ribbon, pleated over the hips to stand out stiffly, coming down front and back in straight lengths, lapping at the bottom to form a panel. The effect was most attractive, and it was a touch which any woman with clever fingers can apply to almost any frock with equally good results.

Girdles of all widths and kinds of ribbons are being made up and sold in the shops as accessories to be added to the tub-frock of voile, linen or other of the summer cottons. For silk and net dresses there are metallic ribbon-girdles finished with long sash-ends weighted with metallic tassels. Ribbon flowers add a touch of effective contrast or the one needed bit of color to the sombre frock; and narrow satin, taffeta, or picot edged faille ribbon is used to band a cuff, edge a collar, or add just a bit of trimming to a straight, full skirt of a simple summer dress.

How Ribbon is Used on Hats.

It would be quite safe to say, in many instances, that the hat is fashioned of ribbon and trimmed with straw, for such is really the case. Many of the summer hats, both large and small, have the crown and most of the brim fashioned of taffeta, satin or moire ribbon, edged perhaps with a band or two of hemp, Milan or angora braid. A particularly pretty hat of Maria Guy's is a wide brimmed black hemp sailor, with crown of wide gray taffeta ribbon crossed and brought down

Ribbon Panel and Banding on Net Dress.

Another effective use of wide taffeta ribbon is shown in the second figure; the lower edge of the net skirt is banded with the ribbon and hanging, panel-fashion from the shirred waistline, is a single strip, slightly gathered at the top.

Ribbon is one of the simplest, most easily applied and most economical of all trimmings. It requires no hemming or finishing, and may be pleated, gathered, twisted and draped in every imaginable way.

Many of the smaller hats have the ribbon crown with high loops of ribbon standing up stiffly about it. Stiff little bows or cockades of ribbon are used to trim the sport hats, which are legion, to accompany the sport suits and dresses. The straight brimmed sailor of some years back is putting in an appearance here and there as the season advances. This is trimmed usually with a narrow band and bow of moire, grosgrain, or faille ribbon in the same, or a contrasting tone to the hat. One sees now and then, also, a gaily colored band on a severe little hat, of Roman striped, or wool embroidered ribbon.

A ribbon ruche is a pretty feature of the taffeta dance frock illustrated in the first figure of this letter. It is fashioned of transparent metallic ribbon, banded through the center with a strip of the narrow velvet ribbon which trims the skirt. Wide satin ribbon forms the underbodice, and a ribbon rose adds a pretty touch to the completed dress.

Mrs. Paul R. Burgner, the wife of a Nebraska representative of the Bankers' Life Company of Des Moines, has just received word that her brother, Robert Gray, has been killed in battle in Europe. The story of his death is another instance of the remarkable self-sacrifice and heroism which are a part of the every-day life in the trenches of Western Europe.

The young soldier was on duty in the trenches, and wounded men from the firing line were being carried through the trenches to the field hospital in the rear. The trenches were so narrow that there was not enough room for the stretchers to pass, and the Major called for volunteers to stand out and make room. Young Gray was one of the volunteers. For the sake of the wounded he exposed himself to the rifles of the Germans, and he was shot down. This young hero had made a bright record for himself during the war on account of his courage. He had already been made a corporal, and was the wearer of two stripes on his young shoulders.

The contention of the Chicago Bonding and Surety Company in a suit filed in the United States District Court against the City and County of San Francisco, the Board of Public Works, and twenty-four other defendants, will, if upheld by the Federal Courts, exonerate all Sureties on municipal contracts. It is the contention of the Bonding Company that the letting of these contracts is a municipal affair, and the restrictions and requirements for the letting of the contract are governed by the charter. Nowhere in the charter, it is alleged, is there any provision that a contractor shall give a bond to inure to the benefit of laborers and material men.

—Buck up, buck up! It's only spring fever. Just be patient until vacation time comes.

—The steady upward crawl in the price of gasoline holds one hope—it may drive the jitneys off Market street.

—Girl named Dare eloped at San Jose last week. So many elopements and hasty marriages are the result of a dare.

—A street car line across Golden Gate Park will justly cause San Francisco to be jeered every time she lays claim to being an artistic city.

—It wouldn't be humane to feel glad when a speeding joy rider is killed; but to save us, we cannot work up any feeling of depression over it.

—Rockefeller Foundation gifts for last year amounted to $7,727,932. Get a pencil and figure out its relation to the jumps in the price of gasoline.

—Fellow named Hoos acquired a lot of fame the other day by eloping. But he cannot amount to much, because his name isn't in Hoos Hoo. But maybe he's in the Hoo Hoos.

—Roosevelt will not run for president unless the delegates use force on him; and he's the busiest man in the United States pointing out to them just how the force is to be employed.

—The victims of Dr. Lyman must feel silly when they read his accounts of how he fleeced them. But they will be ready for the next swindler who approaches them with a different sort of fraud.

—A lot of Eastern snobs are contributing $10,000 each toward a $300,000 fund that is to be placed at the disposal of the rulers of France, Russia and England for war relief. Each contributor will receive a cute little golden book with a royal autograph. It was thought that the Ford episode was the limit in absurdity—but this beats it.

—Soldiers pursuing Villa write home that they are living on hard tack and parched corn. Well, that's more healthful than the putrid beef that was fed the troops in the Spanish war.

—Huge rabbit drive was held by Sacramento Valley ranchers last Sunday, and thousands of bunnies slaughtered. And they never sent for Hillsborough's beauties and bugles and beagles!

—A headline in a Republican newspaper states that the Republicans plan to retire Congressman John E. Raker. The assumption that Raker will submit as a matter of course is rather naive and delicious.

—One faction in China is against a monarchy, another opposes a republic, while a third is ready to fight either or both. Between the three, Yuan Shai Ki is beginning to feel like the manager of a dippy house.

—It is an odd thing that the statements and promises of European diplomats are published as serious news, when it has been demonstrated conclusively in the past two years that the truth is in none of them.

—With the dispute raging over the form of the primary ballot, the voter will be uncertain when he leaves the booth whether he has exercised his rights as a citizen or has merely added to the waste paper supply.

—The grand jury of Santa Clara County declares that vice is rampant in its community, and is disposed to be disturbed over the fact. So long as the public countenances vice it will exist, and all the noise that grand juries and reformers make about it will have no effect.

—Americans who stay at home and mind their own business do not get massacred in Mexico or torpedoed on liners; but they are expected to be ready to take up the burden imposed by those who for gain or curiosity endanger their carcasses and their country's peace.

—Secretary Jordan says that in sending out sample ballots with a distinguishing space between the groups of candidates of the Republican factions, he wants to separate the sheep from the goats. What's the difference? All the Republicans will be goats in November.

—Secretary White, of the S. P. C. C., says that ninety-seven per cent of the cases that come to his society are caused by drink. And if he would look a little further, he would see that drink is caused by rotten and remediable living conditions that would drive nearly anybody to drink.

—Eastern visitor, writing to a local paper of the neglected condition of Lotta's Fountain, scents a conspiracy on the part of the saloon keepers to discourage water drinking. There is nothing more delicious than the unconscious humor of the serious person—and such are in the majority among the prohibitionists.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

RECRUITING FOR VILLA

—Bradley in the Chicago Daily News.

TO SOLVE LOCAL STREET CAR DIFFERENCES.

Company during their frequent colloquies over their relationship in handling the street car traffic problems demonstrate that a satisfactory understanding cannot be reached and that the only rational way to bring the interminable arguments and irritating charges to a profitable end is the early sale of the United Railroad properties to the municipality. Recent meetings of the representatives of the two bodies have shown plainly that though they may come to an agreement regarding mutual use of the ferry loop and other minor questions, they continue insistently at loggerheads regarding certain differences that will not down—for instance, running certain municipal cars on upper Market street and the Parkside lines. In the last conference, it became evident that another impasse will arise in the growing Church street differences. Both the Board of Supervisors and President Lilienthal stand ready to appeal to the courts rather than yield any prime point.

The Municipal Railroad Company has made good under its present management, and has planted itself indefinitely on the street transportation map of the peninsula. In such case, the Board of Supervisors will naturally incline in their future policy of development of the line extensions into new territory. The outlook in this respect for the United Railroads Company is therefore rather meagre. In this situation, both sides recognize that the only way to wipe the slate clear of all present differences is for the city to buy the interests of the United Railroads Company. The Civic League of Improvement Clubs of this city declares that to be the only way to settle the matter on a common sense basis and sound business principles, an action that would transform the present differences at one stroke into a satisfactory street car transportation service with a single system of transfers.

A meeting to canvass the details of the proposed sale has been arranged by the League of Improvement Clubs and President Jesse W. Lilicnthal has accepted an invitation to be present. President Lilienthal is on record as saying that he has always been ready to meet the city more than half way in such a proposition. He regards a sale as the only logical way to solve the intricate problem satisfactorily, as he believes that street car transportation is a monopoly, and that such lines should be owned and controlled by the municipality. It is known that he will ask only a fair price for the properties. So the result is practically in the hands of the Utilities Committee of the Board of Supervisors.

WILSON URGING VITAL LEGISLATION.

Following closely upon the first announcement of the organizing of the Woodrow Wilson Non-Partisan League with headquarters at San Francisco, local and district clubs are being rapidly formed in all parts of the State. The State headquarters is sending out letters urging the formation of a central club in every assembly district, with local clubs in every town in the respective districts. As soon as the State is thoroughly organized a meeting of representatives of all the clubs will be called to map out a complete plan of campaign to draw to the support of Wilson the several classes of voters who are still undecided as to a choice for president. This meeting will not be held until the national conventions have chosen the candidates. Clubs have already been formed in Oakland, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Grass Valley, Santa Rosa, Pasadena, Eureka and other cities. Letters are pouring into local headquarters from all sections, announcing the desire of the writers to further the non-partisan movement in favor of Wilson. Particularly are the women interested. Southern California has shown the greatest interest thus far.

Meanwhile President Wilson continues consistently to press Congressional measures in the order in which they will most benefit the country. Most urgent among them just now is the Seamen's Shipping bill and Railroad Transportation legislation. House Democratic leader Mann has been urged by President Wilson to force both these important measures to an early decision. In the present big development of the commerce and transportation of this country, these two questions are of paramount importance. The whole movement of our trade and industry seems apparently to be tensely awaiting the outcome in Congress on these two vital considerations. More and more as trade develops, the means of transportation are becoming the key to commerce, and the railways of the country are beginning to loom big in this particular. The sliding caves of earth into the Panama Canal helped in no small measure to illustrate this fact most graphically and in instructive figures in dollars. Senator Newlands' resolution looking to the investigation of railway affairs is well underway in both branches of Congress. So far, there has been an eminently fair spirit in efforts to do the railroad's justice, a disposition which reflects the sense of the people.

AS TO THE PHILIPPINES. It is significant that in the present war plans of the general staff at Washington that all preparations regarding the defense of the Philippines have been abandoned. This means that political action will follow this military lead and that the Democratic party will continue its course forecasted in the Baltimore convention and work out in due form the Clark amendment providing for independence of the Filipinos four years hence, which President Wilson will in all likelihood sign if the bill reaches him. Back of this movement is the strong opinion of many influential men that this country cannot afford to control territory which it cannot defend. The Philippines are justly regarded as a very precarious holding for this country; they are unquestionably a weak spot in the strategic defense of Uncle Sam's territories. Many Republicans take the same view, notably Roosevelt, who regards only Hawaii, Alaska, the Panama Canal zone and the West Indies within the radius of our natural and strongest outer line of defense. The Philippines have been summed up as "an inevitable magnet to draw ships and troops away from this country, and develops a fundamentally indefensible position against any strong trans-Pacific power.

In the light of the present European war this country is preparing to defend only the territory it must defend in order to protect its position on this continent. The islands named above will shortly become the advanced fortresses of the army and navy defenses of the continent, special points of rendezvous and preparation for the scouting squadrons of the navy.

Meanwhile the Filipinos are preparing for their independence. Through the liberal and extensive educational system inaugurated by this government when it assumed government over the territory, there has been a wonderful uplift in the intelligence of the natives. In the same period their leaders have been inculcated with modern political forms and democratic principles, and they should be able to hold their own. Japan is practically the only nation that will attempt to gain more than a commercial grip on Manila and the leading sea-ports. If pressed by the inner counselors at Tokio, the native Philippine government will find a haven of refuge by seeking the protectorate of Great Britain. The Philippines are too close to Australia for the latter not to become nervous should the Japanese show signs of invading Manila commercially, and Australians would naturally and actively back the Philippine government in such an application to the mother country. The United States would likely support such a movement in order to prevent the Filipinos from being exploited in the manner that Korea has been.

JOIN PROTEST AGAINST THREATENED R. R. STRIKE. The highest paid employees in railroad service in this country and Canada are organized to demand a raise. They ask for $100,000,000 a year more than they are now getting, or a little more than $300 a year more per man. The railroads are not in such financial condition as to permit granting the demands, but the men are quoted as saying that unless these demands are met they will refuse to arbitrate and will walk out. The situation is a serious one—serious for the railroads, for other railway employees, and also equally serious for the public, as the public must ultimately pay the bill.

This is the statement in substance made recently by Vice-President and General Manager W. R. Scott of the Southern Pacific, concerning the action of the four railway brotherhoods in presenting higher wage demands to the railroads of the country. "The claim has been made," said Mr. Scott, "that the men want a day of eight hours. This is not true. They do not want a shorter day, nor do they place any limit on the working hours.

This is merely a question of punitive overtime. They demand ten hours' pay for eight hours' work, with overtime to be paid after the eighth hour. They also demand 87½ per cent more for overtime than the present rate. This is in spite of the fact that they have already exacted the provision that if a man is called for duty and performs any service whatsoever—even though it be but for fifteen minutes—he shall receive a day's pay therefor.

"Just what this exaction means already to the railroads may be gleaned from the fact that in one year 56 Western railways paid out to engineers and firemen $1,403,038.74 for which no actual work was done. This payment was compulsory. Should the Brotherhoods strike, the public would be vitally affected. The coming crops could not be moved, and this is but one instance of how the public would be affected by a tie-up of the railway systems of the country.

"The men asking the increase are already the highest paid of railway employees. They only constitute 18 per cent of the total railway men, but they get 28 per cent of the total wages. The average pay per man involved on the Western roads is $1,296 a year. This includes all engineers, firemen, trainmen and conductors working full time or even part time.

"The average yearly salary of school teachers in the United States is less than $500, but if these railway employees, now averaging $1,296 a year, are given this $100,000,000 wage increase a year, every school teacher as well as other citizens will have to help pay it. They cannot avoid it, for they are part of the American public."

Evidently the bill now being considered by Congress, wherein the government proposes to provide for the building of its own naval armor plant at an expense of $11,000,000 and a capacity of 20,000 tons per year, has made an extraordinarily deep impression on Charles M. Schwab, chairman of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation. He has promptly announced a new and more attractive proposition compared with any he has made heretofore regarding contracts for furnishing armor plate to the government. He now agrees to permit any well known firm of chartered public accountants to inventory the Bethlehem plant and make careful estimates of the cost of manufacture; with the data in hand he will meet the Secretary of the Navy and agree to manufacture armor plate at a price which will be entirely satisfactory to the Navy Department as being quite as low as the price at which the government could possibly manufacture a like quantity and quality on its own account. As a concrete working basis for such negotiations, the directorate of the Bethlehem plant has offered to manufacture one-third of the armor plate required for the contemplated five-year naval program, estimated at 120,000 tons, for a price of $395 per ton for side armor, as compared with the price of $425 per ton now obtaining.

This proposition suggests a new method in government contracts of fluctuating magnitude, a method that might readily be developed on very broad lines, and that is for the government to take charge of certain lines of the plants and run them under its naval or military officers in the manufacture of armor plate, munitions of war, and any line of products the government may require in huge quantities, the amount of payment to be based on a fair per cent on the cost of investment of the plant, the cost of conducting it, and the materials consumed. Under the present system, specially appointed navy officers are always on duty to inspect the materials that are furnished in the construction of war vessels and the purchase of war materials, and with more elastic power conferred upon them, with the consent of the corporation owning the plant, they might readily assume the jurisdiction suggested.

—Shakespeare's tercentennial is here, and not a bust of Shakespeare is reported to be in stock in any store in San Francisco. There are tons of plaster torsos of notables on the junk pile of the recent exposition; bronze plaques are thicker in the homes on this peninsula than buckwheat cakes of a frosty morning; we have Mayor's mugs galore at the civic center—and the board of supervisors have set aside every penny in the emergency fund to have Swan the painter make them famous by stenciling their phizes on the billboards of the city. The statue of Lawyer McAllister has been planted in front of the new City Hall, and the lazy janitor of the civic center has hosed off the grass growing on the back of the dyspeptic grizzly bear guarding the entrance to this Acropolis of the metropolis of the Pacific—but in all the splendiferous shops of San Francisco, stuffed with the encyclopedic merchandise of Ormus and of Ind, of the loot of Peking and Barbary Coast, there is not one little second hand, soiled and excoriated busted bust of honest Bill Shakespeare, the only genius of the multitudinous aeons that ever gave Mayor Rolph a run for his money in dashing off iambic pentameters in fluffy verse. Is Mayor Rolph's hand behind the electric push button that blew up all the busts of Bill on this peninsula? Suspicion is afoot that somebody is quietly sticking the knife into this bust business on Bill. The board of supervisors has suddenly lost the date of Bill's birth, so we can't yell for Bill and give him a Portola reception till he comes back and tells us when he was born. Eddie Wolfe opines Bill can't be much anyway, because he never did anything for the 31st Assembly district. Andy Gallagher wants to see Bill's last labor button on dues. Hilmer throws eggs every time the question comes up. Power declares Bill must be a "dead one," if none of the supervisors will put in a resolution asking the finance committee for several thousand dollars to help Bill's family, and his celebration. Power is right: Bill is a "dead one" in San Francisco, now that we've got a new up to date ice rink.

—Pancho Villa, sleek as he is in worming his way through the Mexican fastnesses to escape his pursuers, is not one-half so sleek and dangerous as the scamps in this country and abroad who are reported to be backing him. Villa by himself, without source of arms, ammunition and money, could be very quickly eliminated from the map of bad bandits south of the Rio Grande. With the service and resources furnished him, he will be harder to catch than a greased pig at a country picnic. Since the days of Diaz, Mexico has been an ideal land for exploitation and plunder by capable and influential plunderers in this country and abroad, who play their game through the fine phrase of "developing the industries of Mexico." The members of this plunderbund who, through bribes and threats, succeeded in obtaining enormously profitable concessions from the government of millions of acres of government land, will fight to the last ditch behind Villa and his revolutos before they will release their prospects of looting prostrated Mexico. They are natural-born Villas, and possess all his contempt regarding the property of others, but behind their trenches of the law they play the game like up to date, educated, kid gloved Villas, and employ scoundrels of lesser degree to do their dirty work. Time has only shifted the methods and practices of the descendants of the buccaneers of four hundred years ago.

—What evil genii threw that prickly pear of disagreement among the subscribers of the Symphony Concerts; or was it a woman, as some aver? Fortunately, the explosion of super-temperaments did not explode till the end of the season was reached, and then its vehemence added measure for its delay. The pith of the differences had its being in the old partisan warfare over the question of the leadership, "Hertz or Hadley." Despite the great success made by Hertz during his recent season, the Hadley cohort will not yield. Now that the series is over, some of them in the quietness of their homes and the recollections of the colorful and sympathetic interpretations offered by leader Hertz, may conclude that Hertz, after all, is worth enjoying even if his name is not Hadley. Others by the centrifugal force of temperamental distaste, will very likely drift naturally into the group forwarding the success of the new Philharmonic Orchestra. Thanks to the local developments made in aesthetics by the recent Exposition, there are at hand artistic movements in all directions, and it is a dyspeptic and spineless lover of any of the arts who cannot find a shrine of one of the nine goddesses outside the theatre district. For a time it looked as though there would be a vendetta in certain society circles regarding the solution of the Hertz-Hadley question, but fortunately the sputtering rage was blunted by the sudden close of the symphony season and the flight of many of the partisans to their country homes. When the next season opens it will likely be discovered that the bird of Peace has been pasted to the music stand of leader Hertz, while the goddess of music will likely be reported "doing as well as can be expected under the circumstances."

—It is to grin to read the announcement that the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce is preparing to organize a manufacturing company for the sole purpose of competing with the big oil refineries in this country in the manufacturing of gasoline, a wild endeavor to keep down the price of that commodity. Countless competitors in the oil game, backed by ample capital and experience, have played this same game with the "big 'uns," and, lo, who can find their wrecks. The oil game has many angles, and one of two of these angles is a selling force that knows a territory to the last drop of gasoline usually used, and another is the cost of transportation and delivery. The National Automobile Chamber of Commerce proposes of course to manufacture its gasoline under the new process developed by the government experts at Washington. Grant they succeed in doing this. Then their troubles begin. The best brakes the automobile manufacturers have so far put on the rising price of gasoline was their protest to Congress and the present inquiry. The giant refinery companies of the country are a blooming sight more amenable to Congressional inquiry and irritating laws placed in their way than they are to the competition of any bunch of men that are tyros in the oil game, perhaps the stiffest and hardest industrial game to buck against in the U. S. A.

—A movement to suppress the dehumanized censors of the movies is now under way in Los Angeles, and to offset it in the North, and so maintain the mental assinnity of some of those who live in clothes, a movement was started here this week to create an organization for the suppression of gossip. Naturally the result will be that within the month the gathering will gradually transform itself into a clearing house of gossip, which perhaps is their unconscious object, and perhaps the very source of tittle-tattle they are anxious to souse their mental depravity in. It is human nature to give an old sin some captivating new appellation and enjoy its blandishments anew. Gossip is thereby stopped, the conscience assuaged, and all seems captivating, till its enemies discover that the old deceiver is wearing a new garb with deceptive decorative effects.

The Question of Prohibition

BY ARTHUR H. DUTTON.

The California Grape Protective Association, which includes in its membership only organizations, firms and individuals that are dependent upon the vineyards for their livelihoods, is now engaged in a campaign of education to show the people of California the great value of the viticultural industry of the State.

As its name implies, the association exists solely for the protection of the grape industries—wine, table and raisin—against the onslaughts of those who are attacking them.

The raisin and table grape industries are so closely interwoven with the wine grape industry, the three are so closely interdependent, that the destruction of any one of them would result in inevitable disaster to the other two. The table and raisin grape growers find in the wineries a market for their culls and second crop Muscats, which are made into brandy for the fortification of sweet wines. The loss of this market would cripple those two industries seriously. If the manufacture of wine should be prohibited, the wine grapes would be worthless, for the far greater part, although a few varieties could be dried for an inferior grade of raisins, which would flood the already well supplied market and lower the standard of California raisins.

The California Grape Protective Association proposes to conduct its campaign with calmness and truth, and expects to defeat both the proposed prohibition amendments on the merits of the case it presents.

Do not be deceived by the false announcement by the Anti-Saloon League that the second proposed amendment to the State Constitution is "aimed at the saloon;" that it is "purely an anti-saloon measure."

It is far more. It is aimed at every avenue of distribution of alcoholic beverages.

The first proposed amendment is a frank measure to stop the manufacture, sale, giving away or use of any beverage containing alcohol, anywhere in California. It is avowedly a total prohibition measure.

Knowing that a majority of the people of California is opposed to anything so drastic as this first amendment, the "drys" are saying: "Oh, well, if you do not want absolute prohibition, vote for the second amendment, which does away with the saloon."

Many people take this statement at its face value, whereas it is bare-faced political trickery, to secure votes under false pretenses.

The fact is, that the second amendment includes the "store, hotel, restaurant, cafe, club or other place of public resort" among the places where the sale of wine or any other alcoholic liquid shall be forbidden. It would prevent the sale of wine anywhere except at the place where manufactured, or in a pharmacy (of course, by physician's prescription only), and prevent its use anywhere except in the permanent residence of the purchaser. Guests at hotels could not get it with their meals or in any other way.

The second proposed amendment is scarcely less drastic than the first.

—Little things can be very trying at times, Mr. Fowler thought, when one wet morning he could not find his umbrella. Like many married man he believed in the maxim, "When in trouble, blame your wife." "I say, Ellen," he shouted, "what on earth has happened to my new umbrella? I brought it home last night and now it's gone; and of course it's raining furiously!" "Why, it's scarcely raining at all," said his wife. "But last night it was simply pouring when the parson left, and so I lent him your umbrella." "What an asinine thing to do! I shall never see it again now, so I may as well buy another today!" "How can you be so wicked, Adolphus? As if the parson would stoop to stealing your umbrella!" "Stoop to stealing be hanged. I borrowed it from him a couple of months ago."—Exchange.

—"And you call this your music room?" "Yes." "But there are no musical instruments in it?" "No. It is so constructed that I can't hear any of the surrounding music that may be turned on from time to time."—Violin World.

Exhibition of National Guard Service

"Military week," April 10-15, at the State Armory, Fourteenth and Mission streets, began Monday with at least 2,000 persons in attendance. The spectators were given a demonstration of both infantry and artillery work by National Guardsmen, in addition to being shown through the big armory from top to bottom. The program was varied throughout the week. The infantry work consisted of a battalion drill, under command of Major W. H. Mallett, during the course of which nearly every formation practicable on a drill floor was gone through. The Eleventh Company of Coast Artillery gave a demonstration of the working of a 12-inch mortar, and the Sixth Company manned the newly-installed ten-inch disappearing rifle. The Eleventh Company was commanded by Captain John McHenry, Jr., and the Sixth Company by Captain M. S. James. Stands of arms and other military decorations were displayed, and non-commissioned officers acted as guides in showing visitors around the armory. The popularity of the military exhibitions increased with the days, and great crowds gathered to watch the interesting infantry, artillery and signaling work, the real thing in time of war. Preparedness was the key note of these extremely interesting exhibitions.

The purpose of this exhibit is educational. It is to show the taxpayer and the employer what the National Guard is, what it does, and why it deserves support both on patriotic grounds and for the more selfish reason of actual benefit to the employer. The National Guard of to-day is not to be judged by the militia of the past, with its large club dues and assessments, elaborate ceremonies and parades. To-day we find the Federal Government and the State jointly spending over a quarter of a million dollars annually on our National Guard; sensible laws and regulations have reduced the organized militia into a compact, business-like machine, developing in our young men patriotism, character and ability to serve our country in time of need.

Quartered in the building are the Headquarters, Band, First, Second, Third, Fourth, Sixth, Seventh, Ninth, Tenth, Eleventh and Twelfth Companies of Coast Artillery Corps; Company B, Signal Corps; Detachment Hospital Corps; Headquarters and three divisions of the Naval Militia, and the Machine Gun Company, and Band, Fifth Infantry.

The target practice gallery is located in the basement, and those interested may obtain tickets without cost from the Ordnance Department, good for five shots. Men are detailed to the range who will give instruction or assistance to those desiring it. The swimming tank, gymnasium and power station are also in the basement, where they may be inspected at any time. To provide proper training in the Armory, the War Department has installed in the building a 12-inch mortar, a ten-inch gun on a disappearing carriage, a three-inch rapid fire gun, and the necessary fire control apparatus for the fire and battery commands.

Interesting exhibits are shown by the Signal Corps and the Medical Department, the latter with "first aid packets" and other interesting paraphernalia.

GET YOUR SPRING CAMP KIT READY.

Spring, early spring, in all its rollicking moods, is stirring the blood of the countless enthusiasts who love to revel in the outdoor summer wooded and water life. Now is the time to prepare plans for the camp kit and other paraphernalia so dear to the heart of the camper who really enjoys and luxuriates in every detail of his list. By long odds the best place to buy such an outfit is that of Leibold & Co., outdoor outfitters, 217 Market street. They have a large and varied stock of regular army and navy goods, tents, hammocks, camp furniture. In short, every essential that a good camper requires, and at moderate prices.

—It would be difficult to conceive a more delightful cafe attraction than the Techau Tavern Show Girl Revue, which is packing the cafe to capacity. The eight principals are young ladies of great personal charm, with fresh, adequate voices, whose ensemble work is magnificent. They are gowned in beautiful creations designed especially for this production, and each week the costumes are as well as the songs are entirely new. On Saturdays the lady patrons of the Tavern are each presented with a souvenir bottle of La Boheme perfume.

"Braceing Real Swells!"

Stories about the recent Belgian market still flavor the afternoon oolong. There is the lovely tale of the woman who stopped in front of Mrs. Charlie Clark's table, and in the confidential tone one adopts towards one's peers, inquired about the tables presided over by the "real society" people! Miss Eleonora Sears, who was performing like a saleslady for Mrs. Clark, volunteered the information that "they were scattered all about the park," whereupon the discerning person thanked her and departed with these kind words: "I didn't mind asking you, dearie, but I'd hate to brace up to one of them real swells!"

Delicatessen Dames.

Then there were two women who hung around the delicatessen shop presided over by Mrs. Will Crocker, and all the while they were Fletcherizing their coffee and sandwiches they complained in loud tones that the public had been "brought there under false pretenses"; that they never would have come down town to see the smart set in its tailor clothes; that it was pretty small of those women to advertise that they would be in fancy costume, and then appear in street clothes. Just as they were leaving, their willow plumes still vibrating with the indignant emotion of the disappointed, one of them spotted Mrs. Sigmund Stern, and in a husky whisper breathed: "Now there is a real beautiful lady—Maxine Elliott's got nothing on her. But she's like the rest of them—no taste for dress. If they wouldn't put on fancy dress costumes, you'd think they'd have worn something real nice and fussy, instead of them plain tailored suits!"

Up to the last moment the committee in charge endeavored to have every one agree to wear costumes, but nothing availed to make the courage of B'lingum come to the sticking point and stick. Most of the glue in the resolution evaporated, and there were just enough people in costumes to give a few picturesque touches to the affair instead of putting in the picturesque in wide washes of color.

B'lingum too Healthy.

Mrs. Francis Carolan has a locker full of stories, for of course the women who came to her booth to buy hats and gowns would supply one with material for a good old anecdote. At nine in the morning, when the booths were supposed to be in readiness, there was a line in front of Mrs. Carolan's table impatiently awaiting her arrival. There was a genuine display of the bargaining talent of the average woman going on all day long at this stand, but it was one of the most profitable ventures, netting $700. The gowns did not bring high prices, the purchasers refusing to soar above the dead line of cheapness. A $300 gown that had been worn but once brought $35, and that was the highest price paid for a costume.

The brightest gem picked up in the vicinity of this booth fell from the lips of a B'lingumite who is always throwing out casual jewels in the amusing manner of the humorless. Said she towards the end of the day: "It's too bad they haven't more clothes to sell here—they could dispose of a lot more if they had them. It seems a shame that there was no one who had just gone into mourning—now I remember when we had that rummage sale for the Catholic Humane, fortunately Julia Welch had just gone into mourning, and she gave us all her lovely colored things, and we made loads on them. But there hasn't been a death lately."

It does seem pushing the charitable instinct a bit too far to complain because some aged B'lingumite did not die in the nick of time to aid a starving Belgian!

Green Peas and Shades of Sutro.

Mrs. Alfred Sutro, who sold vegetables at the stand presided over by Mrs. Clarence Smith, won the hearts of the French people who went a-marketing in Union Square, because she spoke the language of their beloved country like a native. While she was busy with a group of French people, a park lounger glowered on the scene and then muttered: "Huh! I'll bet old Mayor Sutro would turn in his grave if he could see her now."

"Would he be pro-German to that extent?" interrogated a fellow-loiterer.

"That's not it," sniffed the first, "but old man Sutro loved the parks and every little growing thing in his place which he wanted the people to have for their own some day. And there is Mrs. Sutro scooping green peas out of a box to help the Belgians, and look what that box is doing to that bush. I tell you, old Sutro——" and so forth and so backwards to the days when the water came up to Montgomery street.

Magic Shoes and Stockings.

The next big benefit following the afternoon dansant and supper dance of Monday and Tuesday of the post-Easter week will be the Wednesday flower show given for the Catholic Humane Bureau. Mrs. Fred Kohl, Mrs. Robin Hayne, Mrs. Ward Barron, Mrs. Joseph Donohoe, and the Misses Betty and Elena Folger, Christine Donohoe and Evelyn Barron, with the help of several others, have set for themselves the task of seeing that the choicest flowers that bloom down the peninsula way are culled for this flower fest. In Marin and Alameda Counties other committees are at work to the same end—which is that the flowers that bloom in the spring, tra la, tra la la, shall be converted into shoes and stockings for some thousand orphans under the care of this bureau.

Orange Blossoms for the Smart Set.

The preliminary tinkle of the June wedding bells begins to sound on the April air, and those who do not hold that June is the only month in which to pledge marriage vows are already putting the finishing touches to their plans.

On Tuesday of this week, Miss Marjorie Mhoon and Harry Heasley Fair were married at the home of the Horace Millers in Piedmont. The Miller home is one of the beauty spots in that neighborhood, and as the day itself was a perfect rapture, the guests who crossed from this side were enthusiastic about this daintily appointed wedding. The bride is related to the Miller clan, all of whom were present at the ceremony, the C. O. G. and H. M. A. Millers and all the other Millers not only taking up a goodly part of the alphabet, but making a large and interesting group when they all get together.

The young couple will live in Berkeley in a beautifully furnished home, which is in complete readiness for them, awaiting their return from their honeymoon trip.

Miss Helen Johnson, Miss Esther Bentley and Miss Dorothy Churchill have chosen May for their weddings, and Miss Marie Tyson has set the first week in June for the orange scented event, which is the all important date on her calendar.

Sanguinary Beaglers.

The kiddies down the peninsula have no use for the robust and gallant sport of beagling. Several pet bunnies have disappeared, and one admittedly was a victim of the mighty hunters who set forth after a delicious breakfast at Carolands and at the end of an all day hunt bagged a little white rabbit that was used to a life about as strenuous as that of the maiden who "sat on a cushion and sewed a fine seam, and all the day long ate strawberries and cream."

Structurally the bunny belonged to the rabbit family, but by nature it had none of that swift-footed talent which is sup-

A New Combination for Wearers of Glasses

With advancing years come new improvements in nearly all lines of endeavor and a local optical company is a very fortunate position in being able to supply all wearers of glasses with a new and not worthy combination, namely "Caltex Optics" Bifocals mounted in "Equipoise" eyeglasses. These new "Caltex" double vision lenses do away with the necessity of two pairs of glasses as reading and distance corrections are ground in one lens. The "Equipoise" eyeglass automatically holds these wonderful lenses in perfect alignment before the eyes, insuring the best possible results. Remember the combination—"Equipoise" eyeglasses and "Caltex" lenses.

posed to belong to the frightened rabbit family. Civilization had taken away all instinct for flight, and in its place had put several layers of fat and a gait not much more speeded up than Walter Hobart's after-dinner lope. So of course poor little bunny proved strong meat for the beagles, and the conquering hordes who returned with the day's kill are still trying to assuage the grief of the small boy who lost his pet.

It has not yet been necessary to appoint a statistician to make a card index report of the casualties in rabbitland. The sanguinary pastime of beagling has not yet bagged more than five jackrabbits at a hunt, and the usual record is two. Blood-thirsty business, this beagling the startled hare in the trenches!

Preparing for Smart Horse Show.

The interest of society these days is focused upon the Horse Show, which is to take place on the evenings of April 27th, 28th and 29th, and the afternoon of April 29th at the San Francisco Riding School, for the benefit of the People's Place and the San Francisco Polyclinic, two of this city's splendid philanthropies. The Horse Show held last year proved such a success that it was decided to make it an annual affair for the augmentation of the funds of these two organizations. Every afternoon sees groups of young folk cantering in the park, along the highway, practicing for the various events of the show.

Four polo teams, the San Mateo, the San Rafael, the Cavalry and the Riding School, will compete for trophies, a game being played each evening. The matinee program promises interesting activities in the juvenile set. Misses Eleanor and Margie Fleishhacker, Evelyn Tognazzini, Katherine Dorn, Edna Taylor, are practicing three times a week in preparation for the matinee events. Already a number of boxes have been taken, those who have subscribed being Mesdames William H. Crocker, Mortimer Fleishhacker, Herbert Fleishhacker, R. J. Hanna, William B. Thomas, Joseph D. Grant, Frederick McNear, Mountford S. Wilson and Miss Edith Hecht. Daniel Lively will be the ring master. The judges will be Chester Murphy of Portland, Majors Hilton and Whitney, Charles Butters and E. Courtenay Ford.

The sale of season tickets and boxes began on Wednesday morning at Sherman & Clay's.

Miss Margaret Center of Honolulu, for several years a pupil in the Hamlin School of this city, has gone to Australia to study music with Mme. Melba, who believes that her voice, with its sweetness and wonderful range, can be prepared for grand opera. Melba is greatly interested in the Melbourne Conservatory of Music, to which she often goes for the purpose of coaching its clubs. Miss Center goes as the guest of Melba for a year or more, and will receive special training from the diva. "Peggy" Center, as she is called, is a lovely girl of eighteen or twenty, greatly beloved, and with the promise of a bright career. Her father was David Center, of a well known family in San Jose.

Miss Ann Wilcox recently entertained with a luncheon and cards at the Hotel Oakland for fourteen of her friends. The invited guests were Mrs. Tyler Henshaw, Mrs. Metcalf, Mrs. Williamson, Mrs. Proctor, Mrs. Fitzgerald, Mrs. Hammer, Mrs. W. G. Henshaw, Miss Bertha Wilcox, Mrs. Everts, Mrs. Adams, Mrs. Grimes, Mrs. Howard and Mrs. Belden.

The Ladies' Pharmaceutical Society were the guests of Mrs. Caldecott, Mrs. Ashmede and Mrs. Condon at an April Fool luncheon at the Hotel Oakland. There were about thirty present. Mrs. O. W. Nordwell, 18 Lake avenue, entertained with a dinner at the Hotel Oakland on Friday, April 14th. Twenty-four guests were invited.

Lucie Jacobs Hill left on a visit East last Tuesday. She accompanied her father, Mr. Isidor Jacobs, who is on his way to Europe. Mrs. Hill, after a visit with relatives in New York and New Jersey, will be the guest of Kate Waller Barrett at her home in Virginia, joining her father on his return from Europe in June.

Events in the Paul Elder Gallery.—Dhan Gopal Mukerji will deliver a lecture on "Persian Poetry and Poets" in the Paul Elder Gallery, 239 Grant avenue, San Francisco, on Friday afternoon, April 21st, at 3 o'clock. He will speak on Firdausi, Ni-zami, Omar, Jelaluddin and others. Poetry of love and its message. The Children's Amusement and Story Club will meet in the Paul Elder Gallery Saturday afternoon, April 22d, at 2:30 o'clock. Mrs. Ruth Fuller Field will entertain the children with stories and teats of legerdemain.

The Dixie Club of California has reserved the ballroom, Palm Court and dansant room of the Palace Hotel for an elaborate benefit ball to be given Saturday, May 6th. The San Francisco Chapter, Woman's Section of the Navy League, which has undertaken the establishment of a National Service Training School at the Presidio, is the object of the benefit. More than two thousand guests are expected. Twenty-five tables have already been reserved by prominent society women. True Southern hospitality will predominate. Combining fashions of the past with the very latest mode, crinoline gowns will be worn by the women of the hostess club. United States and Confederate flags will be entwined in a lover's knot for the central decoration scheme in the Palm Court.

—Jules famous restaurant, south side of Market street just below Third, is now furnishing a remarkably attractive 40 cent luncheon as a special feature. Though the price is less than formerly, the luncheon is of the usual high quality of this widely known establishment. Dancing to the best of music is provided during dinner, $1 with wine.

PERSONAL ADVENTURES IN THE "HALLS" THIS WEEK

Calve Defies An Audience; Brings it to Her Feet

The Ex-Leading Lady Descants on the Personnel of Vaudeville

BY HENRY McDONALD SPENCER

The ex-Leading Lady settled her ample form comfortably in a chair at her favorite table, glanced around the room to make sure people were looking at her, placed her shapely hand under her chin where it could be readily seen, batted her lovely eyes a few times to keep them in good working order in case some bigger game than myself was sighted, and thus delivered herself:

"Say, listen!" Acknowledging the salutation as well as I was able, I inclined my head towards the hovering waiter, and started him on his way to the refreshment studio.

"What did you mean by saying last week that I was too fat to go on any more?"

"I meant nothing so ungallant," I hastened to assure her. "I only meant to infer that a certain indolence, perhaps a mere contempt for competition, a proud flair of never acknowledging defeat, induced you to retire before you were knocked out; that is to say," I added hastily, "before you had to come down to the small time, which I believe is the fate of all musical performers that stay in the game long enough."

"Say, the more you talk the more you show you don't know. The small time is not recruited from the has-beens of the big time, but the best of the small time get on with the big circuits."

"Well, where does the small time performer come from?"

"Why, dearie, don't you know that it is the cabarets that are supplying most of the talent, nowadays?" It may be remarked that the term "dearie" as used by the lady is not one of endearment, but purely parenthetical or ejaculatory, like that favorite shop-girl salutation—"listen."

"Of course, the European acts nearly all come from show families," she continued as she sipped her highball, "but we haven't been in the entertaining business long enough to have theatre or circus families."

"So, then, the cabarets are a nursery for the vaudeville stage? But what about the big feature acts?"

"Yes, make it the same, but tell George not to put so much ice in it next time—tell him it is for me." Then turning her attention to me again, she replied:

"They used to come from the legitimate, and musical comedy, but the movies is absorbing all the performers, so that outside of grand opera, there is no material being trained for the circuits."

"What is going to happen then?" I asked. "Will the spoken stage die out like coach dogs, simply because performers are not bred any more?"

And with that I went on to the

Orpheum

There was a drama within a drama at the Orpheum last Monday afternoon. When poor John L. Sullivan, battered and weary from the blows of a younger and more active man, placed one hand on the ropes of the ring in New Orleans, and raising the other aloft, huskily said: "The best man won, but I am glad he was an American," the spectators felt that they were experiencing one of those rare moments of dramatic climax which come to but few in their journey through life. Another such moment was when another proud veteran folded her arms and stepped to the very front of the theatre apron; there defied a tittering gallery to continue ragging her; stayed until she comelled the tremendous ovation of applause that was her due. Emma Calve fairly outgamed a rabble and brought an immense theatre audience to her feet out of admiration for her pluck—which admiration, for some curious reason, her singing was unable that day to invoke. I wish to add here that the analogy between the prizefighter and the prima donna goes no further than the fact of being veterans and game to the core.

At the conclusion of "Le Clarion," a French bugle song, Madame Calve paused on the final notes, and there came a distinct sound of irrelevant conversation and snickering on the part of quite a number of persons in the gallery; immediately the diva stopped her performance, and going to the foots, there ensued the scene described. I do not know whether she will ever read these lines, but before proceeding to an artistic consideration of her performance, I wish to pay my tribute to the beautiful and accomplished lady's personality and heroism. The bromidic method of treating a performer of Calve's calibre is to start with something like this: "Compared to the Calve of old . . ." I wonder if people realize that they, too, are not as of old; that cakes and ale are about the same as ever, that the "breast of the nymph in the brake" gleams white as ever in the moonlight, but that they have perhaps lost their taste for cakes and ale, and that the night air gives them rheumatism. Anyway, these comparisons are, as a rule, futile. Emma Calve's voice has the most perfectly pure bell-like tone conceivable, and if her rendering of Habanera from "Carmen" does not stir an audience, it is on account of an absence of gymnastics and a more restrained vocalization than the audience is looking for. Besides, I think that these non-smoking signs placed in the theatre where people are accustomed to smoke, and for two or three numbers beforehand, are a handicap to the performer so preferred.

While Signor Gasparri, Madame Calve's husband, may suffer in comparison with Ciccolini, who was here last week, yet it is not in an artistic way. His voice has just as pleasing tones, his breathing and sense of pitch are perfect, but he lacks the vigor and robustness of his predecessor, and, what is of even more importance to an Orpheum audience—the romantic air. His dressing in morning costume is unfortunate, as it is a style unsuited to a non-athletic man of sedentary occupation, but all of that has nothing to do with his singing, though it affects the popularity of his act.

The talented young San Franciscan pianist, leader and composer, Uda Waldrop, accompanied excellently the Calve-Gasparri concert. Waldrop will be remembered as having composed the Bohemian Jinks music of 1914.

But what, after all, can an audience be composed of that will receive Calve unmoved, even if she couldn't sing a note, and give three recalls to an accordion player. It seems to be very small beer to mention Pietro in the same column as the great singer, but I can only say that his rather effeminate mannerisms were personally distasteful to me, and his accordion a bore.

The play of "The Coward" in no way convinces as an argument against "Preparedness," except perhaps that a lady who can wing a man with a revolver at ten paces had better also be in the trenches as sharpshooter; and the actual sight of red fluid as blood appearing after the shot is demodee realism that I had thought to be laughed off the stage with the old melodrama. The rest of the bill was bright and attractive, and quite up to the average.

Well-Rounded Bill at Pantages

The Seven Bracks, a troupe of husky German athletes, stand out prominently on a strong bill at the Pantages this week. The men perform seemingly impossible feats in tossing one another about the stage with wonderful agility. Chris. Richards, who will forsake the vaudeville stage for a turn at the "movies," is a typical music hall comedian, with a pair of flexible dancing legs. "A Glimpse of Old Ireland," guaranteed "real Irish," with a backing of doves, dogs and crows, was a big hit with Michael Emmett, a sweet-voiced Irish tenor, in the leading role.

"The Dream Pirates" is a popular version of the Peter Pan type of play, with bloodthirsty sea-robbers, pretty dancers and a full-rigged Corsair ship.

There are several other good acts, including Donita, a singing comedienne; the Packard Four; and Violet and Charles, novelty acrobats. The Pathe Serial, "The Iron Claw," concludes a well-rounded bill.

Advance Notices

New Program at Pantages.—Madame Makaranke and her ten Oriental dancing girls, offering the pre-tentious dancing spectacle, "A Dream of the Orient," is the stellar attraction on the new program at the Pantages on Sunday. Madame Makaranke is a premiere danseuse from Russia. "After the Wedding," a domestic one-act farce with Edw. Farrell and his players as the participants, is one of the joy spots of the new show. The De Michele Brothers, one a harp player and the other a violinist, mingle classical selections with drollery. Other features will be Fabers and Waters, a comedy twain, who have a budget of nifty nonsense; the Dancing La Vars, typed as the "original revivalists of the old-fashioned cake walk;" Australian Creightons, acrobatic jugglers; Florence Fisher, the eccentric "movie" comedienne, and the fifth episode of "The Iron Claw," are other good specialties.

Orpheum.—The Orpheum announces another great new show for next week. Fannie Brice, who will be remembered as one of the chief comedy hits in Ziegfeld's Follies, will make her first appearance at the Orpheum next Sunday matinee. She is now creating a sensation in vaudeville, where her character creations have elicited the approval of both press and public in all the cities in which she has appeared. Henri De Vries, the Protean and character actor, will share the headline honors. He will be seen in a one-act plan called "A Case of Arson," in which he depicts seven different characters. Ethel Clifton and Brenda Fowler, two versatile girls, will appear in a sketch written by Miss Clifton, entitled "The Saint and the Sinner," in which they present opposite types of character, Miss Fowler appearing as "The Wife" and Miss Clifton as "The Woman." Vinie Daly appropriately styles her new act "L'Opera et la Danse," for it affords her abundant opportunity to display her ability in both singing and dancing. Andy Rice will deliver an original monologue entitled "My First Anniversary," which deals with courtship and marriage, and the complications and difficulties which attend the honeymoon. Two Tomboys present the only bumpsti-bumpsti act ever given by women. It will be the last week of Ray Dooley and company, and also of Gertrude Vanderbilt and George Moore in their successful singing and dancing novelties. A colored travelogue taken expressly for the Orpheum Circuit, exhibiting scenes in Scotland, Japan and "The Crimea" will serve as a finale to this novel and fascinating bill.

Columbia Theatre.—May Robson and her company of players will arrive in San Francisco from New York Monday morning, bringing to the Columbia Theatre James Forbes' latest comedy success, "The Making Over of Mrs. Matt." This will be the first visit of the popular star in two seasons, and it is said of her play, which Forbes was especially engaged to write, that it affords Miss Robson one of the best roles of her career. The story of "The Making Over of Mrs. Matt" is interesting and wholesome, and full of comedy situations in which this star shines brilliantly. There is a pretty love story and just enough drama to combine in making a clever three act play. Theatre-goers will recall to mind the types in Forbes' "The Chorus Lady," and will appreciate what this talented American author is capable of creating in the way of stage characters. In "The Making Over of Mrs. Matt" quite a long cast, for a comedy, is required, and a fine aggregation of players has been brought together to give support to the star in the presentation of Forbes' play. Miss Robson has enjoyed already lengthy and highly profitable engagements with "The Making Over of Mrs. Matt" in the large Eastern cities, from which reports have come to the effect that this star is seen at her very best in her latest vehicle. "The Making Over of Mrs. Matt" will receive its first

People's Orchestra has Distinguished Backers

That San Francisco is eager to encourage the establishment of a permanent musical center in the Exposition Auditorium has been proven by the many subscribers to the People's Orchestra concerts, the first of which will be held on Easter Sunday afternoon with Giulio Minetti as conductor, and Mme. Clementina Marcelli as soloist.

Mr. Minetti's position in musical circles is well known both as a conductor and as an educator. Associated with him are Andrew Younger Wood, the publisher, and William Edwin Chamberlain, who originated the Young People's concerts in Berkeley. The organization has retained sixty of the members of the Symphony Orchestra who played under Alfred Hertz.

A guarantee fund is being raised to cover a possible deficit occurring from the low pricing of seats. This fund makes it possible to give the school children the benefit of each final rehearsal on the Friday preceding a concert. At all times children will be admitted for ten cents. As orchestral music is becoming a feature of school recreation, this innovation has received the endorsement of the Board of Education.

Nikolai Sokoloff, conductor of the People's Philharmonic Orchestra.

HI, YI, YI! A CIRCUS IS IN TOWN!

A circus with all its fanfarans, lions and tooting caliope has come to town to delight the small boy and the old boys. Al. Barnes' big four-ring wild animal circus, at Eighth and Market streets, is the biggest thing of its kind in the West. It has more educated performing wild animals than is exhibited by all other like shows combined. These include African lions, leopards, bears, seals and sealions, tigers and other carnivora. Conspicuous among them are the horse riding lions. The forty animal clowns are wonders of their kind and sources of perpetual laughter. Two shows are given daily up to and including Sunday, April 16th. Reserved seats are on sale at Sherman & Clay's Music Store.

SPECIAL AUTO SERVICE ON SAUSALITO ROUTE.

The management of the Northwestern Pacific Railroad has arranged an unusually convenient schedule of ferry trips to and from Sausalito for the increasing number of automobilists that annually seek the famous picturesque rural delights extending several hundred miles north of the Bay shore. Marin County has completed a network series of good roads, so that after leaving Sausalito, instead of motor cars being racked to pieces, they roll over ideal roadway through the most picturesque scenery in the State. Automobile travel into this inviting territory has been increasing with the years, and of necessity the management of the Northwestern Pacific is called upon to make new provision for an increasing traffic each year. The demand for auto accommodation proved so great this year that it was impossible to accommodate the demand on the regular boats of the company. Accordingly, special boats for automobiles have been interjected into the service. These special boats carry autos to their capacity. The new schedule of ferry boats handling automobiles run daily as follows:

"FRISCO, THE FALLEN."

Leo S. Robinson, who acquired a notable reputation through his distinctive poem, "When the Lights Went Out," in memory of the Exposition, has just issued from the press a little paper covered booklet entitled "Frisco the Fallen," to commemorate "Ten Years After" the big fire which prostrated the city of San Francisco, April 18-21, 1906, a conflagration that burned over four square miles, destroyed 25,000 buildings and created a loss of $350,000,000. The letter press of fifteen pages was written by William Marion Reedy, the widely known editor of the St. Louis Mirror, and was written in the week following the fire. It covers the kaleidoscopic story of the varied geniuses in their respective lines who contributed to the shaping of the inner life of the argonautic city by the Golden Gate: the Vigilantes, Judge Lynch, Flood, O'Brien, Sharon, Fair, Mackay, Stanford, Crocker, Huntington, Sutro, Keene, Sarah Althea Terry, the Chinese, the Barbary Coast, Bret Harte, Mark Twain, Denis Kearny, Richard Realfe, Henry George, Markham, Frank Norris, Ambrose Bierce, Gertrude Atherton, Gelett Burgess, Joaquin Miller, Robert Louis Stevenson, William Keith, Hearst, Jack London, Paul Elder, and that rare cosmopolitan life reflected in the restaurants, hotels, theatres and foreign districts in the town, a life and picture unique on this continent—San Franciscan.

HEARTFELT TESTIMONIAL TO CHARLES S. YOUNG.

Charles S. Young, who is retiring as business manager of the "Examiner" to become Western manager at Chicago for the big advertising firm of N. W. Ayer & Son, was given a rousing farewell banquet, this week, at the St. Francis Hotel by his hosts of friends in this city. Those who were unable to gather around the board sent loyal felicitous messages of their good wishes. Ringed around the board were practically all the influential callings, business and professional. Among them were Mayor Rolph, C. C. Moore, president of the recent International Exposition, John F. Drum, E. O. McCormick, R. B. Halc, M. H. de Young, James Woods, Benjamin Ide Wheeler, Henry Morse Stephens, M. H. Esberg, Marshall Hale, K. C. B., Grover A. Magnin, and several scores of others. Present also were the liveliest local wits, and for several hours the interchanges rattled at a record rate. But through it all ran the softened note of regret that the departing guest of the evening would break a link in the old-time social gatherings. Among the several special fun-making and entertaining stunts developed for the occasion was a series of pictures illustrating the "Seven Ages of Young," with an epilogue. They were Crib-age, Col-age, Espion-age, Press-age, Ad-age, Scrim-age, Hom-age, and Bon-Voy-age. And in this wise a good fellow was given a heart-felt farewell.

GENERAL BUSINESS SITUATIONS.

The main characteristics which have been noted of the business situation in recent months are unchanged, except to show signs of greater intensity, as spring comes on and the period for more active outdoor operations is at hand. There is not enough of materials or labor for all the work that the country would like to have done, and the result, of course, is that the requirements which are most pressing and can afford to outbid the others will be served first and the others will await their turn. The effects of full employment and rising wages are seen in the excellent reports upon the retail trade which come from all sections of the country. There is a large distribution of merchandise, and retailers, instead of buying for immediate wants only, are endeavoring to cover their wants for some time to come. This is always the case when the turn has clearly been made, and the effect is to overwhelm jobbers and manufacturers and stimulate prices unduly. The buying power of the country, based upon the money value of the crops and disbursements for wages in all lines of industry, was never so great as at this time, and its effect is to be seen in the enormous traffic that is crowding the railways.

UNION OIL COMPANY'S QUARTER REPORT.

Profits of the Union Oil Company from all operations, after deducting general expenses, taxes and interest, for the three months ended March 31, 1916, will be approximately $1,700,000, an increase of $650,000 over the March quarter of 1915, and equivalent to 20 per cent per annum on the capital stock, while the net profit, after making provision for estimated depreciation, will be approximately $1,150,000, an increase of $550,000 over the corresponding period of 1915 and equivalent to 13½ per cent per annum on the capital stock. Production of the company and controlled companies combined for the quarter was 1,418,556 net barrels, an increase over the March quarter of 1915 of 174,559 barrels. An average of twenty-two drilling crews is now being kept in operation. Sales for the quarter were the largest in the history of the company, aggregating $5,883,943, an increase of $1,606,957 over the March quarter of 1915. The prices prevailing for both fuel and refined products were higher than the corresponding quarter of last year, while the volume of business done was considerably greater. The company recently contracted for deliveries, which have not yet been made, of several million gallons of its lubricating oil to Eastern purchasers.

MINING MARKET.

The mining share market has been very active during the past week, especially in Tonopah shares. The rise in the price of silver, the great showing in the Tonopah Extension, and the new development in the Rescue Eula on the 950 foot level, created a large trading in these issues. Goldfield shares were inactive, operators evidently waiting for some new developments in any one of the different properties. The flotation process is reported to be a great success. Rochester reports a strike of very rich ore in the Rochester Company. Neuzel Crown Point has reached a depth of 100 feet, and started to cut out a station to crosscut the vein they have been following down the shaft. Oatman has opened their new Exchange, and everybody expects great developments in that camp.

THIS CITY'S PROSPERITY.

San Francisco's financial and commercial progress seems to be growing with the months, as shown by bank clearings. In building operations a clear gain of $700,000 is shown this quarter over the corresponding quarter of last year. Real estate sales are also showing a substantial increase this year. In February the sales were more than double those of February last year. San Francisco has passed from eighth to sixth city in the size of its postal receipts. The commerce of this port is breaking all records. The exports for the first quarter amount to $24,838,320, as compared with $22,192,196 for the first quarter of 1915. Imports show an even more phenomenal increase, the figures for the quarter being nearly double those for the corresponding quarter of last year.

—The revival of prosperity is naturally having a favorable effect upon Treasury income. Importations are rapidly increasing, and although the proportion of free goods is much larger than formerly, the customs receipts are considerably larger than at any time since the outbreak of the war. It is roughly calculated that the income tax, which for individuals and corporations together, yielded $80,211,778 last year, will yield $100,000,000 this year. The ordinary internal revenues are also increasing. The Treasury receipts for the month of February this year and last were, respectively, $55,432,813.85 and $43,261,276.61. Including public debt transactions and all other receipts and disbursements, there was a net excess of income in February of $5,993,401.60, as against a net excess of disbursements in February, 1915, of $18,070,621.94. In March the net excess of income to the 25th instant was $3,572,335, as against net disbursements in the corresponding period of last year of $6,382,294.

—The monthly statement of unfilled orders of the United States Steel Corporation, issued this week, again broke all records. The orders stood on March 31st at 9,331,001 tons, an increase of 762,035 tons over February 29th, when they were 8,568,966 tons, the previous high record.

"PACIFIC" PLUMBING FIXTURES IN REMARKABLE EXPANSION.

Of late, the demand for "Pacific" Plumbing Fixtures has been increasing at such an extraordinary rate that the present "Pacific" plant has been literally swamped with orders. There was only one practical way to meet the emergency, and this was promptly accomplished by the management purchasing outright the plant of the Western States Porcelain Company at Richmond, across the bay from San Francisco. This addition will increase the production of the "Pacific" Plumbing Fixtures by approximately thirty per cent. The broadening prospects of the company are such that they are already figuring on a radical increase of the number of their kilns.

Though "Pacific" ware has been on the market only a comparatively short time, it has won an enviable name for itself throughout the coast, due naturally to the superior quality of its ware and the unusually advantageous location of its plant on the coast. "Pacific" fixtures are clean-cut in finish and designed to meet the best surroundings, as may readily be recognized when it is stated that among the latest installations are such buildings as San Francisco's new $8,000,000 City Hall, Oakland Civic Auditorium, San Francisco Polytechnic High School, Oakland Technical School, the Hobart skyscraper, San Francisco, Hotel Plaza, Alameda County Infirmary, Franklin School, Oakland school, and the big Eugene School, Portland, Oregon.

"Six Star Ranch."

No young girl of vim and spirit who adores the West and the freedom of spirit in outdoor life which it aspires, can resist the appeal of Eleanor Porter as developed in this diverting story. Her list of such books are famous, and are headed by the widely popular "Pollyana" series, books that girls will read two and three times. In "Six Star Ranch," Cordelia, the heroine, a minister's young daughter, is invited from her New England home to enjoy herself in all the outdoor freedom of a great big Texas ranch. Great was the excitement in the little village over all the details of her departure on this great trip, the event of her life, and great and wonderful was the welcome given her by the delighted cowboys and cattle men on her arrival. Incidentally there are a number of romantic endeavors in it like the search of Cordelia for the "lost" oil well. It is primed with girl's fun and girl's motives, and the frolics and good times of whole souled, happy girlhood. The book is appropriately illustrated with a colored frontispiece and wash drawings by R. Farrington Elwell and Frank J. Murch.

Price $1.25. Postage, 15 cents. Published by The Page Company, Boston.

"Reform."

Colonel Ralph de Clairmont of San Francisco sets forth in this little volume an essay on the political, financial and social condition of the United States in an endeavor to show the dangers, defects and remedy. Born abroad, the author came to this country as a boy in 1856, and has resided here ever since. He was acquainted with General Winfield Scott, and was intimate with many of the Washington officials of that time, and was once connected with the military and diplomatic service of this country. The author sounds a warning cry on certain alleged evils which beset this country, and which in time, he believes, will endanger its existence. Among them is autocratic wealth, conflicting laws, insincere political parties, loose immigration laws, anarchism, selling our public lands, disrespect of laws, suppression of national banks, reduction of war pensions, regulation of the liquor traffic and the like. The book is now in the fourth edition.

"English Grammar Simplified."

This title is a flashlight exposing in a nutshell the contents of the book, the cardinal rules of grammar set forth in an original and simple way, so that the reader not only may understand, he must understand. It is almost unreasonable to expect a simpler method of setting forth the rules, or rather the accepted facts of grammar and correct English speech. The array of facts is logical, comprehensive and satisfying, so satisfying that they stick in the memory in a fluent, common sense way, and are naturally on tap in any grammatical emergency. Professional and business men and women will find a ready instructor in this helpful book to broaden and enrich their knowledge of English. It has been designed to meet the constant demand in the office, the study, the home, or the schools for a handy volume, which may be kept literally "at hand," by which to recover quickly some item of correct usage, or to explain it to another, or to settle readily and surely any grammatical perplexity or disputed matters as they may arise. The plan is the simplest that can be devised. Part I treats words, which in grammar are always considered as Parts of Speech. The eight—and only eight—parts of speech are treated in their order as Noun, Pronoun, Adjective, Verb, Adverb, Preposition, Conjunction, tion, Interjection. A copious index furnishes an easy access to any of the various questions in grammar which the reader may seek light on.

"I Conquered."

Harold Titus has told an entertaining story in relating the conquest of the son of a New York millionaire to break off the drink habit and recover his own manhood. His father loses all patience with the lad, and in a dramatic scene orders him from the house. Danny Lennox goes, and gives up what money he has in his pocket, save $10, to a passenger ticket agent for a ticket that will carry him out West. The ticket carries him to Colt, Colorado, and there his adventures begin, punctuated with numerous battles with himself against drink. In time young Lennox conquers himself and incidentally captures a famous wild stallion in Colorado, and in the taming of the wild horse he gradually finds his own undeveloped and latent powers. Of course there is a sweet and lovable girl on a nearby ranch, who had been educated in the East, and who sensed the young man's character and position. The story glows with Western romance and grips the reader to the close. Frontispiece in colors.

"Miss American Dollars."

Paul Myron's story touches the rim of war and yet it chronicles current events in matters that give an intimate impression that the latest phases of certain important historical events are being chronicled in the pages. A veteran American multi-millionaire travels with his daughter in Europe, ready to employ his fortune for the uplift of down-trodden peoples, since he considers that his own country does not need his help. He undertakes the financing of the newly created Kingdom of Albania, a project which he abandons upon the outbreak of the great war, in order to establish relief centers. Turkey joins in the declaration of war, but with his daughter he finally makes his way through the fiery lines that cobweb out from Constantinople to London. The perilous journey awakens him at last to the unpreparedness and helplessness of America, and he finally hears his own country's call. So he starts homeward to sound the warning. His plans are thwarted and the story plunges deeper in adventure and romance. The book grips the reader from cover to cover.

BIG IDEA IN CELEBRATING TEN YEARS AFTER THE FIRE.

An enthusiastic movement started organization in San Francisco this week, for the purpose of showing their appreciation to the world at large for the aid rendered the sufferers in the great fire of 1906 by the American Red Cross Society. On the suggestion of A. B. C. Dohrman it was decided that the only practical way to show befitting returns was to make the membership of the San Francisco chapter of the Red Cross the largest in the United States. At the time of the big fire of April 18, 1906, there were only 700 members of the Red Cross in this city, yet San Francisco received aid amounting to $9,700,000, the largest sum ever bestowed by the Red Cross in public calamity.

Now there is every prospect that by April 18th San Francisco will have an enrollment of 25,000 members. This is what the committee headed by Marshal Hale has set out to accomplish. The membership roll is to be presented to the Red Cross as San Francisco's tribute of appreciation at the celebration of the tenth anniversary of the birth of the new city at the Exposition Auditorium on the night of April 18th. Have you done your part? If not, sign one of the blank applications and contribute $1 to Allen Knight, treasurer, 502 California street, or sign the application at the campaign headquarters in the Plaza Hotel, 328 Post street.

DRAMA LEAGUE ENTERTAINS GUESTS.

The Drama League gave a very interesting program touching on plays, this week, at the Sequoia building, with Mrs. Charles H. Smith acting chairman of program and music. Mrs. D. E. F. Easton, president of the Drama Club, addressed the Pacific Coast Women's Press Association on "The Tercentenary of Shakespeare." Continuing the Shakespearean program under the direction of Mrs. Charles Smith, scenes from "The Two Gentlemen of Verona" and "The Merchant of Venice" were presented by Mrs. Daisy Kimball Adams and Miss Marjorie Smith. Both of these talented young women have superior interpretations of the Shakespearean women. Their lines were splendidly spoken and faithfully portrayed.

Musical numbers on the "Shakespearean Day" were supplied by Mrs. Prosper Reiter and Lincoln Batchelder. "Who is Sylvia," Monk Gould, sung by Mrs. Reiter, with Mrs. Charles Smith at the piano, marked one of the noteworthy musical contributions before this association.

Leo Cooper contributed a reading of scenes from "The Merchant of Venice." Over the tea cups the guests voted the gathering an unusually enjoyable success.

A SICILIAN NIGHT.

O for that deep Sicilian night,
When all the stars were burning bright,
And ocean, in a slumber bound,
Gave but a sleepless, gentle sound,
There, by that heavy, glimmering tide,
We were together, side by side,
And I held you to me so fast;
There was no future and no past:
We were a part of consciousness,
That, suffering, makes to life no less.
Only a quivering moment then
And an immortal, boundless ken;
Until I knew you for my own
Beside the faint, eternal moon.
And you were I, and I was you,
In brief transparency of view.
A world all silent and all sheen,
All possible that might have been.
We spoke no more than do the dead,
But we were mute with Life instead.
O for that deep Sicilian night,
When for an instant all was Light.

United States Coast Artillery Makes Run to Halfmoon Bay

That the quick transportation of men and guns from one possible point of attack to another is recognized as an important factor in Coast defense by the U. S. Army was demonstrated last Sunday when the Thirteenth Company of Coast Artillery, with a four-ton howitzer, made a run from Fort Miley to Halfmoon Bay entirely in automobiles. The California Automobile Reserve Corps, which is composed of a number of the lead-truck, and the artillerists were taken from Miley to Halfmoon Bay in autos in one hour and fifty minutes, as the automobile Reserve Corps contribution to experimental defense plans for this city.

The truck carrying the cannon accomplished in three hours what it would ordinarily take twelve horses a day and a half to do, and the soldiers in less than two hours covered ground that would mean a severe two days' hike.

This was the first test given the newly formed Auto Reserve Corps, and Brigadier-General William L. Sibert, commanding the Pacific Coast Artillery District, who accompanied the soldiers, pronounced the test an entire success, as also did Colonel Alfred M. Hunter, commanding the San Francisco coast defenses, and Captain H. D. Ryus, commander of the auto reserve corps, to whom much of the credit must be given for the perfect manner in which the experiment was conceived and executed.

The Thirteenth Company, 110 men strong, under command of Captain James R. Pourie, and carrying full infantry field equipment, piled into thirty cars furnished by the Cadillac, Oldsmobile, Buick, Reo and Chalmers agencies, all of which hold membership in the corps, at Fort Miley, at 9 o'clock, and led by motorcycle policemen started the dash to Halfmoon Bay. The Saurer truck, equipped with Goodrich solid tires, con-ing auto firms, supplied the motor vehicles, while the officers and non-coms. of the Machine Gun Co., Fifth Inf. N. G. C., accompanied the column as observers and to obtain extra instruction and actual experience with the regular troops.

A seven-inch howitzer weighing four tons was sent to Halfmoon Bay from Fort Miley in 3 hours on a powerful "Saurer" tributed by the International-Mack Corporation of San Francisco, had previously started its trip.

Accompanying the expedition were Captain Marriott of the Machine Gun Co., and his officers in two Chalmers autos and a big 8-cylinder sevenpassenger King. This was the only National Guard detachment with the forces.

The run down was made through San Mateo and over the mountain road, which is exceptionally hilly, very winding and extremely rough in places. The Saurer truck, with its heavy cannon aboard, was overtaken on the summit of the hills between San Mateo and Halfmoon Bay. It had not made one stop for the entire trip, and reached Halfmoon Bay but half an hour after the flying squadron of automobiles had arrived there.

At Halfmoon Bay the soldiers threw up shelter tents and had a hot dinner, and after an hour and a half rest, camp was broken and the return run was made along the shore road. Going and coming, not a single car "straggled," and the automobile corps proved to the satisfaction of Fort Miley officers that with its aid a portion of one day was all that was necessary to accomplish the same results that would obtain in about three days without motor transportation.

Thousands of automobilists and residents of different communities through which the soldiers passed cheered the dash, and American flags were displayed lavishly along the route.

The California Automobile Reserve Corps is made up of the agencies that entered cars, these agencies having signified their desire to aid the Federal Government in every possible way in its preparedness program. Later, it is planned to organize one company from each agency, so that large bodies of troops can be quickly transported to any point within striking distance of San Francisco.

In addition to General Sibert, Colonel Hunter and the officers of the Thirteenth Company, Major Sam Bottons, Major Chas. H. Hilton, Captain H. H. Sheen and several other army officers were close observers of the work of the automobiles, and pronounced themselves as enthusiastic over the results of the test.

"The automobile reserve corps intends to work hand in hand with the regular army in any San Francisco defense scheme," said Commander Ryus at the conclusion of the run, "and I believe that the trip shows that, if the safety of San Francisco ever depends upon the rapidity with which artillery and troops can be sent to threatened points on the Coast, the corps is going to do a big part in safeguarding the city. To-day's test shows what a tremendous factor the motor car is going to be in any defense plans."

While the trip was accomplished without mishap of any kind, nevertheless the News Letter would take the liberty of suggesting to the authorities that, in face of accident, and to make the trip as much in accord with service conditions as possible, an auto ambulance corps accompany future expeditions of the kind.

Sergeant Charles Goff and the Traffic Officers under him are to be highly complimented for the efficient manner in which they handled the run and kept the road clear for the entire distance, a round trip of 76 miles. The following letter has been received by Captain Ryus from General Sibert:

Headquarters
Pacific Coast Artillery District
Fort Miley, Cal.

From: Major C. H. Hilton, C. A. C.
To: Capt. H. D. Ryus, Commanding California Division, Automobile Reserve Corps, San Francisco, Cal.
Subject: Commendation.

1. The Artillery District Commander, General Wm. L. Sibert, has directed me to convey to you and your associates his great appreciation of your successful efforts yesterday of transporting the 13th Company Coast Artillery Corps, and a 7-inch field howitzer to Halfmoon Bay and return.

2. The time made, one hour and fifty minutes for the company, and three hours and fifteen minutes for the gun, was highly satisfactory and demonstrated that troops and guns may be moved into positions for defense under emergency conditions by automobile transportation in much shorter time than by any other, and thus their efficiency is increased to a large extent.

3. The promptness, speed and efficient manner in which the men and gun were handled yesterday without a mishap of any kind deserves special commendation, and the same is due all of those who through no slight voluntary contribution of time and material made the maneuver a success.

4. The lesson was good from a military standpoint, and much was learned. The General desires me to convey his best wishes for the continual success of your organization, and to state that he is ready at any time to assist in any way consistent and within his power.

(Signed) C. H. HILTON,
Adjutant, Pacific Coast Artillery District.

Eddie O'Donnell in a Deussen Wins Corona Road Race

Tragic Death of Bob Burman Mars Race

Eddie O'Donnell, driving a Dussenberg, won the Corona road race last Saturday afternoon and pulled down the $5,000 capital prize. O'Donnell stopped only once during the entire 301 miles. His time was 3:29:2. Thomas (Mercer), second; Pullen (Mercer), third.

Wild Bob Burman's thundering Peugeot turned over in the ninety-seventh lap, hurling Burman and Mechanician Schrader from the car. The accident occurred on the curve leading into the stretch that leads past the grand stand.

A. E. Speers, a spectator, was killed and several persons were injured when the car leaped the track and plunged into the spectators. Burman died in a Riverside hospital a few hours after the race.

Burman's car got away from control on the back stretch when a tire blew out. The great racing car leaped over the rail and wrecked an automobile standing beside the track. Speers was standing beside the automobile. He was struck and terribly mangled. He died a few minutes later. Burman sustained a fracture of the skull and both his legs were broken.

O'Donnell was still forging ahead at the end of the eightieth lap. He was a good two laps ahead of Tetzlaff in the Omar.

Joe Thomas, the youngster, driving a Mercer, was third, and Burman, in a Peugeot, was fourth. Eddie Pullen was fifth and Gandy was sixth. Durant was two laps behind Gandy.

Bob Burman had moved up to second place at the end of eighty-seven laps. O'Donnell was still in the lead, with an average of eighty-seven miles an hour. Joe Thomas was third, and Tetzlaff was fourth. Pullen was holding fifth position, and Gandy sixth. The track was beginning to cool and the field was picking up speed at every lap. Burman was forced to the pit in his eighty-sixth lap on account of tire trouble. His speed was burning up the right rear tire. O'Donnell at this point increased his lead. Pullen was driving furiously, trying to catch up with the leaders, and Thomas changed a tire in twenty seconds, so eager was he to hold his position.

The cars and drivers in the order in which they finished are as follows:

Driver and Car—	Time	Average Speed
O'Donnell, Dusenbergl.....	3:29:52	86.5
Thomas, Mercer	3:36:01	84
Pullen, Mercer	3:38:36 2-5	83
Tetzlaff, Omar	3:58:45	76
Durant, Chevrolet Spec.	4:05:24	74

E. S. Waterman was sixth in the running, but he was flagged.

The prizes offered for the six places were, in order, $5,000 and temporary possession of the Corona trophy cup, $3,000, $2,000, $1,000, $700 and $300.

In a race of this kind the tire equipment always arouses a great deal of interest. Goodrich Silvertown Cord Tires seem to be having everything pretty much their own way this year so far in the racing game, the same as last. Ninety-five per cent of the cars which qualified for the Corona races were equipped with Silvertown tires. The first four winning cars and the sixth were equipped with Silvertown Cords, and it is rather significant that Durant, who qualified for fifth place, used up so many tires of another make that he exhausted his pit equipment, and in his last tire change applied a Silvertown to his right rear wheel. It is also worthy of comment that Barney Oldfield, according to newspaper reports, stopped at the pits at the end of the third lap with his tires in rags. He also did not use Silvertowns.

In the Ascot Park races, also, Silvertowns made a remarkable showing, all the winning cars being equipped with this make.

"This victory for our Silvertown Tires is all the more significant," said C. E. Cook, Coast manager for the B. F. Goodrich Rubber Co., "when it is taken into consideration that every Goodrich Tire used in these races was paid for at the full price. There was no inducement offered other than the sheer merit of the tire itself.

Superintendent H. A. French of the Motor Vehicle Department, gives the following figures to last Saturday: Registrations—Automobiles, 161,762; chauffeurs, 6,492; motorcycles, 20,496; automobile dealers, 1,143; motorcycle dealers, 174. Receipts—Automobiles, $1,688,667.50; chauffeurs, $12,876.50; motorcycles, $40,900; automobile dealers, $29,303.25; motorcycle dealers, $777.50; miscellaneous, $837. Total receipts, $1,773,361.75.

The attorney general of Wisconsin, in an opinion handed down lately, holds that only the driver, and not the owner, should be seated in the motor vehicle, is responsible when the law is violated. Richland County officials brought up the point, and were instructed to prosecute only the chauffeur in a case where the car was not stopped for a frightened horse

Auto Parts' Manufacturers Banquet in Detroit

Three hundred and fifty automobile men, representing the most important branch of the industry to-day—the parts manufacturing end—were guests of the King Motor Car Company at the Hotel Statler in Detroit, when the King's third annual speedfest was featured.

It was probably the unique gathering of its kind of the year, because it brought together at a time when the industry is clamoring for different parts the men who are moving every obstacle possible to produce parts so that the automobile industry will be able to make deliveries of cars. According to George E. Erlin, Secretary of the Reliance Automobile Company, agents for the King eight-cylinder cars.

Artemas Ward, Jr., president of the King Motor Car Company, made the only address of the evening, it having been agreed that the dinner would be an informal gathering devoid of speechmaking. Mr. Ward thanked the parts' makers for the part they have played in placing the eight-cylinder King in the enviable position it holds to-day as being the world's leading popular-priced eight-cylinder motor car. He declared that if the product did not live up to the standard set for it that this position would be easily secured by a competitor. He told the parts' makers that the King Motor Car Company realized the handicaps they were working under, and that every assistance which the King organization could render would be given with the same King spirit that has characterized the organization's success and open-hearted co-operation.

Californian Manufacturer Enters the Tire Field

When offering a new automobile tire to the public, the Bowers Rubber Works call attention to the fact that they have been in successful operation manufacturing high-grade mechanical rubber goods in California for more than twenty-seven years.

During that time they have furnished large quantities of specification rubber to the government and to large corporations, who demand the toughest and most durable material, requiring the greatest care and skill to produce.

With these years of experience and the assistance of expert tire makers, who have grown up with that industry, the Bowers Rubber Works offers its customers a high-grade, hand-made, most perfect tire and inner tube at a fair price and with a fair guarantee.

The makers guarantee their pneumatic tires to be free from imperfections, and will make adjustments on a basis of 5,000 miles for a Plain Tread and 6,000 miles for a Grip Tread. A great deal of interest is being displayed on automobile row over the new entry into the tire field.

Dimming Made Easy

Sergeant Charles Goff, head of the traffic squad, Police Department, makes the following interesting contribution to the dimming problem.

The recommendation is that the illumination shall be adequate to distinguish objects on the road at a distance of 150 feet and to distinguish objects on either side of the roadway at a point ten feet in advance of the car, and by requiring that the condensed beams of light shall not be over forty-two inches from the ground at a point seventy-five feet in advance of the vehicle. This practically covers the essentials of anti-glare light.

The most important requirement is that the condensed beams of light shall point downward, so that they do not flash in the eyes of other users of the road, and this, in my estimation, constitutes the most satisfactory, safe and practical dimming arrangement that can be provided.

Over-dimming has its dangers, particularly during the rainy season, and it must not be overlooked that the condensed rays of light thrown ahead on the ground serve as a warning to pedestrians and also to other vehicles at street intersections.

What is required is that the lamp brackets shall be bent so that the lamps are so placed that the condensed rays of light will point downward and strike the ground with the center of the condensed ray, preferably not more than forty feet from the front of the machine, and that the top of the condensed ray of light shall strike the ground at a distance of about seventy-five feet from the machine. All these measurements, of course, must be taken on a level road.

Some automobiles have their lamps so arranged that it is very difficult or perhaps impossible to bend them down. For such it will be necessary that the lights be so shaded or dimmed that the condensed rays of light will point downward.

As above stated, the main point is to get the light down on the road—not up in the trees or in the eyes of other users of the road. I have been assured by members of the Motor Car Dealers' Association that they will be very glad to co-operate with the traffic squad of the police department wherever possible, by so placing the lamps of their car users that the rays of light will be deflected downward.

Alcohol for Motors

If motor car designers will provide engines that will use denatured alcohol as a fuel without the waste and extravagance incident to its use in the present day internal combustion engine, an unlimited supply of fuel is available from the waste products of the forests of the world, according to Howard F. Weiss, director of the United States Forest Products Laboratory, Madison, Wis. Mr. Weiss has just completed experiments extending over a period of three years, and made a formal report to the federal government.

The Madison laboratory produced 30 to 35 gallons of grain alcohol from one ton of sawdust, and the cost ran between 13 and 15 cents per gallon. The alcohol was 95 per cent pure. The lumber cut annually in the United States is 40,000,000,000 feet. Using only the waste of the sawmills, it is estimated by Mr. Weiss that 500,000,000 gallons of alcohol can be manufactured each year.

"There is no question in my mind that the production of alcohol will develop into a gigantic industry," said Mr. Weiss. "The advantage in favor of alcohol for power purposes are manifold. When you take petroleum from the ground it is lost forever. Trees multiply. We now have in sight a half-billion gallons of alcohol each year, while our visible supply of gasoline is rapidly diminishing.

"You cannot run a motor car as far on a gallon of alcohol as you can on gasoline with the present type of engine, but with alterations and improvements, so that they will stand a higher explosive compression, the thermal energy of alcohol will equal that of gasoline. Alcohol is safer to handle, forms no carbon, has no smoke, and it is not offensive."

Motor Speedway Assured

Articles of incorporation were filed this week by the promoter of the new motor speedway, which is to be located in or near San Francisco. The enthusiastic reception that the project has received at the hands of the automobile dealers and the general business and mercantile classes has given the speedway idea such an impetus that the projectors announce that they will be able to start work on the plans and the actual construction of the course much sooner than originally planned.

Nat T. Messer and Ivan R. Gates, two of the most active speedway workers and officials in the California Speedway Association are busy getting the hundred and one details of the new organization in shape preparatory to launching one of the biggest motoring projects ever attempted on the Pacific Coast.

Last week saw a number of big automobile men enter the arena to actively aid in making the speedway a big success. The general public, as well as the motoring interests of the Bay Cities, are now fully awake to the benefits that will accrue to the city and surrounding territory, by having a modern, high-class speedway located here, and they are ready and willing to support the new venture as soon as an opportune time arrives.

The estimated cost of a site for the speedway, building the track, erecting a grand stand, putting up bleachers, and in fact doing all the work needed to construct a speedway that will compare favorably with anything in the country, has been set at approximately $500,000, a sum that the promoters claim will be forthcoming as soon as the project is understood and the situation thoroughly realized by the leading commercial interests of the Bay Cities.

"We have all the more reason to feel that the building of a speedway here will be a big success in every way," stated Gates, "when we see how the old fashioned dirt track is losing prestige with all the big drivers of the country. The dirt track in competition with a high-grade, fast, plank covered concrete base racing course, stands no show whatever, and if San Francisco had an up-to-date plank concrete speedway, this city would be able to bid for and secure many of the big motor car races that now go to cities that have been far sighted enough to provide themselves with these facilities."

A First-Class Garage

There are many garages in town, and the motorist is often in a quandary as to where to go, especially for permanent service. There are very few who give you the QUALITY of service of Dow & Green, in Taylor street, between O'Farrell and Geary. Here your car will receive something more than the "once over," and the prices are moderate.

The Background of the War Zone

While Canadian liberals are charging the government with outrageous waste in awarding contracts for shells, the imperial munitions committee continues to send large orders to Canada. Two weeks ago the imperial government gave Canada orders amounting to $20,000,000; a week ago orders of $7,000,000 more were received. As to the matter of reckless expenditure for munitions, the British government has not escaped similar criticism at home.

After many weeks, the battle of Verdun is still by no means over, and it is too soon to say that the Germans may not yet succeed in squeezing the French out of the exposed salient which has been held tenaciously since the beginning of the war. To some extent they are bound to keep up an undertaking the relinquishment of which would bring a certain loss of prestige, and plainly enormous preparations have been made. Ground is gained but slowly and by terrific hammering, but the offensive still continues, and a rather moderate further gain would endanger Verdun. But whether the attack will be kept up till a decision is reached must depend on several things, including the strength which the Russians are able to show in the east and the readiness of the British for counter-offensive in the north. That the sharp attack on the German positions near St. Eloi, penetrating the first and second lines, marks the beginning of such a British movement does not yet appear, but it is the greatest activity shown by the British in seven months, and a forerunner of what promises to be a strenuous spring campaign.

The British government has introduced a novelty into the contraband list by its seizures of American bonds from Dutch steamships on the ground that they had been shipped by Germans to the United States to strengthen German credit. If the American corporations should cancel the bonds seized by the British and issue new ones in place of them, the idea of making such securities contraband would receive a still further development not so pleasing to the newly-made theory of the British lawyers. Bonds merely are a paper evidence of wealth, or a certificate of indebtedness. They are not gold; they are not wealth itself. The British contraband list is becoming a wonderful creation.

The shortage of the supply of potash and other chemical elements largely imported from Germany has had the useful result of forcing attention to neglected sources of fertilizer materials at home. Specialists of the department of agriculture call attention to the fact that garbage is one of the richest of these sources. Yet only six cities in the United States operate their own reduction plants. The experts figure that if all of the 199 cities having a population of 30,000 should properly make use of their neglected treasure the yield would be worth annually from $4,780,000 to $7,000,000. We know little comparatively in this country of the possibilities of intensive agriculture.

In the informal reply of Lord Robert Cecil to the German memorandum on sea warfare and international law there is one definite statement which should be picked up and if possible answered from the German side. Calling attention to the German claim that the submarine campaign was a reprisal for British mine laying in the North Sea, he adds: "They appear to forget that they themselves early in the war were guilty of the indiscriminate strewing of mines on the high seas in defiance of all international law, a proceeding which the British government never followed." This is a point over which German apologists have always passed lightly, but it is a point of prime importance if this question of reprisals is to be traced back to the fountainhead. The United States government, while early using its good offices to check the abuse of mine laying, wisely refrained from any effort to fix responsibility. The thing is done by stealth, and to establish guilt would be of extreme difficulty even if there were an international court for that purpose. But Lord Robert Cecil makes a challenge which should not pass unanswered.

It is easily possible for any critic to shoot to pieces the army bill that this Congress will enact. No army organization bill enacted by any Congress will ever be ideal, while America remains what it is. American traditions are the reverse of militaristic, because America is an isolated, far flung federation of self-governing democratic States, and American Democracy never yet has demanded a high grade of efficiency. An ideal army in this country would have to be reared on the bones of a democracy dead and gone in order that the efficiency experts might play the war game according to Moltke, Hindenburg and Falkenhayn.

FASHION'S FADS AND FRILLS

Dyed Batiste Flouncing and Taffeta

Perhaps the most fascinating thing about the fashions this spring is their seeming simplicity. Although a trifle more frilly and fussy than for a season or two back, this dainty little lingerie frock from Jenny, and that summer afternoon dress of striped chiffon and taffeta, from the Maison Agnes, look, as the dainty mannequins bow and spread out the voluminous skirts before you, as if it would be the easiest thing in the world to turn them out at home. Why, the skirt is merely a double flounce of embroidered batiste on a taffeta foundation, and the sleeveless taffeta bodice is, well, just a little taffeta bodice which could be made from that strip of blue, pink or changeable taffeta left from the frock of other days. The full, straight skirt on another frock is made from three straight lengths gathered at the top, the fulness evenly distributed, and finished at the bottom with a quilling of the same silk. The puff sleeves are quaint and pretty, very dainty and youthful.

Serge, Taffeta and Faille.

These three materials are the leaders again this spring, with here and there a quaint revival; for instance, at a recent fashion show, there appeared a most attractive costume, a three piece suit of Drecoll's, reviving etamine. Whether this is to be taken as an indication that etamine will again be modish this season, or not, is a question. It is rumored that materials are so scarce on the other side of the ocean this year that many an old fabric is being brought out from its almost forgotten resting place and fashioned into a spring or summer costume. Etamine was a particularly satisfactory summer fabric, cool, durable and soft. It would not come at all amiss were it to be revived this year.

Serge is as popular as ever, although it is said that we may have our troubles in dyeing it later on. Attractive combinations of taffeta and serge, and faille and serge are seen in many of the new suits for Easter. An effective suit of Cheruit's is fashioned of mixed dark blue covert. At a distance it cannot be told from serge; and of course, for the sport suit, tweed is very popular. A particularly smart suit, made by Lanvin, is a light gray tweed trimmed with French blue broadcloth. There is very little of the leather, introduced earlier in the season, to be seen about the late coats and suits, whether for sport purposes or the regulation tailored use. Beer clings to the notion in a novel cape coat suit. The coat is fashioned of a new waxed silk, which greatly resembles leather, especially at a distance; it is dark blue and is combined with a skirt of dark blue gabardine.

Paquin shows a coat of covert for afternoon wear, trimmed with dark blue patent leather, but, except for motoring and such use, leather is not to be reckoned with to any extent. Now and then an odd leather motif is applied to a hand bag, or trims a sport hat effectively, but for most other purposes, satin has superseded it.

Taffeta and Wash Fabrics.

A pretty notion in new summer frocks is the touch of taffeta or other silk on the dress of batiste, voile, crepe or organdy. The colored batiste flouncings, organdies and silk embroidered crepes and voiles, not intended for tubbing, are often made over foundation slips of taffeta, and have taffeta bodices, collars, cuffs and girdles. Bias bands of taffeta or satin trim the skirts, and black velvet ribbons lend a touch of "old timeness" to the dainty sheer cottons modish this season.

The taffeta bodices, such as illustrated here, may be worn with any lingerie dress, if made detachable; they add a finish, particularly pleasing, making the simple dress appropriate for any occasion.

The Slip-On Blouse.

The new "long-line" blouses some of them are called; Cheruit sends us an especially pretty one fashioned of handkerchief linen, made to slip on over the head, with a draw belt to gather it in loosely about the waist. Many of these slip-on waists are made on kimono lines, low in the neck and wonderfully easy and graceful in every line. Taffeta, satin, crepe,orgette, chiffon and the Chinese and Japanese silks, are being used for these models, as well as the novelty cottons and sheer linens. The summer girl will appreciate their charm and comfort. These, too, are so simple that they might be fashioned at home with no misgivings at all—and what possibilities for becoming effects and color combinations they do afford!

At the annual meeting of the West Coast-San Francisco Life, Friday, April 7th, C. O. G. Miller was elected president, following the resignation of Thomas L. Miller. Francis V. Keesling was unanimously elected vice-president and general counsel and Gordon Thompson secretary and actuary. T. G. Tognazani, vice-president of the Anglo-California Bank, was made a member of the executive and finance committees. The newly-elected president is a strong man both financially and in an executive way. He is one of the original incorporators of the West Coast Life, and at the time of his election was vice-president. He is thoroughly acquainted with the company's affairs, and will take an active interest in the company, devoting a portion of his time each day to that purpose. George H. Beaudry, who has been actuary of the West Coast-San Francisco, was dropped from that position upon the election of Mr. Thompson as secretary and actuary. Beaudry is an able actuary, and will experience no difficulty in again making connection. The new president is director of the Savings Union Bank & Trust Co., and president of the Los Angeles Light & Power Company. The retiring president, Thomas L. Miller, some time ago voluntarily notified the board of directors of his desire to relinquish that position. He will continue on the board of directors and act in a general advisory capacity, giving most of his time to winding up the affairs of the Pacific Coast Casualty Company, of which he is president, and to his extensive private interests. He left April 12 for New York, to be present at a meeting of the board of directors of the Casualty Company of America, called for the 15th inst.

Shipping men have been informed that war insurance risks on vessels bound from ports of the United States to the United Kingdom or to the Straits Settlements have been reduced from one-quarter to one-eighth of one per cent. This announcement, following so closely upon the announcement of the German government that its policy of submarine warfare would be continued, has caused no little surprise. An advance had been looked for in many quarters, instead of a reduction.

—Man who sued for $50,000 for alienation of his wife's affections has compromised for a smaller sum. Must sort of annoy the wife to find that she didn't have the market price that was originally put on her.

—The high cost of materials is restricting the supply of Bibles. It is an odd thing that the ungodly are willing to pay for their pleasures, while the good shrink at anything that adds to the expense of getting to Heaven.

—Lawyer commits suicide because he loses case for client by overlooking a point in law, his first error of the kind in forty years' practice. The puzzle is that a man with so tender a conscience could be a lawyer at all.

—Animal lovers have been holding anti-vivisection meetings here. Lovers of children, who want to see their suffering diminished, cannot find it in their hearts to get up any sympathy with the anti-vivisectionists or their pets.

—The Supervisors are considering an ordinance that will put the seers and clairvoyants out of business. That will do no good. What is needed is an ordinance that will prevent idiots squandering their money with any swindler that tells them a plausible story.

—Noted Russian economist is in this country with the idea of studying laws that will promote better governmental conditions in Russia. It would be a good plan for him to hurry, for soon there will be more strings on liberty in this country than in the Czar's domain.

—Motorcyclist at Lodi tested the speed of his machine against a train by trying to beat the latter to a crossing. The locomotive hit the rear wheel of his motorcycle, and now he's too dead to mourn over the fact that it wasn't as speedy a vehicle as he fondly imagined.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

VILLA'S EXIT MAKES THE SITUATION CLEARER.

If the report from Mexico be true that Villa is dead, another thorn will have been removed from Carranza's path in settling the political disturbances in Mexico. Unfortunately for him, however, there are the same old forces abroad, in this country and in Mexico, political, business and religious, that are determined through agents to create trouble till they get something in the nature of what they deem their share of the spoils. Since the retirement of Diaz this struggle of the several parties for power and holdings have been incessant. Carranza and his advisers are acquainted with these respective hornets, and are striving their hardest to circumvent them.

The Administration at Washington is following out its policy inaugurated when General Carranza was recognized as the provisional de facto head of the Mexican government. Since then he has been liberally supplied by this government with arms and munitions to suppress the guerilla and bandit warfare that has devastated that prostrated country. The promising progress already made in suppressing anarchy has already reflected a much higher level in the price of Mexican securities; these will continue to advance, and will develop and extend business in that country if Carranza proves himself able to cope with the divers interests that are determined to profit out of the country's prostration. It would seem that Mexico must be completely exhausted by internecine warfare. While war prevails in Europe, the chances are that Mexico will continue to be a field for those parties persistently bent on exploiting her. But when the sword is sheathed in Europe, and the era of recovery from the ravages of war begins, Mexico will naturally slip into that movement and have a better opportunity to get on her feet again.

With the passing of Villa, if the report of the death be true, passes the last of the guerilla chiefs of consequence. There are others on the map, Obregon, nephew Diaz and a string of third-raters, fellows of wind and swagger, who have already capably demonstrated that they are of little account as insurrectos, pygmies of their kind that Carranza's troops can wipe out with ease, providing they can locate the pests, for Mexico is a wide domain in which to locate scurrying bandits, as has been illustrated in the chase of Villa by the thorough-going and dependable United States cavalymen.

The Republican idea of intervention in Mexico is to place that country in the same general relation as Cuba is to the United States; that is, to make it a dependency under a treaty granting this country a permanent right to intervene, a method which was attempted under the Buchanan administration. His attempt in that direction was regarded as the most drastic

T. R.—"I ain't mad atcha any more!"

—Hanny in the St. Joseph News-Press.

Mexican policy adopted. In short, such policy bears the earmarks of a protectorate, and very likely Roosevelt, Root and Lodge would frankly admit as much. These same leaders conceived and developed the present protectorate over Hayti and Nicaragua. In all three cases the action was taken to meet an unusual emergency. The Wilson administration, however, recognizes that Mexico, through its unusually large stretch of territory and its prominent position on the continent, which places it firmly under the Monroe doctrine, is in an altogether different class than Cuba, Hayti and Nicaragua, and accordingly should be placed in the same class as the Latin-American republics that are seeking republican forms of government. These are some of the vital questions which may be solved if the Villas are wiped off the map and Carranza and his party are equal to meeting the hopes of the administration at Washington.

WAR PESTS AND THEIR PRODUCTS.

The Rooseveltians, Lodges and others of their belligerent kidney, who are bedeviling the administration at Washington to pull the nose of the German Emperor and start a ruction just to prove that "we are right" in the submarine and other differences, probably do not care to explain some of the grave and crushing questions in which this country would quickly flounder should their bellowing demands be allowed to prevail. Once dragged into this chaos of warphobia, this government would of course be compelled to remain on the firing line till peace was declared. In which case it would not be long before the major part of the financial burden of conducting the war would be shifted from the three big circling powers to the shoulders of Uncle Sam, who is just now supplying the world with commodities and piling up the greatest financial surplus in history.

Taxes in this country would at once leap upward at a much greater rate than they are now doing in Europe, on account of the notoriously extravagant system of Uncle Sam in providing and assembling the necessary troops and commissariat in a foreign war. The cost alone of the transportation of the munitions, troops, etc., across the Atlantic would be staggering, as was developed in the Boer war. The present huge foreign trade of this country would melt away with the days, as Uncle Sam would require all the munitions manufactured in this country for his own use, as well as all the war materials and food-stuffs. Americans who may have noticed what hyphenated foreigners have plotted and perpetrated in this country against their nation's enemies, may form some conception of what these same hyphenated foreigners would attempt in the big cities here should this country declare war on the central powers. Their secret organizations would immediately attempt to spread a reign of terror throughout the country by riots, incendiarism and other methods, an attempt to surpass what the copperheads did during the early period of the war of the Rebellion. Of course, these insurrections and acts of violence would be suppressed in course of time, and Americanism would eventually prevail, as democracy has always on these continents. The antidote to these Rooseveltian warphobiasts is a man like President Wilson, who so far has weathered the ship of state through the greatest cataclysmic storm in history that has enveloped the nations of the world. In this crisis, let well enough alone.

HORSESENSE SUGGESTION ON ENGINEERS' STRIKE.

Various suggestions regarding a just end equitable solution of the proposed strike of the locomotive engineers in this country and Canada, in which they demand an increase of $20,000,000 per annum in wages, are now trickling into the leading publications of this country. So far, the most striking and reasonable one comes from a practical man, an expert in that line, Dr. Chas. R. Van Hise. Mr. Van Hise is president of the University of Wisconsin, and was chairman of the board of arbitration which decided the issue between the locomotive engineers and the management of the Eastern railways in 1912. As a student of frequent contests between capital and labor throughout the world, he noted the unsatisfactory "compromises" between the contesting bodies, methods which led to no advance in curing the evil, and in his majority report he took occasion to draw conclusions regarding the public necessity of making such strikes impossible. He advanced the idea of the need of government regulation of wages, which are held by railroad officials to be applicable in settling the controversy over the demands of the organized train employees, now under consideration. He summarized his conclusions along this basis as follows:

"The balance of power in the control of wages, which was first with the railroads, has now passed to organized railway labor. The railroad operators, under the control of national and State commissions, and under the control of public opinion, are weaker than strongly organized unions. The latter, without any control through commissions, are, of course, affected by public opinion, but not so directly.

From the viewpoint of the public, it is an intolerable situation when any group of men, whether employees, or employers, whether large or small, have the power to decide that the whole country shall undergo great loss of life, unspeakable suffering, and the loss of property beyond the power of description, through the stoppage of a necessary public service.

For the public utilities, however, there are not only two parties to the controversy—the railroads and the employees—but a third, the public. As already mentioned, the railroads, one of the parties to the controversy, are subject to national and State commissions, which commissions are entrusted with the special duty of protecting the public interests. Advance in rates cannot be made without the consent of the proper commissions. The railroads are not only subject to the commissions in rates, but are subject to them in regard to maintaining adequate service. The employees of the railroads are not subject to control through commissions, although in common with all organizations they are influenced by public opinion.

The disparity of status suggests the creation of national and State wage commissions or labor commissions, which should exercise functions regarding labor engaged at work in public utilities analogous to those now exercised with regard to capital by the public service commissions already in existence.

The problem for which the above plan is a suggested solution is a complex and difficult one. The suggestion, however, grows out of a profound conviction that the food and clothing of our people, the industries and the general welfare of the nation, cannot be permitted to depend upon the policies and dictates of any particular group of men, whether employers or employees, nor upon the determination of a group of employers and employees combined. The public utilities of the nation are of such fundamental importance to the whole people that their operation must not be interrupted, and the means must be worked out which will guarantee this result.

GIVE US THE PROPOSED TARIFF COMMISSION.

The Democratic party has a golden opportunity to make a striking record for itself in political history if it presses through Congress the bill recently introduced by Representative Henry C. Rainey of the Ways and Means Committee for the creation of a non-partisan tariff commission. As President Wilson has indicated that he wishes the session of the present Congress to close before the day of opening of the St. Louis Democratic convention in June, the progress of the measure must be pressed steadfastly. Already there seems to be some doubt about the best way to reach the desired end, because of the large congestion of bills. Suggestions have been made that its passage will be most readily expedited by tacking it to the omnibus appropriation bill. There are a number of unusually important bills already engaged in battle to get through the session before adjournment, among them being "preparedness," revenue bill, rural credits, ship purchase bill, Philippine bill, Mississippi relief measure, and some half dozen others. The pressure of important measures has been so extraordinary this session that so far the provision has not yet been passed to remove the tariff on sugar.

It is imperative that the Democratic party shall hack a hole through the present legislation in order to force the passage for the creation of a tariff commission. A record of that character will raise a new flag of distinguished honor and appeal over the convention camp at St. Louis, and fortify the party more solidly in its present position at Washington. The tariff commission measure has the solid and enthusiastic backing of the chambers of commerce of the United States and of the business men throughout the country. It will remove forever the quadrennial "tariff tinkering" of incompetent legislators, who know nothing whatever of the fundamentals of tariffs, and will transfer to a commission of six experts, three Republicans and three Democrats, the power to investigate the tariff relations between the United States and other countries, commercial treaties, preferential provisions and all such kindred matters and influences that bear on the making of our tariff system. It is the logical and practical plan of providing the best tariff measure for this country, and will shelve forever the "hard times" and maledictions that have always prevailed in presidential years. No excuse for missing this extraordinary opportunity can be given the Democratic party.

PERSONAL EXPERIENCE IN STAGELAND THIS WEEK

The Drama Begins Its Spring Drive

The Ex-Leading Lady Exposes Some Tricks of the Trade

By HENRY McDONALD SPENCER

Arrayed in a gorgeous new Easter bonnet—three days ahead of time—the ex-Leading Lady appeared particularly well pleased with herself as I adjusted her footstool and the waiter drew the shade to her liking. Naturally, I complimented her on her appearance and particularly on her headgear, to which she replied:

"No, I don't pretend to be religious, but I believe in showing respect to religion."

"Then you mean to imply," I said, "that the new bonnet is a religious ceremony, and not an aesthetic achievement, nor a mere gratification of quite pardonable vanity." That got her hanging on the ropes for a minute, but as the waiter came along opportunely, she stalled while the formalities were being observed, and, when the bearer of joy by the glassful was well under way she turned to me wrathfully:

"You poor fish! All that Vichy and milk must muddle your brains." I may remark parenthetically that while "dearie" does not mean endearment, "you poor fish" is not an expression of contempt, but puts one in the inner circle of the lady's friends—a sort of knighthood or other minor title, as it were.

"You poor fish, when you wrote last week about the audience applauding Pietro, the poor accordion player, don't you know that these hams plant the house?"

"No," I said, a little impatiently, "I don't." Trying hard to assert my independence.

"Well, dearie, don't get mad, but they all do. That is, they pay about ten dollars on the opening nights for a bunch of bell-hops to go into the gallery and start things for them."

"A claque, then?"

"Yes; don't you notice that kind of performer gets all his applause from the gallery? I know, for I used to do it myself."

And just then a great white light dawned on me. Can it be possible that all the time I have been condemning acts like those of Ed. Morton and Pietro, and have been obliged to admit sorrowfully that the circuit managers know more than I, that the applause was factitious, and that, after all, if left to themselves, the majority would be with me? Perish the thought. I have lost all my conceit, for hitherto I have had only one sure test of infallibility—that every one disagreed with me.

"The Making Over of"—the Columbia

The Allied Arts of the Stage—speaking, acting, literature and plastic posing of the human form—invaded the well-fortified town of San Francisco last week, and occupied the trenches at the Columbia Theatre, capturing on Monday night an audience of some fifteen hundred persons, by means of the presentation of May Robson's latest vehicle, "The Making Over of Mrs. Matt," by James Forbes. By an essential, if fortuitous, propriety the revival of the drama—I refuse to refer to it as the spoken drama. What is drama?—comes in a period that covers the tercentenary of Shakespeare, as the date was decided on by our worthy municipal committee. Surely there could be no more fitting celebration of the day of the most articulate master of our tongue, the greatest lord of all language, when you consider that for a fortnight past our local theatres have been devoted to portraying on a screen the epileptic antics of Charlie Chaplin and the immature inanities of Mary Pickford.

And in May Robson there is no unworthy representative of Shakespeare's drama, for I am sure that if the Bard were alive and in America to-day he would write a play for this delightful comedienne. I say "comedienne," advisedly, for there is no one on our stage who has the vis comica to a greater degree than Miss Robson. The proof: What actress have we that could so switch from pathos before it became bathos, and land a laugh without jarring your sense of fitness? Example: May Robson, as Emily Lamson, the wife of an elderly financier who has come from the West to capture New York, speaks: "I have been a good wife to you, Matt for over twenty-five years. When you married me you needed me badly, and—(with a sob in the voice) you need me now." (Suddenly biffing him on the bean) "You know you do—you old stiff." That reads crude—but hear May Robson say it, and then you will know part of what I mean.

In the first paragraph I used the word "vehicle" for play, and with all due respect to the author, I cannot imagine any one but May Robson in the eponymous role—and getting away with it. While there are many bright lines, the plot is rather thin, although Miss Robson told me on Monday night that Forbes regarded this play as his greatest achievement; and writing it with a view to Miss Robson, he has done his work well. There are many such scenes of calculated anti-climax as that described above, and in this kind of acting she excels.

The plot runs thusly: Matt Lamson (Smith Davies), a newly rich Western financier, comes to New York, and, reversing the usual procedure, wants to dominate socially as well as financially, while his wife—May Robson—prefers the homely joys of kitchen and fireside. The son, Junior Lamson (Jack Storey), after experiencing an escapade in the white light district, falls in love with his father's pretty (very pretty) stenographer, Mary Lawrence (Elizabeth Warren), much to the old man's chagrin, as the capitalist wants his son to marry a "society girl"—also pretty—Charlotte Avery (Ridler Davies). After some amusing complications the young man, backed by his mother of course, wins.

As for Miss Robson, I need only add to what I have said that in the years to come—a long way off, I hope, for all our sakes, especially those who may have the delight of witnessing the charming lady's performances—she will be a principal topic of the "Do You Remember When Club." I dislike honey-pot dribbling, but I am constrained to say that the play was exceptionally well cast. Cy Weaver as Budthorpe Barrett, a young curate fresh from college, and while mounting the altar steps, as it were—by the way, do altars have steps?—casts a somewhat wistful glance backwards at his undergraduate days and ways, is a type more found in England than in this country, but should justify a play written around the character. On the other hand, the lean, chin-whiskered, nasal-voiced village constable of the "Way Down East" drama does not exist any more; indeed, he would be more likely to be dressed in a khaki suit, and nowadays is a fat man with a short-cropped moustache who speaks in rather low tones agreeably to the traditions of the local constabulary, i. e., you must not humiliate people when you serve papers on them. If this (being served with papers) has ever occurred to you, you will recognize my man. Edith Conrad as Holt, the maid, had the tall, square shouldered, expensively corseted figure and detached manner that expresses the perfect English maid of New York. As I have already said that Miss Warren is very pretty, my mystic criticism of her would be biased. Mary Pavey as Florence, the gum-chewing waitress at the Greta Green Inn, recalls old days of travel: "Roastbeef-roastlamb-roastpork-baked heart—no-I-don't-go-out-with-no-gentlemen."

Like a thirsty traveler I may be a little enthusiastic about the merits of this oasis in the desert of our theatrical barrenness—but after all, are these enthusiasms not the true reactions to the phenomena of life and—art?

The Playhouses of Pan

It may be of interest to our local theatregoers to know that Mr. Pantages is the largest individual theatre owner in the world. While there are larger circuits, these are owned by several persons or a company. Pantages, or "Pan"—as he is familiarly called—has just acquired a site in Minneapolis, which Robert G. Drady, his efficient local manager, assures me is in the heart of the best retail district there, corresponding to Kearny and Market streets here. Furthermore, he has this week completed arrangements to add four towns in Montana—Butte, Helena, Anaconda and Great Falls—to his string. He acquires new theatres the way Jim Flood does automobiles, and as freely as I buy razors.

The Minneapolis house will make sixteen theatres in all personally owned by the vaudeville czar, besides affiliated houses, and believe me there is some work connected with it. Mr. Pantages, although he has many able assistants—Drady knows of one—attends to the details of his vast organization himself, and in spite of his mail coming by the sackful, he insists on going over each letter personally, and frequently works until two or three in the morning. Therefore, the popular conception of a theatrical manager as a stout man lolling back in a stuffed armchair, wearing a heavy black moustache and diamond shirt studs, smoking dollar cigars, and having nothing to do but turn down aspiring actors and actresses, is as wrong as most popular conceptions generally are; for instance: Ninety-nine per cent of the public believes that bock beer has something to do with a goat.

If you want to go to sleep in the afternoon or the early part of the evening, don't go to Pantages this week, as the bill is full of life as a Hearst editorial is of platitudes, and does not contain a dull number. The "Dream of the Orient" is one of the most elaborately staged acts which has been seen here for some time past, and contains, besides an operatic coloratura singer, Madame Makarenko, a number of husky and extremely goodlooking young women who sing and dance and pose—in the last scene in bathing suits. Frankly, I must confess to a preference to this type myself as compared, for instance, to the anaemic and tubercular looking young flapper which appears to be the present fashion both on the stage and in life. My choice? Next to the end, stage right. The "Dream of the Orient" is the visualization—screen fashion, although not a picture—of a gentlemanly young hophead's dream, and no wonder hitting the pipe is popular if it brings such visions.

A lively farce, based on the familiar idea of mixing up rooms in an hotel corridor, is presented by Edward Farrell & Co., and is reminiscent of some of Hoyt's plays. The Dancing La Vars is another "whirlwind" act, while the Australian Creightons, acrobatic jugglers, are as conscientious and work as hard as do all European and Colonial performers. Faber and Waters, in nonsense stuff, and De Michelle Brothers, harp and violin, with the usual pictures conclude a bill that you may take my word for it is worth seeing, and I am tres difficile.

Orpheum

Why do authors, and especially authoresses, insist on appearing in their own sketches, for otherwise they, the sketches, might have a better chance to get by? In the playlet, "Saints and Sinners," written by a woman, directed by a woman, and acted, with the exception of one minor character, entirely by women, Miss Ethel Clifton, the authoress takes the part of the fascinating homebreaker. Personally, I do not regard her as convincing in this role, and if I were the husband, I would be much more likely to succumb to the charms of Brenda Fowler, who plays the part of the deceived and selfish wife. The act itself is not without merit, and for that reason the authoress should confine herself to the writing end of the game.

As a rule, the lightning change artist is a bore, but Henri De Vries is somewhat different, and in the role of a number of persons interrogated by a juge d'instruction, has a logical opportunity of presenting several characters without the banality of announcing his characterizations. The ordered procedure of the witnesses in and out of the judge's office is quite in keeping with the supposed action of the play, and gives an opening for this class of work without stretching the imagination of the audience too far.

The "Two Tomboys," who modestly conceal their names, present for the first time an act which involves women in slapstick farce, and its name, "A Bumsti-Bumsti" act tells the story. You may not like to see a woman step on another woman's face, but then, everyone does not like olives, which, after all, is nothing against olives.

Fanny Brice, as a headliner, is a typical New York showgirl, or rather star, of a New York roof-garden show, and does not disappoint you in her quick, slangy entertaining. Andy Rice, however, gets most of the applause, and, it is needless to say, I do not fall for Andy.

Gertrude Vanderbilt and George Moore are very acceptable.

and Vinie Daly sings quite as well as did the fair Dorothy Jardon, who was here a couple of weeks ago, but she doesn't look as well, and therefore failed to get the applause that her really well trained and agreeable voice entitled her to receive. The rest of the bill was quite up to the average.

People's Philharmonic to Present Popular Priced Music at Pavilion Rink.—A strong program has been prepared for the second popular symphony concert to be given by the People's Philharmonic Orchestra at Pavilion Rink, Sutter and Pierce streets, next Thursday evening at 8:15. The already excellent organization of sixty-five musicians will be augmented for the occasion, the total being nearly eighty, and conductor Nikolai Sokoloff promises one of the most enjoyable musical evenings ever offered in San Francisco at popular prices. The opening number will be Beethoven's Fifth Symphony in C Minor, and Sokoloff's interpretation of the four movements comprising this wonderful composition will be listened to with great interest. Then will follow Saint-Saens' Concerto in A Minor for Violon-cello, Miss May Mukle, the noted English 'cellist, being the soloist. This artist studied at the Royal Academy of Music, London, and has toured the length and breadth of the British Isles, South Africa, Australia, Europe and throughout America four times. Miss Mukle plays a Montagnana 'cello, dated 1730, and famous for its perfect quality of tone. The rest of the program will be devoted to Wagner, the numbers being the Prelude to Lohengrin, the Good Friday Spell from Parsifal and the Prelude to the Meistersinger. As the price of reserved seats for this very attractive concert is but fifty cents, with general admission twenty-five cents, the commodious Pavilion Rink, where the acoustics leave nothing to be desired, should be crowded to the doors. Reserved seats will be on sale at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s and Kohler & Chase's, on and after Monday morning.

Columbia Theatre—May Robson in her triumphant comedy, "The Making Over of Mrs. Matt," will remain the attraction at the Columbia Theatre for a second and last week commencing with Sunday night, April 23d.

It is a long time since theatregoers here have had the opportunity to enjoy so clever a comedy as this new work from the pen of the man who wrote "The Chorus Lady." He has fitted May Robson with a role which gives her talents a wide scope and picturesqueness; feeling and charm are her chief virtues in its rendition. The play fairly scintillates with brilliant witticism, and there are laughs galore during the action of the piece which must be accounted the best in which the popular star has yet appeared, not excepting her famous hit, "The Rejuvenation of Aunt Mary." Matinees are given on Wednesday and Saturday. The final performance of the Robson engagement is announced for Sunday night, April 30th.

Commencing with Monday night, May 1st, Otis Skinner will be at the Columbia. Skinner has given the American stage some of its most delightful character studies. There, for instance, was his Hadji the Beggar in "Kismet," and there was his Col. Phillippe Bridau in "The Honor of the Family"—only to mention a couple of the best known. And this season Mr. Skinner has added another to the list—that of Tony Bellchamber, the flamboyant but lovable actor of the "old school," in "Cock o' the Walk," the comedy by Henry Arthur Jones, in which the popular actor will be seen at the Columbia Theatre. The advance sale of seats for the Skinner engagement will begin next Thursday.

Orpheum—Ruth St. Denis, the world famous danseuse, will make her first vaudeville appearance in this city at the Orpheum next Sunday matinee. She will be assisted by Ted Shawn and a company of terpsichoreans trained by him. The following will be the program: "The Spirit of the Sea," Ruth St. Denis; "Danse Javanese," Ada Forman; "The Peacock," a legend of India (inspired by the poems of Lawrence Hope), Ruth St. Denis, Mr. Shawn, Misses Loomis, Andrews, Forman, Horst and Hindoo assistants; "Lady Picking Mulberries," Margaret Loomis; "Ancient Egypt," a ballet of the Tamboura, Miss St. Denis, Mr. Shawn and Company. Madame Chilson-Orhman, a gifted young American prima donna soprano, who has toured with the New York Symphony Orchestra and whose London and Paris operatic engagements have been postponed on account of the European war, will be heard in a delightful program of song which will include the aria from "Il Puritani," "At Dawning," by Cadman, Polonaise from "Mignon," and "The Last Rose of Summer." Percy Bronson and Winnie Baldwin who, like good wine, need no bush, will present what they term "A 1916 Songology," which is said to be a splendid vehicle for the exhibition of their ability as singers, dancers and comedians. Harriet Marlotte and company will appear in an exceptionally funny sketch by Edgar Allen Woolf entitled "The Lollard." Miss Don Fung Gue and Mr. Harry Haw will present a Chinese conception of American songs and dances. A spectacular singing novelty entitled "The Girl in the Moon," will be a pleasant feature of the new bill. A pretty maiden clad in dainty pajamas sitting in a new moon, sails out over the audience, dropping now and then amongst the audience and pinning carnations in the button holes of some of the gentlemen, singing to them all the while. Andy Rice, in his witty monologue, "My First Anniversary," and Fannie Brice in her diverting songs and creations, will close their engagements with this bill.

Big Show at Pantages.—Little Lord Roberts, the tiniest comedian in the world, will top the new Easter week show at the Pantages on Sunday. The diminutive funster weighs fifteen

The little chap is possessed of a rare sense of humor, and in his act gives character studies of stage luminaries ranging from Eddie Foy to Sousa leading his band. "The Violet Widow" is a brand new musical "tab" offered for the first time by Bothwell Browne, the delineator of feminine types, and a company of fourteen. Volant and his "Flying Piano," a mysterious novelty defying the laws of gravitation; Byal and Early, with their funny hats; the Henderson Four, a quartette of black faced harmony singers; Nan Grey, a lass who warbles ballads of bonny Scotland; the Rials, acrobatic aerialists, and a bucolic playlet, "At the Half Way House," are other splendid features. The sixth episode of "The Iron Claw" will also continue evolving the baffling mystery of the man in the laughing mask.

People's Orchestra at Civic Auditorium.—Easter afternoon at three, the first of the series of popular symphonies to be given by the People's Orchestra with Giulio Minetti as conductor, will be held in the Exposition Auditorium of the Civic Center. The occasion will combine the celebration of Easter and the Shakespeare Memorial with a Festival of Music. Sixty members of the last season's symphony orchestra have been retained for the summer months, and on Sunday will be augmented with six additional players and Mme. Clementina Marcelli as soloist. One feature of the series which has gained for the People's Orchestra both popular endorsement and financial support is the Saturday morning free symphony for children.

Giulio Minetti came to San Francisco with an established reputation as a leader of great orchestras. He is a former associate of Toscanini, Bazzini and Bolzoni, and has led both orchestral organizations and grand opera in London, Vienna, Paris, Turin and Milan. Mme. Clementina Marcelli comes to this city from Milan, where as the daughter of a famous director of grand opera, she had every opportunity for study. She has a powerful dramatic soprano voice, and has been heard here in concert at a leading theatre, and with Clarence Eddy, the organist.

Programme—Tragic Overture, Bazzini. Les Vendredis, Glazou now. Minuet, Bolzoni. Hosanna, Granier, Mme. Clementina Marcelli. Symphony in E Flat, Mozart. Carmen Suite, Bizet. Aria from Madame Butterfly, Puccini, Mme. Marcelli. Merry Wives of Windsor, Niccola. Midsummer Night's Dream, Mendelssohn. Tickets are on sale for individual concerts or the whole series at the leading music stores.

Events in the Paul Elder Gallery.—Dhan Gopal Mukerji will deliver a lecture on "The World-Vision of Modern Poetry," in the Paul Elder Gallery, 239 Grant avenue, San Francisco, on Friday afternoon, April 28th, at 3 o'clock. He will speak on Whitman, Maeterlinck and Tagore. The Children's Amusement and Story Club will meet in the Paul Elder Gallery Saturday forenoon, April 29th, at 10:30 o'clock. Mrs. Ruth Fuller Field will entertain the children with magic tricks and stories.

OPENING OF ICE PAVILION WILL BE GALA EVENT.

San Francisco soon will have a new sport when the Techau Tavern Ice Palace at the corner of Eddy and Jones, opens its doors on Monday night, the first of May. The Palais du Glace long has been a feature in Parisian life, and recently the ice skating craze has spread to the East, where it threatens to supplant the dancing mania of a year or two ago.

The new pavilion or rink has a skating surface of 115 feet square, and the ice will always be kept in first class condition; already society has shown the utmost interest in the sport, and will be present in full force on the opening night both in the boxes and on the floor.

Professional skaters—The Paulsens, Wilson and Crowell, and the Two Les Nasces—will give exhibitions, after which the ice will be at the disposal of the public.

Devotional Excursions.

The week that has just passed cannot be reduced to a single phrase or an upright adjective embracing a noun. For some it has spelled "Holy Week," and religious devotees have passed the days in prayer and contemplation. One group of society women have "made a retreat," spending the day at one of the convents and refusing to lend a listening ear to all the wooing temptations of the outside world. In this group are Mrs. Walter Dean, Miss Laura McKinstry, and about a dozen other prominent Catholics.

Another coterie, in addition to the usual devotional exactions of the Episcopal Church, is spending the mornings in extra service for the war sufferers of Europe, the particular form of their offering symbolized by the energetic needle. As a consequence, there are all sorts of serviceable garments piling up, to be despatched to those who are in desperate need of them. Mrs. Phillip Van Horne Lansdale and Miss Sallie Maynard are two of the most indefatigable workers in this circle of some twenty or more expert needlewomen.

Mrs. Lansdale, by the way, is one of the wealthy women of San Francisco who has the superlative gift for social service work which would make her conspicuous in that field were she to make it the chief business, as well as the chief pleasure of her life. Her particular achievement just now is a class of boys who would rather go to Sunday School than to a baseball game. Which is a triumph that savors of the miraculous, and could only be accomplished by one who has a glorified understanding of boys, and swings along naturally through the kingdom of boyhood that is closed to all travelers who need guide books and sign posts to point the way.

Athletic Sacrifices.

For some, the week has been hammered into golf sticks which have swung in deadly earnest for the State golf championship for women was the laurel wreath which garlanded the Ingleside course, and brought out most of the scratch players of this neck of the woods, and one or two bidders for laurels from the Southern part of the State.

The Burlingame team sent up a strong contingent captained by Miss Edith Chesebrough, and including Mrs. Gus Taylor, Mrs. Fred McNear, Mrs. Douglas Grant, Mrs. Sam Hopkins, Mrs. Cheever Cowdin, Mrs. A. Watson, Mrs. Lester Herrick and Mrs. Max Rothschild. Mrs. Walter Martin, who usually adds her prowess to the peninsula contingent, is in South America, cruising with the Jacklings, and one or two others were missing.

Mrs. Jackling is one of the few young women in the smart set who has never gone in for golf. But she is a star contributor to good golf stories, having lightly tossed off this epigram one sultry day at the Blingum Country Club, where a number of warm and weary golfers were sipping cool drinks with those who had sought the cool of the deep verandas the whole of that blistering day.

Said someone (perhaps it was little Mrs. Sam Hopkins, who is in the beginner's class)—"I would give my eye teeth to play a ripping game."

Quoth Virginia Joliffe, without asking any one to cross her palm with silver, or to recognize her as the seventh daughter of a seventh daughter, or to treat her with the respect due a prophetess, said she in the full glow of oracular utterance—"It isn't necessary to give up your eye teeth, my dear; it's your complexion that must go up on the altar of golf ambitions. You've got to be willing to give up your skin for it."

Which is literally true, but not the whole truth, as closest scrutiny of golf players will attest—for though they burn and brown, and peel and go through all the weatherbeaten stages, there is always some kind of a cold cream salvation that, cooperating with the winter months, brings back the peach-bloom. Even a casual survey of the women who go in for athletics would prove that pulchritude is not impaired by a reasonable amount of athleticism.

Another Club Venture.

Plans are well under way for the new golf links around Lake Merced. The prime movers in this new club are the golfing members of the Beresford Club, many of the Jewish society folk finding it impossible to get down to Beresford to play as often as they would like to. The club is of course non-sectarian—but the inspiration for its formation comes from the Beresford Country Club members.

During the last two or three years, Jewish society women have gone in for golf much more strenuously than before, and they have developed some very strong golf-players—to be reckoned with in finals. For this tournament at Ingleside this week, Beresford sent up Mesdames Robert Roos, E. H. Weil, Sadie Dernham, L. G. Levey, L. Strassberger, H. L. Mack, A. A. Ehrman, A. Hirschman and the Misses Shainwald and Furman.

Miss Dernham won the recent Sequoyah invitational tournament, and is counted one of the topnotchers. Miss Dernham and Miss Chesebrough drew each other, and made a brilliantly matched team—in fact, it so happened that the gods of chance matched most of the players very interestingly—Mrs. Palmer and Mrs. Roos, Mrs. Gus Taylor and Mrs. Weil, Mrs. Fred McNear and Mrs. Strassberger, Mrs. Scribner and Mrs. L. G. Levy, Mrs. Hubert Law and Mrs. Carpenter, Mrs. Ford and Mrs. Forbes, and all the rest of the forty entrants drawing equally stimulating partners for a foil for skill.

Pacific Union Club Pate.

Here is the latest story that has escaped the swaddling clothes of club secrecy to set the gossips a-grin.

Members of the Pacific Union Club very often have the club chef send some of the club's famous dishes out to the home to grace a dinner party or supper. The Pacific Union salads and pates, and things, have covered up the deficient culinary talent of many a menage, and the club has not a little revenue from this course of catering to the homes of members. There is a famous pate salad in aspic which rears its mysteries for the delighted gaze of the epicures of the club, and which occasionally finds its way to some private dinner table.

There is very little of this particular pate to be had in this country, and when the present supply is exhausted there will be none in the market until Europe is once more at peace. One of the stewards happened to tell a bon vivant of the club that his favorite dish might soon be on the list of things wiped out by war.

The solemn grief of an epicure can be imagined only by a humorist.

After the first shock of this terrible news the epicure pulled himself together and braced himself for a constructive idea.

It came.

It not only came, but it went the rounds, and nothing ought to stop anything so lovely.

The epicure saw a way to save the situation, and in mighty tones he thundered: "The directors ought to put a stop to letting any of this pate get out the club. If they don't want to pass a rule that is too strict, they might fix it so that a man might send some to his own family dinner table, but they certainly should be stopped from sending pate to their lady friends!"

No moralist, this cosmopolitan; no ungenerous fussy budget, this citizen of the world. It was just a cry of anguish wrung by the cruel extremity of the situation. It was a neat idea with simple folding attachments that might, in fact, be applied to many situations. But in spite of the manifest simplicity and sincerity of the idea it is considered a great joke by his clubfellows—and others.

Features of Society Horse Show.

The program for the second annual Society Horse Show for the benefit of the People's Place and the San Francisco Poly-clinic, to be given at the San Francisco Riding School on Seventh avenue, April 27, 28, 29 and on Saturday afternoon, April 29, promises a number of entirely distinctive events which have never appeared on the programmes of former affairs of this sort. Beatrice Michelena, the celebrated moving picture actress, will compete in a number of the events. William S. Tevis, Jr., will be the treader, in an amateur bull-fight. There will be an indoor polo game every evening, four teams competing. San Mateo, San Rafael, the United States Cavalry and the Riding School will each enter a team. There will be drills by the Monday Night Riding Club. The children of society will do a number of interesting things, including high jumping. Some of the little ones who will take part are Misses Josephine Drown, Eleanor Spreckels, Eleanor Fleishhacker, Evelyn Tognazinni, Claudine Spreckels, Katherine Dorn, Marjorie Fleishhacker, Elise Meyer, Edna Taylor, Jean Howard, Susanna Daniels and Eleanor Mergan.

A number of fine horses will be shown by society maids, those who will ride being Misses Jean Wheeler, Gertrude Hopkins, Kate Crocker, Ruth Perkins, Julia Van Fleet, Elva de Pue, Marian Newhall, Kate Brigham. Every evening after the show there will be a supper dance in the loft.

Daniel O. Lively will be the ring-master. The judges will be Majors C. Hilton and H. H. Whitney, Chester J. Murphy of Portland, Judge Bridgeford and Charles Butters.

The Hitchcock Military Academy has issued invitations to its friends to attend the regular annual field day sports, Saturday afternoon, April 29th, at 2 o'clock. An unusually attractive program has been provided for the occasion, and a large attendance is promised.

The patronesses of the Canon Kip Memorial Mission will give a notable dansant in the Colonial and Italian ball rooms of the St. Francis Hotel, Easter Monday, April 24th, from 4:30 to 7:30 p. m. The object is unusually worthy. The activities carried on by the ladies of the Mission embrace boys and girls' clubs, a clothing bureau, dispensary and free clinic, girls' friendly society, young men's club, and the Eliza Garber memorial sewing school. In this last named building a day nursery is maintained by a separate board, and has cared for more than 1,300 children during 1915, with an average daily attendance of forty-three.

Among the patronesses are Mrs. A. S. Baldwin, Mrs. F. H. Beaver, Mrs. William B. Bourn, Mrs. Philip E. Bowles, Miss Emily Carolan, Mrs. Warren D. Clark, Mrs. William H. Crocker, Mrs. Henry J. Crocker, Mrs. Richard D. Girvin, Mrs. George W. Gibbs, Mrs. Joseph D. Grant, Mrs. Lewis P. Hobart, Mrs. William I. Kip, Mrs. J. G. Kittle, Mrs. E. L. Griffith. Tickets may be obtained at Sherman & Clay and the three leading hotels. Table reservations are $5, made through Mrs. Mont-eagle, 2516 Pacific avenue, and at the St. Francis Hotel.

Events at Hotel Oakland.

Mrs. Noylan Fox, Jr., entertained at the Hotel Oakland Tuesday for her bridge club, with a luncheon and bridge. Her guests were Miss Phyllis Lovell, Mrs. Joseph Hunt, Miss Carmen Ghirardelli, Mrs. T. Hogan, Miss Helen Douney, Mrs. Fritz Henshaw, Mrs. Neal Harris, Miss Helen Coogan, Mrs. Robert Sharon, Mrs. Walter Perkins, Mrs. Henry Jackson.

Society of all the bay cities are interested in the charity affair to be given at the Hotel Oakland, Friday evening, May 19th, for the building fund to enlarge the present home of the day nursery at Eighth and Chestnut streets. The affair is to be a grand ball and card tournament, also a program of vocal and instrumental music and several solo character dances. Those taking part in the program are the best known artists of the bay cities. Frank C. Dana will have charge of the ball, assisted by a number of prominent east bay gentlemen. Among the patronesses are Mrs. Oscar Sutro, Mrs. Wickham Havens, Mrs. Remi Chabot, Mrs. Wm. J. Munro, Mrs. T. W. Cushing, Mrs. R. A. Bray, Mrs. Oscar Long, Mrs. Hugh Hegan, Mrs. Charles Foster, Mrs. Jos. Rosborough, Mrs. Jas. Travens, Mrs. Jas. P. Dunn, Mrs. L. G. Henes, Mrs. Wm. E. Sharon, Mrs. Chas. Clark of San Mateo, and Mrs. M. A. Tobin of San Francisco.

The St. Francis is thronged daily with society maids and matrons who are indefatigable in their efforts to promote the success of several coming entertainments. In room 315, the headquarters of the Fine Arts Ball committee, carnival plans and the sale of boxes are proceeding at a rate that ensures the preservation for future generations of the finest features of the Exposition. In room 516, the Horse Show Committee is equally active in arranging for the equine tournament to be held April 27, 28 and 29. For this event, William S. Tevis, Jr., is to put on a "stunt" that promises to be as entertaining as it is unique. He will give a pantomime bullfight. That is to say, he and a bull will stage a bullfight. Tevis is known as an amateur treader, his adventurous proclivities and his Spanish ancestry probably causing him to tend in that direction athletically. Then there are the meetings of the Red Cross conference, which aims to have a Red Cross membership of 25,000 in San Francisco; and of the groups of patronesses who are arranging for the dansant in the Italian room, Easter Monday, for the benefit of Canon Kip Mission, and for the supper dance in the St. Francis, April 25th, to raise a fund for a non-sectarian chapel at Fort Winfield Scott.

A revival of the crinoline gown will be a distinctive feature of the Southern Ball, to be given by the Dixie Club, May 6th, at the Palace Hotel. A specially designed crinoline gown, patterned after the latest model from Lady Duff-Gordon, has been ordered from New York to be used as a pattern for the gowns which will be worn by the Dixie Club hostesses. The ball will be a benefit for the National Service Training School, which will open in June at the Presidio.

—Here is something that will make chronic invalids gasp. The medical profession of the State are brandishing their scalpels and syringes, and threaten dire actions against the insurance companies because the latter "have cut down physicians' and surgeons' fees to starvation prices." This is jaundicing the wrong profession, and a stream of asphalt, molasses and turpentine should be immediately turned on the offenders by the local fire department. By heck! has the insurance companies developed the nerve to call down the medical profession, a profession harking back to the inglorious Hippocrates who laid a foundation that was capped by the late Dr. O'Donnell. And now large numbers of the profession demand that this damnable practice of having two scales of fees, a low rate for insurance companies and a higher rate for patients, must be abrogated over the operating table. It goes without saying if any of the gay and fat-pursed insurance bucks get busy with the gay life and over-feed their livers with highly seasoned foods purchased with dollars wrung from the fees of overworked doctors, there will be no "cut" in the mixed purgatives given these insurance screws. The profession has just issued a scale of prices ranging from $1 to $500 for a lovely lot of attractive maladies that a human may enjoy while waiting in suspense to learn what his bill may be. The new method seems hardly fair in properly compensating the profession during this prevailing war time, when prices in all callings are rising, willy-nilly. More elasticity should be given to their scale of prices. Insurance rates change with such conditions. Why not the doctors' rates of charges, and quote them along with insurance rates and other prices on the commercial pages of the daily papers? Surely the profession should have a square deal in this respect.

—The recent Rev. Slaughter announces that he is ready to resign his pulpit. The recent reverend evidently is still possessed with sufficient acumen to read the handwriting on the wall and "git," while the going is good. If he had had the perspicuity to have incubated this idea before the recent trial was begun, he might have saved some of his bacon from the fire and cast less discredit on the cloth. Verily, this is a short-sighted world at the best, and many will be the days that will lapse before the acts of this tortuous wearer of the cloth will be effaced from the memories of the goodly church members in the little towns dotting the north Sacramento Valley. His reverendship declares boldly that he "can no longer live under your lies and hate;" a personal idea, the child of his own acts. In the understanding of the just among his congregation, there is indubitably the feeling that he is a man to be forgiven rather than to be despised. The character of the man is being brought out more conspicuously now in the white light of the disagreed jury. He froths over his salary payment and demands full compensation for the usual sixty days' notice from the church wardens, and declares he "will never be whipped." His threats and gasconade alone mark him as good riddance.

FASHION'S FADS AND FRILLS

Daytime dresses this season seem to have reached the height of perfection. There are the simplest of the simple, in designs for morning or street wear, and the daintiest, most airy possible of creations for afternoon and evening purposes. The typical summer dress is more charming than it has been for many a year. It is fashioned of the fascinating voiles, crepes, flouncings and organdies favored this season, and trimmed with ribbon, lace, embroidery and beads.

Beads as Trimming—White and Colored.

China beads are particularly effective for this purpose; these are used for yokes, collars, cuffs and for girdles. For the taffeta afternoon dress the beads are in colors or white, according to their application. One of the smartest of the imported frocks shown in New York this season, was a dark blue taffeta, trimmed with these white, opaque beads arranged in conventional designs on skirt yoke, cuffs and collar. An extremely simple, long lined dress of Lanvin's, in tan gabardine, was effectively finished by a narrow woven girdle of beads in the vivid Indian colorings; this girdle was weighted with two heavy tassels, and was caught loosely about the normal waistline, knotted and allowed to fall nearly to the skirt hem on left side. The girdle composed the only bit of contrast on the dress and the effect was charming.

A white bead girdle on an afternoon or a dance frock of net is most effective, too; the China beads may be used, or the glittering crystal beads. These woven girdles give us an excellent opportunity to put into use the knowledge of bead weaving which the majority of us gained when bead embroidery was so popular a form of fancy work, some years ago. One may use her own ideas as to color combinations, this being another chance for developing personality in dress. The use of color is undoubtedly the greatest factor in obtaining the desired note of the season; therefore, one should not hesitate to use color in effective combinations, in ribbon, braids and embroidery of all kinds; the touch of handiwork is introduced on frock, blouse and suit, anywhere and everywhere possible.

Breakfast Gown of Crepe

A Becoming House Dress

The daytime dress of serge, natural linen or taffeta, is rendered doubly becoming by a bit of vivid wool or bead embroidery, and the evening frock, no matter how simple, is a thing of glitter and sparkle. One should not be afraid of oddity, as long as it is harmonious.

The Return of Belts.

As girdles and belts of all descriptions are smart again this year, it will not be a difficult matter to introduce the required bit of color. Wide and narrow girdles of ribbon are smart; narrow strap belts of colored suede, soft or vivid, according to the tone of the material, encircling skirt or coat of the sport costume, and the simple serge or linen frock may be girdled as soberly or as gorgeously as Fancy dictates, and Fashion advises Fancy to be gorgeously inclined. Birds, bees, butterflies and colored moths are being embroidered on frock and blouse, the bluebird being especially favored for light-toned linens and cottons.

Trimming the Small Girls' Dresses.

Especially are these bluebirds favored for the little girl's white frock. The only thing to bear in mind, when using these motifs, is that the design must be small and the effect dainty. Feather-stitching and cross-stitch are both being used effectively on children's garments, and here again we see the effect of color, for in children's fashions there is the same demand for brightness. Fashion says that small people shall be dressed quaintly and prettily, that is all, and leaves us to work our own salvation. This is not difficult as materials are so charming and so inexpensive. There are figured and flowered dimities, dainty striped batistes and lawns, fascinating voiles and crepes, patterned in quaint designs, and the popular embroidered flouncings. Challis and mixed fabrics are being used in the jumper dresses for the small girl, combined with guimpes, white or colored. These little dresses are often piped with emerald green or turkey red.

Breakfast Gown and House Dress.

Not the least important detail, by any means, in the well dressed woman's wardrobe is the house dress. It may be the morning dress of the woman who merely supervises her household, or it may be the workaday dress of the woman who really keeps her own house, but it is as necessary as the afternoon frock or the evening gown. Fashion, too, takes a hand in its designing, cleverly introducing each season little innovations which make for comfort, convenience, and becomingness. As the home is the woman's business, the house dress marks her as efficient or inefficient.

The novelty cottons and linens are effectively used in these dresses, a figured material being trimmed with a plain, and vice versa. The breakfast dress illustrated is fashioned of a daintily figured voile, with ribbon-edged cape collar of plain white voile. The house dress, which could quite as well serve for a street frock, developed in serge or linen, is fashioned of dark blue madras trimmed with bands of white voile. Both designs are simple, practical and becoming.

HUMANITY—AND SANITY

BY HENRY FORD

FOR months the people of the United States have had fear pounded into their brains by magazines, newspapers and motion pictures. No enemy has been pointed out. All the wild cry for the spending of billions, the piling up of armament and the saddling of the country with a military caste has been based on nothing but fiction.

For, Americans should realize that the fantastic stories of the invasion of the country and its quick conquest are the work of fiction writers. It is a good rule to keep cool and take fiction at its own worth.

Editorial enthusiasts have hastened to forget the disaster at the Dardanelles, the statement of the president: "We are threatened from no quarter;" the bankruptcy of bleeding and weakened Europe.

With fiction clearly in mind, Americans should consider some facts.

On the floor of the House recently, Congressman E. W. Saunders of Virginia, said:

"Go forward, gentlemen, valiant aggregation that you are of jingoes and Don Quixotes, and attack the windmills of your fevered imaginations, we at least are content with a navy that is sufficient for the purposes of defense, and not large enough to tempt this country to commit lawless aggression.

"Mr. Chairman, this is not a question of a great navy, but of a greater navy. This country has a great navy, a FAR GREATER NAVY THAN THE MAN IN THE STREET IS AWARE OF, when he listens to the ranters who would have him believe that sane and moderate men are unwise and unpatriotic, merely because they are unwilling to waste the substance of the country in a wild riot of naval construction. Compared with the guns of every other nation of the world, save England, and the jingoes always exclude England from their calculations, the guns on our ships in weight and carrying power are distinctly superior to all others."

Brigadier-General Erasmus Weaver, head of the coast artillery of the United States, confounds the fiction writers.

General Weaver would have charge of the defenses of the country if such an invasion occurred.

In 1915, testifying as to the strength of our coast defenses, General Weaver said:

"I have been a close student of the whole subject, naturally, for a number of years, and I know of no fortifications in the world, so far as my reading, observation and knowledge goes, that compare favorably in efficiency with ours."

On January 19th of the present year, General Weaver went before the House Committee on Military Affairs and asked for an increase of 11,000 men for the land fortifications. I quote from the report of the hearings before the committee:

MR. McKELLAR—"If we conclude to carry out your recommendation and give you the 11,000 men, then, as I understand you, you would have a perfect system of coast defense that you think would be adequate for any purpose?"

GENERAL WEAVER—"Yes."

MR. McKELLAR—"Your idea is that your guns are sufficient now?"

GENERAL WEAVER—"The guns now mounted and those contemplated will give us an entirely satisfactory defense."

MR. McKELLAR—"You do not take any stock in the idea that the ships of foreign nations carry guns of long enough range to silence your guns?"

GENERAL WEAVER—"No."

MR. McKELLAR—"I want to ask you, General, with our present condition, is our condition of preparedness for defense deplorable?"

GENERAL WEAVER—"Except in the matter of personal, it is not."

MR. McKELLAR—"It is in excellent condition, with the addition of a few officers and men, such as have been recommended by the department and by you?"

GENERAL WEAVER—"Yes, sir."

MR. McKELLAR—"In your judgment, is it not unfair and misleading to the American people to have a public man make a statement that would lead you to believe that the coast cities of our country are wholly at the mercy of some invading enemy?"

GENERAL WEAVER—"I do not know that there is any officer acquainted with the facts that would make such a statement."

MR. McKELLAR—"Any public man; I do not say an officer?"

GENERAL WEAVER—"I hesitate to criticize public men."

In the Congressional Record of February 3, 1916, page 2265, is taken the following extract from the testimony of General Nelson A. Miles, U. S. A., retired:

"Having had much to do with placing and construction of our fortifications, and inspecting every one along the Atlantic, Pacific and Gulf coasts, as well as having had an opportunity of seeing all of the great armies of the world and many of their fortifications, including the Dardanelles, I am prepared to say that our coasts are as well defended as the coasts of any country, with the same class of high-power guns and heavy projectiles, and I have no sympathy for the misrepresentations that have been made in the attempt to mislead the public."

Later this officer declared:

"These overseas expeditions spring from the minds of men writing about preparedness who know less about preparedness than anything else."

Before a Senate Committee, January 31, 1916, General Miles declared:

"The placing of an army on American soil is the last thing any European government would attempt: it could never be re-embarked. It would dissolve like snow beneath the midday sun. Whenever it has been attempted it has resulted in disaster."

We have seen this come true at the Dardanelles. The greatest battle fleet in the world's history backed up a magnificent army in that landing. They faced no such great guns as our coast forts have. Yet for a year this army and navy struggled and the soldiers never got beyond the range of the naval guns. Then the attempt was abandoned. The jingoes refuse to remember such a recent shattering of their fictions, and try to make you forget it, too.

They refuse to remember that England during the present war, with absolute control of the sea, required thirty-three days to move 30,000 troops, unequipped, from one friendly port, Quebec, to another friendly port, Southampton. Yet they tell you glibly of 400,000 enemies landing on our shores almost overnight.

As old Lew Dokstader remarks truthfully, if jokingly: "The two best friends of the United States are the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans."

If the people know the facts there will be no fear. If there is no fear the "preparedness" proposition now before Congress for a vast army and a vaster navy will not become law. But to escape the burden of billions of taxes, an armed aristocracy, and ultimate subjection to the munition makers and their financial allies backed up by a great army, the people must act. They must write to their Congressman, to their Senators, to the President.

A two-cent stamp, rightly used, will hold in the hands of the people the ruling power that threatens to slip into the hands of their greatest enemies, the money lender, the imperialist and the men who make their fortunes from the blood of armies.

The people must stop thinking of the government as something beyond them. The people are the government. Every stockholder in a corporation has the right to know how, where and why the concern's money is being spent. Every American is a stockholder in his government.

OUR TROOPS IN MEXICO

Our troops are in Mexico doing police duty, running down a murderer of Americans. For two years they were on the border preparing for just such work. After they had orders to "get Villa" it took a week to get started. That delay tells the real story of our need of "preparedness."

But it is not the "preparedness" of more hordes of armed men. It is the "preparedness" of being able to use efficiently what we already have the development of our industries on a basis of efficiency. This is the best, the only preparation against war.

Again, remember, the expedition into Mexico is a police work. But the President himself has discovered a capitalistic plot to bring us into actual war with Mexico. So, impressed with this feeling of a deliberate attempt at treason by American capitalists, the President has issued a public statement which includes the following words:

"It is my duty to warn the people of the United States that there are persons all along the border who are actively engaged in originating and giving as wide currency as they can to rumors of the most sensational and disturbing sort which are wholly unjustified by the facts. The object of this traffic in falsehood is obvious. It is to create intolerable friction between the government of the United States and the de facto government of Mexico, for the purpose of bringing about intervention in the interests of certain American owners of Mexican properties. This object cannot be attained so long as sane and honorable men are in control of this government, but very serious conditions may be created, unnecessary bloodshed may result, and the relations between the two republics may be very much embarrassed.

"The people of the United States should know the sinister and unscrupulous influences that are afoot and should be on their guard against crediting any story coming from the border, and those who disseminate the news should make it a matter of patriotism and of conscience to test the source and authenticity of every report they receive from that quarter."

It would be well for those who have not taken an active interest in the operations of the government, who have been careless of the welfare of their own country, who have been too willing to take as fact everything they see in print, to consider this warning of the President. And it would do no harm to the country for every American to apply this same test and look for the "sinister influences" behind the propaganda for hurling the country into war, and for leading us into a wild rush for "preparedness."

THE BATTLE CRY OF MAXIM

Have you seen that awful moving picture, "The Battle Cry of Peace?" Did you shake with fear and tremble for your country's safety?

Do you know that others were shaking at the same time, but with laughter at your fear and with joy over the fat contracts your fear might bring them?

On the screen you were told that the play was founded on the story of Hudson Maxim, "Defenseless America." You saw Mr. Maxim in the picture. He was holding something aloft. It was an instrument of warfare.

Now, Mr. Maxim was merely advertising his wares and playing on your fears to make a market for his goods.

Mr. Maxim has something to sell—war munitions.

The following is from the stock report of Harvey A. Willis & Co., 32 Broadway, New York City, November 13, 1915:

"The stock of the Maxim Munitions Corporation is the latest candidate for favor among the Curb war stocks. It made its appearance this week at 12 and was actively traded in at 12 up to 14½. This company is a $10,000,000 concern recently organized for the purpose of manufacturing munitions of war of all kinds, except explosive materials. . . . The company has arranged to take over the important inventions of Hudson Maxim for the manufacture of aerial torpedoes, bomb-throwing devices, aeroplane guns, etc. Mr. Maxim himself will be president of the company."

The book was a fine advance notice. The picture was a fine follow-up. Then came some swift "patriotic" work.

Just two weeks later, November 27, 1915, the following appeared on the first page of the New York World:

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 26.—Many members have resigned and others are threatening to resign from the Committee of One Hundred appointed by Mayor Kiel to urge the preparedness programme upon Congress. This action resulted from advertisements in St. Louis newspapers this morning of a $10,000,000 Maxim Munitions Corporation offering stock for sale at $10 a share. Hudson Maxim appeared two days ago before the Business Men's League to urge support of the national defense programme.

"That's a pretty swift beginning," said former Solicitor-General of the United States Fredrick W. Lehmann, in announcing his refusal to serve on the committee.

"One cannot help suspecting an ulterior motive," said Judge H. S. Caulfield, in declining to be a committee man.

"If the activities of the National Security League, at the instance of which the committee was appointed, the appearance of Mr. Maxim and the promulgation of the advertisement can be connected, it is treasonable," said John H. Gundlach, former President of the City Council and member of the committee.

Here we have a sample of the "patriotism" that is directing the "preparedness" campaign, spending huge sums carrying its poison of fear into every part of the Union.

It is time for every man and woman of the United States to get angry, to fight this misrepresentation and deception. Pass the facts on to your doubting or unconcerned neighbor. Become a recruiting officer for the army of peace.

Think, write to your Congressman, and when the time comes, vote. Your livelihood, your peace, your life and the lives of your children all depend upon the immediate crushing of the head of the serpent of militarism.

THE NAVY LEAGUE FOR DEFENSE?

The Navy League has been spending large sums to tell Americans that it is organized for the defense of the country.

The Navy League is deceiving the country, and its own official organ, the "Seven Seas" magazine, proves the deception.

On page 13 of the September, 1915, issue appears the true gospel of the Navy League.

We read: "The true militarist believes that pacifism is the masculine and humanitarianism is the feminine manifestation of national degeneration. . . . World empire is the only logical and natural aim of a nation."

Then, on page 23 of the "Seven Seas" for November, 1915, is an enlargement upon the "defense" idea, as follows: "It is the absolute right of a nation to live to its full intensity, to expand, to found colonies, to get richer and richer by any proper means such as armed conquest, commerce, diplomacy."

Here we have the philosophy of the Navy League, which thus sustains the ideas of its munition-making founders. Brutal, lawless, avaricious, but ever making the common people pay the bills in life, limb, money and waste.

The munition makers fear the ending of the war. They have built vast additions to their factories, not temporary structures, but great buildings that indicate not only hope but determination that this war shall continue, that other wars shall follow, and bring their bloody profits with them. If they cannot force more war they can at least, they believe, tie up this country for huge munition contracts. And they, and their tools, are preaching fear to get those contracts. And this treason, masked as patriotism, has deluded many who have not thought and will not think.

There is a proposition now before Congress for the appropriation of $500,000,000 for a great naval building programme. This was first proposed by Robert M. Thompson, president of the Navy League and chairman of the board of directors of the International Nickel Company, a firm that has profited and will profit probably more than any other concern by the passage of the naval bill. The proposal was made at a dinner in New York before a group of men who included those "patriotic Americans" who hold absolute control of the making of war munitions. The propaganda began at once and now continues with great expenditures. It is of no concern to these men that "we are threatened from no quarter," as the President says. They want the money. And you, Americans, must pay now in cash from your wages, and later must take up the arms these munition makers will sell you and march off to the "armed conquest" the Navy League's official journal says is the "proper means" by which the United States must show its destiny in the world's history.

I earnestly urge those members of the Navy League who have a real feeling of regard for the country's safety, but have allowed themselves to be tricked into membership in this organization by the cry of "patriotism," to think calmly, read Congressman Tavenner's speech on the Navy League, use their reason, and be thinking patriots, not fear-driven tools.

Remember the warning words of George Washington, in his farewell address to the American people: "Cultivate peace and harmony with all nations. . . . Overgrown military establishments are, under any form or government, inauspicious to liberty, and are to be regarded as particularly hostile to Republican liberty."

A QUESTION OF "RIGHTS."

The men who voted against tabling the proposal of Senator Gore and Congressman McLemore to warn Americans off armed belligerent ships have been branded traitors.

But these men forgot party lines, forgot their own political safety to consider the safety of 100,000,000 Americans who have a right to peace. The President had said that if one American who traveled on an armed ship was killed the country might be plunged into war. It was a question of "stand by the President" in support of his dangerous foreign policy, or stand by the people.

By a parliamentary trick, a vote was prevented upon the real feelings of Congress as to warning Americans off such ships.

Any man with common sense will deny that Americans have a right to use such ships when their President declares they endanger the country by so doing. Under such conditions, a "right" becomes a crime.

Sweden, placing common sense above a "doubtful legal right," has issued a warning to its citizens to keep off armed ships of the warring countries.

Norway, in the face of jingo cries, recently voted down a proposition for so-called "preparedness."

Congressman Decker, of Missouri, summed up the whole matter in his speech on the floor of the House during the discussion of the McLemore resolution, when he said:

"If war comes, we will all stand by the President of the United States. But this, thank God, is a representative Government. And I wish to say to the insinuating gentleman from Alabama (Mr. Heflin) the question now is, Will you stand by the American people? You cannot dodge the question, gentlemen of the Southland and gentlemen of the Northland. The question is, Will you go to war on what Mr. Lansing says is a doubtful legal right? I am willing to go to war if necessary. My people have borne their part. My father and my uncle fought to preserve that flag. But I say to you, the private citizens of this country, the men who pay the taxes, the men who, if there is war, will die in the trenches, the men who will breathe the asphyxiating gas, the mothers of the boys whose flesh and blood will be spattered on the fields of battle, want to know before war is declared why they have to go to war."

We Americans have three duties before us. We must keep out of this war, for we have no right in it no matter what the Wall Street Tories and "patriots" tell us through their newspaper spokesmen; we must do all in our power to help the nations at war find a common ground for an early peace; we must take the lead in suggesting the limitation of armament that will lead to disarmament. And if we begin now to pile up a great navy and a great army we cannot hope to have the proper influence with the world in bringing about this condition that the peoples of all the nations long for. War and preparation for war have not brought it and cannot bring it. The people have the power in their hands to crush the avarice for gold and conquest that war has brought. That power is the voice, the pen, and greatest of all, the ballot.

ARMOR PLATE PATRIOTISM.

The patriotism that fires our munition makers, whose fine hands can be recognized in the "preparedness" agitation, was brought forward in startling relief recently.

A Senate committee, considering the bill of Senator Tillman, appropriating $11,000,000 for a government armor plate plant, was informed by Senator Penrose of Pennsylvania, that if the Tillman bill was reported favorably the armor plate manufacturers of the United States, who for years have been absorbing vast government contracts at vast profits, immediately would raise the price of armor plate $200 per ton.

The Senate passed the bill, although the advocates of government by condensation fought to the last ditch. Immediately the armor plate men lost some of their patriotic bluster and offered, before the House, to reduce the price of armor plate if the House would reject the government owned plant. But the members of the House have learned some things about the munition makers recently, and will do their duty accordingly.

Other samples of munition-making "patriotism" are to be found in the speeches of Congressman Clyde H. Tavenner of Illinois. These speeches may be secured by writing to Mr. Tavenner at Washington.—Adv

BIG ENGINE PLANT COMES TO BAY SHORE.

A big expansion in the capitalization and plant of another successful local corporation was announced, this week, and adds materially to the conspicuous progress made in the expanding radius of the big manufacturing holdings that are creeping over the fringing bay counties, a commanding depot on the world's trade route, and of natural commercial and geographical importance. Expansion in manufacturing plants on the shores of this great harbor have only begun, according to the local Chamber of Commerce, which is now making a careful survey of this field.

The Standard Gas Engine Company of Oakland, a thriving concern that captured the highest award at the recent Exposition, and has acquired a wide reputation for its guaranteed work on Diesels and engines of allied character, has been snapped up at $600,000 by the U. S. A. Engine Company, a robust and aggressive $1,500,000 corporation financed by Eastern capitalists. The new concern has also taken over the agency for the Starkhardt-Harris Diesel engine. The way in which the new concern is absorbing promising properties of this character indicates that the management intends to take the lead in marine engine construction on the Pacific Coast. The patents it controls and the plant it is building certainly warrants such conclusion. The plant recently bought on the Oakland estuary will be extended six blocks at a cost of $200,000, and the labor roll will be increased by 300 men. Over $1,000,000 are already booked.

According to Vice-President William L. Hughson of the Standard Company, who handled the option for the Easterners, the new organization will bring $1,000,000 of business to this locality and largely stiffen faith in California as an industrial center. The U. S. A. Engine Company will make gas engines up to 100 horsepower, standard. Higher powered engines will be built on the Starkhardt-Harris Diesel type. For a long time past California has been greatly handicapped in getting high gas-power engines on this coast. The advent here of the U. S. A. Engine Company, with its ideal facilities for covering all demands in their line, clears the way for largely extending the sales of California petroleum products, and thereby dovetails into the new interlocking industries that in time will make the bay counties the heart of a great and thriving commercial center.

NEW PENSION SYSTEM OF PACIFIC GAS.

The executive committee of the board of directors of the Pacific Gas & Electric Company announced, this week, an effective plan of pensions, standard in character, for all employees on the roll of the parent company and its auxiliaries. For many years the company has taken care of its employees, who have been loyal and devoted, by retiring those who had been incapacitated through injuries or by reason of age infirmities, on a pension sufficient to maintain them in the necessities of life. The new plan, issued this week, will henceforth stand as the official pension plan of the company. These new benefits will apply to those persons only who, later, may be in the service of the company, and who have been required to give their entire time to the business of the main company or any of its subsidiaries. In the latter case, the executive committee will determine the pension allowance and proportionate cost to be borne by each company. Any officer or employee who reaches sixty-five years, after fifteen years continuous service, may be pensioned by his own request or action taken by the executive committee. Two other fields are covered; employees of 20 years' service, suffering from mental or physical disability, may be retired, and employees of continuous ten years' service who shall be judged incapable through injuries received while actually at work in the employ of the company, may be retired and pensioned. For each year of service an allowance of one and one-half per cent of the average regular monthly pay received for the last ten years preceding the retirement is the basis of payment. For instance, an employment of forty years on an average salary or wage for the last ten years of $85 per month would be 60 per cent, or $51 per month, payable monthly. Salaries thus figured must not be less than $15 per month.

SAN FRANCISCO BAY.

A royal mien thy rank betrays,
Proud offspring of the sea,
Clad in thy robe of purple haze,
Thine air of mystery.
Compass'd by Titan captors round,
Aloof dost thou abide,
Thy varying mood forever crown'd
With an unconquered pride.
Yet hast thou, stern, mysterious bay,
One tender gift of fate:
With lingering ray, each parting day
Smiles back through Golden Gate.

—Probably the most successful attraction ever produced at Techau Tavern is the Show Girl Revue, which is now crowding this popular cafe. Magnificent gowns, fresh, rich voices, new and catchy songs are the features which appeal so strongly to the Tavern patrons. The eight young lady principals look well, sing well and carry their magnificent costumes well. They are directed by Mr. E. G. Wood, the well known Eastern producer, who accompanies them on the piano. The gowns and the songs are new each week. On Saturdays all the ladies who attend the Tavern are presented with souvenir bottles of La Boheme perfume.

—The Grasshopper Club of Oakland will hold a picnic at Pinehurst on the Oakland, Antioch & Eastern Railway, in the heart of the Redwoods, Sunday, April 23d. Club members will leave 40th and Shafter avenue on the 10:10 a. m. Sunday excursion train. This event will mark the opening of the Pinehurst grounds, where music will be offered every Sunday and holiday during the summer.

—If you are a man who discriminates over luncheons, do not hesitate, but go to Jules' well known establishment, Market street, south side, just below Third street, where you will find an incomparable lunch, a special feature, for 40 cents. Try it, and you will become a "steady." In the evening, dinner, dancing, music, with wine. $1.

Villa's Hiding Place

BY PAUL BRUSKE.

Broken with mountains bare of foliage save the occasional mesquite or cactus, the Mexican desert in July when we crossed it in an auto, seemed to represent the absolute zero in real estate.

Through this waste, the wagon roads follow the railroads, and the tourist's chief task is to remember on which side of the Internationale de Mexico he happens to be, taking the first fork back and continuing this simple though erratic maneuver until he decides to call it a day's work, and goes into camp.

The Mexican desert isn't always as dry as Death Valley. There are times when it rains fiercely and long. We could readily believe this from the terrific chasms that these storms had cut in the adobe clay. We crossed but one stream—one stream in 200 miles—that had water in it.

Yet there is a sparse population along the line. Once in ten miles occasionally, but more often once in 25, we came to a desert rancho, consisting of a mud hut and a shed without walls. The hut sheltered usually a fabulously old Mexican, his son, the son's wife, and three or four sore-eyed children. All were obviously underfed and unbelievably dirty. Under the shed would probably be tethered an emaciated goat. In the middle distance a burro would be munching a briar bush as dry as paper. An hour's travel might reveal a half-dozen cattle of the longhorn type, their tongues swollen by their forage, the prickly pear.

The big problem of this family is the water supply. This every Mexican rancher hopes to secure the year round from the open air tank he has dug in the bed of some dry stream that occasionally becomes a torrent. By July these tanks were either dry or covered with a thick coating of scum. I had always supposed there was an element of grandeur about a rancho. The northern Mexico article makes the average southern Negro cabin in the States look like a coupon clipper's mansion.

Through all the region the only real tree is the yucca palm, hardest of its family. Alone or in groups they stand sentry over their barren surroundings, towering sometimes to nearly the height of a full-grown man whom, from a distance, they weirdly resemble. To test his marksmanship, Bill Lane drew the little rifle we carried and took a shot at one of these palms. The tree simply disintegrated. It had been a palm. It became a puff of dust which the wind blew away.

Along the railroad there are two or three visible towns. One of them is Lampazos, which bears the evil fame of being the hottest place on the North American continent. The railroad drags in a tank car full of water once a week. This is the sole supply.

There is a river at Monterey—a river of the year round type, though not big enough to require a bridge. Our trip was in 1910. Something more than a year before, that river had washed away all of Monterey located on the low ground, entailing great loss of life and some property damage.

They told us that the river, which approaches Monterey through a valley, between two mountain ranges, filled the gorge five miles in width almost to the brim, carrying on its crest many dead Mexicans and the debris of scores of ranchos.

Lane asked in strict confidence what killed the flood victims—was it the shock of so much bathing?

Even the smallest Mexican town has its plaza, an open square where, in the evening, the band plays ditties that, to the unpracticed ear, seem to have no rational periods. The public walks around the plaza, turning always to the left. Mothers and daughters do most of the walking. We counted 22 laps for one duenna and her veiled charge. Then we left. They may be going yet.

In a long experience on the road we had come to regard local motorists as the source of valuable road information, and had never sought it in vain. In Monterey we had another reminder that we were unwelcome strangers in a foreign land.

Circling slowly about the plaza we rejoiced in the sight of a car built in the Detroit factory to which we owed allegiance. We gave the driver a hail and started for the curb. The fat, arrogant representative of an envious race favored us with one hostile glare and stepped on his throttle.

From Monterey to Saltillo, the traveler's route is through a rugged mountain region. All trains double-head into Saltillo, and the track winds through chasms and along cliffs all the way.

Wagon road? There is none. The statement is literally true. Rumor has it that one of Don Porfirio's colonels made the trip the down-hill way once, and took along his carriage. We never found his route. Perhaps the flood had so altered the landscape as to wash his road away. At any rate, 15 miles out we found the valley barred by an arroyo 40 feet across and almost that deep.

We tried the next valley—the one used by the railway—and found it better, as progress was possible for nearly 50 miles, in and out of the bed of a dry stream. At deep arroyos we took to the temporary railroad bridges then under construction all along the line as an aftermath of the flood.

The 100 miles took us six days. The last two nights we spent at Saltillo, leaving the car and returning by rail for the next day's drive.

Through this whole region, the railway is the only method of travel. Crops are marketed by it and people travel about in the coaches from one rancho to another. If a peon desires to sell his pig, he buys a ticket for town, checks the pig in the baggage car and makes the trip by rail.

The trains are manned by Americans who may be pardoned for some practices not pardoned north of the border.

"Did you buy tickets?" asked the genial conductor between Paradon and Saltillo. "What a shame! Don't you know I can carry you quite a bit cheaper than the railroad?"

Mining is the one source of wealth, and the problem of transportation is always present. Burros are the general medium, but even in 1910 the mine owners were anxiously awaiting the perfecting of aircraft which will, they predict, prove the final solution.

"See that mountain over there?" The question came from a mine owner in Saltillo. "In a straight line over that mountain is Monterey, 39 miles away. On the far side of the mountain I own a mine. To get to that mine I must travel 100 miles by rail to Monterey and then come back a day's journey on horseback to the property.

"An aeroplane is the only answer. The floods make road improvement out of the question. It can't be done."

It is in country like this that Villa has his lair. Surely the boys who fly for the U. S. A. will be mighty aids in tracking him down.

South of Saltillo one again encounters the desert—a region very similar to the northern belt and running clear to the plateau where populous Mexico lives.

Once on this plateau, the food problem of an invading force becomes simplified. In all probability, its battles will be virtually over when this stage of the journey is reached. Water is plentiful. Forage can be had. Railroads cease to travel on trestles. The country becomes more like a section of southern Texas—semi-arid, perhaps, but irrigated and producing.

Through this country an invading force might readily be self-supporting; in Northern Mexico, never. But, if there is to be battle between Mexico and the United States, the battle ground will be the desert north—the haunt of the lawless Villa, the land which has already been swept by the alternate pillage of Diaz, Madero, Huerta, Villa and Carranza.

Chili, frijoles, tortillas—these are no food for a fighting man, and there aren't enough of them to go round now. No wonder we read that Uncle Sam is mobilizing his supply trains!—Detroit Saturday Night.

The Background of the War Zone

New taxation amounting to $325,000,000 was announced recently to the House of Commons, but the British public is said to have shown "little interest," probably because the new burdens had been foreseen as inevitable. To a great extent the increase is to be got by a tax on luxuries, and in particular the small luxuries of the poor, to which British finance has always been tender. A halfpenny the pound is put on sugar, which is expected to yield $35,000,000, despite the campaign for economy in sweets which the tax will help. A new import duty of threepence the pound is put on both cocoa and coffee. Travel is to be taxed a penny on each shilling of railway fare. All these specially hit the poor, but the well-to-do are affected by the special tax on automobiles of more than 16 horsepower. Yet heavier taxes will be needed before the war is done. When it began, the national debt in billions of pounds was 0.65; it is now 2.14, with 3.5 in sight. To carry that burden all the available sources must be taxed to the limit.

That there is crooked work going on in high places at Washington in the matter of informing the public as to the true state of the nation's defenses, is a conclusion that is difficult to escape after reading George Harvey's convincing exposure in the current North American Review of what it is perhaps charitable to call the disingenuous tactics of the Secretary of the Navy. In his leading editorial in the April issue of the Review, Colonel Harvey makes it clear, by the citation of records and the statement of indisputable facts, that Secretary Daniels has persistently misled the public as to the true condition of the navy. "Hence," he observes, "the term 'a daniels,' now familiar throughout the navy as synonymous with a shorter and—if conceivable—an uglier word."

The exceedingly rapid work of Congress in passing the army bills, contrary to all expectation earlier in the session, should render possible an adjournment two or three months sooner than has been anticipated. When June comes, measures so controversial as to involve prolonged opposition in the Senate are likely to be put over until winter, and the President will find himself welcoming the elimination of congressional activities until after the presidential campaign. There is nothing in the program of new legislation, which the President has recently suggested as desirable to the House leaders, to delay an adjournment, unless it be the ship purchase bill.

Lieutenant-Commander Breithaupt, whose Zeppelin was brought down in the Thames, is reported by the London Times as saying that he fully expected to be shot if captured. His treatment must be an agreeable surprise. Incidentally, his remark illustrates the folly of the demand for putting such prisoners to death. They take great risks in any case, and a little more or less of danger does not matter.

If Villa had been joined by all the Carranzistas reported as revolting, it would be time to look after the defenses of Washington.

INCREASING PROSPERITY THROUGHOUT THE U.S. Pig iron production at the opening of April was at the unprecedented rate of 40,000,000 tons a year; the demand for steel so far exceeds productive capacity as to force many manufacturers to refuse new business, except where belated deliveries can be arranged; unfilled orders reported by Steel Corporation at opening of April were 115 per cent greater than a year ago; the Corporation has announced that its subsidiaries would not make commitments for supplying rails at the present price for deliveries after May 1, 1917; commercial failures last month represented the smallest March total of liabilities shown in that month for six years; new security issues authorized and offered in March aggregated $250,000,000, compared with $57,000,000 in that month of 1915, the striking increases this year reflecting the large volume of new financing called for in connection with the increased industrial expansion; March trading in the New York Stock Exchange reached 15,056,373 shares, compared with 12,126,205 shares in February and 7,844,860 shares in March, 1915; a further sharp advance in the price of copper reflected the heavy inquiry from both foreign and domestic sources with the release of a $6,000,000 order for the account of a European interest; and the pronounced activity in retail trade has been a direct consequence of the increased purchasing power of the people, due largely to full employment of the population at about the highest average wage ever known.

—According to the Monthly Financial Letter of Wells Fargo National Bank, most of the 61,811 tons of barley remaining on hand in California has been sold, and is only awaiting shipping facilities. The 240,977 sacks of carry-over beans would readily be sold if there were means of prompt shipment, but Eastern and foreign buyers are not willing to make contracts when no delivery can be assured. Similarly, the lumber business is restrained in its activity chiefly by deficiency of tonnage. The whole world is suffering from lack of tonnage for ocean transportation, and freight rates reflect the situation. Thus, in the last two years, the rate on grain, New York to Liverpool, has increased 900 per cent; on flour, New York to Liverpool, has increased 400 per cent; on cotton, New York or New Orleans to Liverpool, 900 per cent; on flour, from the Pacific Coast to Hongkong, 200 per cent. The Department of Commerce attributes this shortage in ships to the following causes: The elimination of merchant ships of Germany and Austria-Hungary; the withdrawal of merchant ships for military and naval purposes; and the loss of ships through submarine and mine operations.

—The local mining market continued active in Tonopah and Oatman shares during the past week. Goldfield shares are in a measure neglected, awaiting the outcome of new developments in the properties, and the start up of the new flotation plant on the property of the Goldfield Con., so it is only the question of a little time before the Goldfields will become active again.

"The Twin Sisters."

In his last novel, "The Twin Sisters," the late Justus Miles Forman, who lost his life on the Lusitania, presents, among other interesting phases, the arresting suggestion that environment possesses a potency equal to or greater than that of heredity, in influencing the development of character. Another phase, bordering on the revolutionary, is the author's estimate of the character of the titled Englishman as superior to that of the American westerner, so long the standard, with many writers, for everything that is ruggedly honest and virile in the male sex.

Twin sisters are reared in dissimilar surroundings as the result of parental separation. Diana grows up under the influence of her amiable but rigidly honest and honorable father; while Alice reaches womanhood under the direction of a prudish, artificial and self-centered mother. It is sought, apparently, to create the inference that the moral fibre of the two girls was closely akin when they were separated 12 years before the story opens. But Diana's development was unhampered; her heritage of uprightness, truthfulness and innate honesty merely took deeper root as she grew to adult stature. On the other hand, Alice's growth in the directions named was hampered and stunted from the moment her parents separated, because of the vitiating atmosphere thrown about her, and because her mother sought to make the girl a reflection of herself.

"The Harim and the Purdah."

Although the French dressmaker is a regular institution in Cairo, the modern Egyptian woman still looks best in her native costume, according to Elizabeth Cooper, in "The Harim and the Purdah," Century Company. The native costume disguises the over-abundant flesh with which the sweets and the sedentary life of the harim endowed its inmates. But this is not the sorrow to her that it would be to her western sister, Mrs. Cooper says, since the ideal of beauty in Egypt is to be as wide as one is long. In fact, women who at thirty do not consider themselves sufficiently large in girth send to the chemist for a mixture that will have the desired effect.

"Drifting Waters."

This book, by Rachel Swet Macnamara, author of "The Fringe of the Desert," etc., deals dramatically with the rebellion, secret rather than expressed and tempered with resurgences of loyalty, of a young girl, budding into womanhood, against the jealous proprietorship of a mother's love. There has been much in the married life of Mrs. Tudor to account for her bitterness of soul and to explain her tyrannous affection, an affection that demands from the daughter loved a singleness of devotion to the exclusion of every one else. The daughter's fancy is in time caught in the meshes of love, and the clandestine expression of her attachment, which the circumstances demand, involves developments of far-reaching interest to the unfolding of the story. The scene is in part England, in part Egypt; and readers of Mrs. Macnamara's "Fringe of the Desert" are in a position to make a forecast of the glow and haunting charm of her descriptions of Egyptian scenes. "Drifting Waters" will appear under the imprint of the Putnams this month.

The last letter Thackeray ever wrote was to Mrs. Leslie, the grandmother of Shane Leslie, who records the incident in his new book, "The End of a Chapter," just published by the Scribners. Here is Thackeray's letter, written the day before he died, declining, because of illness, an invitation to dinner:

"Dear Mrs. Leslie: Since I wrote and said yes, I have been in bed two days, and fate and the doctor say No. Indeed I am unfit to come (I have only this minute crawled down to my sofa), and nobody can be more sorry than

"Yours very faithfully,

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL ITEMS

ENGAGEMENTS.

BANCROFT-MOORE.—The engagement has been announced of Miss Evelyn Bancroft to Dr. Justley Hartley Moore of New York. Miss Bancroft is a grandniece of Hubert Howe Bancroft, the historian, and a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harlow Palmer Bancroft of Oakland. The bride-to-be is a graduate of the University of California, where she enjoyed marked popularity. Dr. Moore is a member of the faculty of the City College of New York. The date for the wedding has not been set, but will occur in the early summer.

JENNESS-THOMPSON.—Society on both sides of the bay will be interested in the announcement of the engagement of Miss Lucretia Frost Jenness of Berkeley and Lieutenant Robert Rowe Thompson of the United States Navy. The bride-elect is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Herbert H. Jenness. The engagement was made known to a few intimate friends at a farewell dinner at which Lieutenant Thompson was host recently on board his ship, the United States steamer Charleston.

WEDDING ANNOUNCEMENTS.

BENNETT-BRIZARD.—"The Pines," the home of Mr. and Mrs. Philip Bowles, will be the setting for the wedding of Miss Kate Bennett and Henry Brizard on May 28th. The ceremony will be performed in the garden surrounding this beautiful home.

HANNA-ERICKSON.—Miss Gertrude Hanna and Martin Ludwig Ericson will be married on Saturday, April 29th, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Hanna, on Laguna street. Mrs. Gardiner Bullis of Los Angeles and Mrs. Richard Hanna of Richmond will attend the bride, and Miss Virginia Hanna will be flower girl. Gardiner Bullis will be best man. Mr. Erickson will take his bride to Medford, Ore., to reside.

KELLY-EUSTACE.—Miss Gladys Kelly and Wyatt Eustace will be married in Boston the latter part of this month. Eustace is an Eastern man, who has made his home here for the past year. He left recently for the East, and en route he will visit friends in Philadelphia. After the honeymoon, the young couple will make their home in San Francisco.

WEDDINGS.

SCLATER-SMEAD.—A wedding of interest here, especially in the navy set, is that of Lieutenant Walter S. Smead, U. S. N., and Mrs. Jas. Sclater of Hampton, Virginia. The marriage was solemnized last Saturday at Coronado in Christ Episcopal Church, and followed by a reception at the Coronado Hotel. After the honeymoon, Lieutenant and Mrs. Smead will journey to this city for a visit and later go to Yerba Buena, where the bridegroom will be stationed. Lieutenant Smead has been doing duty on the U. S. S. Oregon.

Big Motor Power Show Opens April 26th

The Pacific Coast Motor Power Show, the greatest exposition of the kind ever held in the West, which will be given at the Oakland Municipal Auditorium from April 26th to May 6th, will be inaugurated with the greatest illuminated automobile parade ever seen in the bay cities. Plans for this monster feature are being rapidly completed by the committee in charge. More than one thousand automobiles will be in line, and among the many cities to be represented will be Oakland, San Francisco, Sacramento, Stockton, San Jose, Berkeley and Alameda. Red fire will be burned along the line of march and public buildings and many of the downtown stores and office buildings will be gaily decorated and illuminated with festoons of varicolored incandescents. Three silver cups will be awarded by the judges of the parade for the best decorated and illuminated pleasure car, motor truck and fire apparatus.

The preparations for the opening night are being made on an elaborate scale. The power show management has been assured that the transcontinental telephone will be reserved on that night for the sending of the verbal message by President Wilson declaring the show open. Among the speakers on the opening night, which will be in charge of the Oakland Chamber of Commerce, will be Governor Hiram Johnson, Mayor John L. Davie, P. E. Towne, President of the California State Automobile Industries Association of Alameda County; Joseph H. King, president of the Chamber of Commerce; Joseph E. Caine, Dennis Searles, L. W. Buckley, and others.

With more than 100 automobiles, electrical supplies and good roads making machinery firms already taking space, and the demand for additional space still very heavy, the housing of the displays will require every available foot of the great auditorium arena and the corridors, as well as two annex buildings. The big heavy canvas on the auditorium floor has been dyed green, setting off the great automobile display which will be placed there in wonderful manner. Canvas strips of the same color will be placed along the walls of the arena where the boxes are ordinarily kept. Fifty of the beautiful posts which were used in the Argentine building at the Panama-Pacific Exposition have been purchased to be used at the corners of the exhibit spaces. They will be topped with electric lights, swinging flower baskets, Oriental lanterns and silk cords running from post to post, marking the division between the exhibits.

Of equal interest to the displays of motor driven products will be the Outdoor Sports Show, which will be held in the auditorium ball room. Every costume worn for automobiling, golf, bathing, riding, driving, beagle hunting, tennis and sports of every kind will be shown by beautiful models. Eight revolving pedestals will be used, and at a given time a cord will remove a silken covering, and from each pedestal will descend a live model wearing the latest in sport togs. Woodland back-grounds, or a veranda of a clubhouse with the models posing, will be among the features. Many of the best known society women of the east bay cities are acting as patronesses of the fashion show.

Scripps-Booth Presents a Car of Class

Increasing its capital to a million dollars, the Scripps-Booth Company is making plans for trebling its output for the coming season, and with this, and the election of Clarence H. Booth as president of its new organization, takes its place with the leaders of the automobile industry.

After the many predictions that were made but slightly over a year ago, when this company announced a light car of almost twice the price of any of its light-weight contemporaries, the success of this company has been a surprise. No doubts ever have been expressed about the car itself—which was most enthusiastically admired even by those supposed to be in competition—but doubt was expressed as to the ability to sell a light car at such a figure.

The Scripps-Booth designer, however, figured that there was a large class which well appreciated the advantages and economy of light-weight constructions, and the greater pleasure of driving light-weight handiness, who were not in any way tempted by the cheap angle of all the light cars then available. This car, therefore, was designed to appeal to the big car owner and limousine occupant who wanted a light individual car for his own use, in which he could ride with equal dignity and self-respect as when he rode behind the chauffeur in his limousine or imported car.

Important to the firm as its addition of capital is its increasing business strength of organization.

Mr. Clarence H. Booth, who takes the presidency and management of the company, has had large experience in big business, and is exceptionally familiar with automobile problems. He was formerly general manager of the Studebaker Company, and brings to his new connection, to add to the new spirit of its growth, the knowledge and worth of a long connection with automobile big business.

News from Washington

Maintenance has been given positive attention in the form of Federal aid in roads to the several States which the Senate Committee on Postoffices and Post Roads has embraced in its proposed legislation. This subject the A. A. National Good Roads Board has insistently presented ever since the coming of the vehicle which caused road travel to extend beyond town and county, and even State lines. Thus comments the Senate Committee in the memorandum which accompanies the bill recently reported unanimously:

While the primary purpose of the government in entering upon the policy of Federal aid is to secure the construction of systems of highways which are urgently needed, it should not forego the opportunity and the duty to require on the part of the States that they adequately maintain every mile of road constructed with the aid of Federal money. If legislation is framed so as to bring about such continuous and efficient maintenance, a great benefit to the people will have been assured, as it is now generally recognized that because of lax administration and mistaken economy millions of dollars worth of well constructed roads are disintegrating under the destructive action of heavy traffic. The Federal government should not expend its revenues for maintenance, as by so doing it would not add to the stock of good roads, but it can make conditions which will bring about the desired results and leave the Federal revenues free for the great task of co-operating in the building of improved roads."

In answer to the charge that Federal help would cause the States to lessen effort and rely upon the central source entirely, the Committee says:

"While the contribution on the part of the Federal government should be substantial, so that results of some magnitude might be accomplished, such contribution should impose upon the States the duty of contributing in at least as large a measure, so that there may be no insidious paternalism established, which would stifle local initiative and self-help. If the Federal government were to enter upon the building outright of a system of national highways, the temptation would be great on the part of States and their subdivisions to cease or curtail their own work of improvement in the hope that the Federal government would ultimately come and make the improvements for them. Furthermore, the imposing upon the States of the duty of making substantial contribution will serve to automatically modify the demands upon the Federal Treasury, as excessive demands upon the Federal Treasury under these conditions would at the same time entail equally excessive demands upon the States."

The American Association of State Highway Officials and the American Automobile Association, in co-operation with other organizations, are using their best endeavors to convince the Senators from the several States that the good roads bill demands consideration equal to that given to military preparedness.

Buick Wins Desmond Silver Trophy

Record Breaking Over Sierran Snows

Covered with snow and mud, and loaded with baggage and passengers until it looked more like a gypsy van than an automobile, a little Buick roadster rolled up to the Sentinel Hotel in Yosemite Valley last Tuesday at 5:30 p. m. The arrival of the Buick, which had made the entire distance from San Francisco over public roads and entered the Yosemite Valley over the Coulterville road, one of the three present automobile routes into the reservation, ended the battle for the silver trophy offered by the D. J. Desmond Commissary Company.

The Buick carried five people, two tents and provisions enough to supply the party for several days, besides the necessary equipment for overcoming all kinds of obstacles, not the least of which was the removal of several large trees from the road.

The party consisted of Fred Gross and C. A. McGee, of the Howard Auto Co., Pacific Coast distributors of Buick cars, and Mr. and Mrs. Ralph R. Earl and B. Loper of the Paramount Feature Film Co. More than 2,000 feet of motion picture film was made on the trip. This will be shown all over the world, and will give the general public some idea of the beauty and grandeur of the Sierras, white clothed in their mantle of white.

The snow covered Sierras are no longer a novelty to either Gross, McGee or the Buick car. For five consecutive years these three names have been connected with the winning of prizes offered to the first car to cross the Sierras and comply with certain rules. The Buick and its crew have captured the Tahoe Tavern silver trophy for four consecutive years, and the winning of the Desmond trophy for 1916 credits them with five straight wins without a loss, a record they may well be proud of. In speaking of the trip McGee says:

"In breaking a road over the Sierras, one expects to experience difficulties, and in most instances he is not disappointed. The story of the difficulties overcome, however, should not scare the owner, who expects to tour over these roads a month later, as by that time they will be in their normal condition, and as good as at any time in the year.

"When we decided to try for the Desmond trophy, a careful study of topographical maps showed us that there were only three wagon or automobile roads into the Yosemite. These are the Wawona road and the Big Oak Flat road, both of which reach an elevation of more than 7,000 feet, and the Coulterville road, which crosses the summit at an elevation of 6,050 feet. The only other way that it is possible for an automobile to enter Yosemite Valley is via the Yosemite Valley Railroad, which follows the Merced River Canyon, and inasmuch as this is a private right-of-way, and there is nothing that even resembles a road for vehicles between Bagby Station and El Portal, a distance of 29 miles, it is readily seen that as an automobile route it is not practical at this time. The running of a State highway up Merced Canyon, however, will be the solution of the Yosemite road problem, as there are practically no grades, and the highest elevation reached is at the valley itself, which is about 3,000 feet above sea level. A highway up Merced Canyon would mean that automobiles could drive to Yosemite every month in the year.

"In trying for the Desmond trophy, we chose the Coulterville road, on account of the difference in elevation. The regular San Francisco, Los Angeles highway was followed as far as Modesto. At this point we turned east over fairly good roads to Waterford and Lagrange. At this point we were advised that a heavy storm was raging in the vicinity of Coulterville, and that we would find the roads in very poor condition on that account. The roads were unusually good, however, until we were within about six miles of Coulterville, where we encountered a stretch of freshly graded road which was very soft. Coulterville was made without difficulty. As this was the point where we left civilization, we went carefully over our list of provisions, and bought such things as we had overlooked in our departure from San Francisco. From Coulterville to Bauer's Cave, a distance of 14 miles, the roads were in fair condition, although there were several heavy grades encountered in this distance. At Bower's Cave we stopped and inspected the cave, which is really very wonderful and more than repays one for the few minutes spent in viewing it. From Bowers' Cave to Hazelgreen, a distance of 12 miles, the grades are continuous and in places very heavy.

We encountered our first snow about a mile and a half below Hazelgreen, and three miles and a half from the summit. This snow was mostly level, however; that is, there were very few deep drifts, and we had very little trouble in reaching the summit. Our biggest problem on this stretch was a tree about 24 inches in diameter, which had fallen directly across the road. Fortunately it had broken in three pieces, and we were able to attach a block and tackle onto the middle piece, which was about 50 feet long, and roll it out of the way with the car.

We had expected that when we crossed the summit our troubles would be almost over. They were in fact just beginning. From the summit the road winds around the north side of the mountain for several miles, and it was this piece of road that gave us our most trouble. The snow was about four feet deep, and in many places had drifted until it was necessary to do considerable shoveling before it was safe to proceed with the car. We had expected to find our last snow at the Merced Grove of Big Trees, while the snow-line in reality was some three miles further down the canyon, and just to add to our cup of misfortune, we encountered a large sugar pine about four feet in diameter which had fallen directly across our road shortly below the snow line. The tree laid in such a position that it was not practical to chop it out. For that reason we built a trestle work of timber and drove the car over the top.

About this time, the weather, which had been clear and warm, changed, and we were in the midst of a severe snow storm for several hours. This latter turned to rain, and made things very disagreeable. There is an end to all things, however, even snow and fallen trees, and after finally cutting clear of these difficulties, we made fast time into Yosemite. The Buick party was given a hearty welcome by the Yosemite natives, and after sitting down to a fine dinner which Mr. Goddard of the Sentinel Hotel had prepared for us, we quickly forgot about our hard trip.

It is hard to imagine a harder test on an automobile than a trip of this kind. In the first place, in order to carry supplies and provisions for the party, it is necessary to load the car to about three times its capacity. It is forced over and through all kinds of obstructions, and breaks a road for many miles that have seen absolutely no travel for months. On the present trip our load was so large that we were forced to carry a big box on the rear of the roadster to carry part of it. In spite of the overloading and severe treatment that the car was given, not the least bit of trouble was experienced with it or with the tires with which it was equipped. This is the first time we have ever used non-skid tires on a run of this kind, and the Goodyear straight-side non-skid tires, with which the car was equipped, certainly demonstrated their ability to give and hold traction when given half a chance. In spite of the rough going and overloading not even one puncture was experienced.

Considerable work has been done on the roads, and more is to be done. In view of this fact, and with the present good weather continuing, the roads into the Yosemite Valley should be opened up about May 1st, and without doubt May and June are the finest months in the Yosemite. The roads are free from dust, and the waterfalls are at their best, and the man who expects to travel to the Yosemite in his machine will do well to make the trip in one or the other of these months.

Motor Construction Tends to Simplicity

Official figures show that close to 2,100,000 motor cars were licensed in this country in 1915, and it is conservatively estimated that at least one million persons are driving their own cars this year, according to the Franklin Auto News.

A significant thing about the large proportion of owners who run their machines themselves is that the sale of automobiles in the United States is far from being limited to those who understand mechanical things. In other words, the degree in which the automobile may be classed as a vehicle which requires an expert to operate it is diminishing rapidly.

Still, it is probable that not one person in ten who operates a car knows anything about its mechanism. Such a condition is bound to have an important influence in the future design of motor cars.

It is a condition which means a tendency toward greater reliability in automobiles; simplicity in design and construction—the smallest possible number of things to look after and care for. In this connection it is interesting to observe that there is a real distinction between American and European cars, based on the proposition that in this country cars are to a very large extent driven and taken care of by their owners, while in Europe probably the majority are looked after by mechanics and operated by chauffeurs.

For this reason, in selling cars to Europeans it probably is all right to equip the machines with four-speed transmission, for example. Complicated mechanism is not as serious an objection as in this country, where not one car in ten thousand has a four-speed transmission.

A three-speed transmission supplies all needs and is comparatively simple—there is less mechanism, less wear and less to look after.

It is predicted that the next few years are bound to bring a practical development—a refinement—which will make cars even simpler in design and construction than they are to-day. They will be easier to operate and need less attention.

Undoubtedly the time is not far distant when the car with the smallest number of parts will sell for the highest price because it will be the cheapest in the long run.

A First-Class Garage

There are many garages in town, and the motorist is often in a quandary as to where to go, especially for permanent service. There are very few who give you the QUALITY of service of Dow & Green, in Taylor street, between O'Farrell and Geary. Here your car will receive something more than the "once over," and the prices are moderate.

The Message from Cavalry

BY ZOE ACKERMAN.

'Tis Easter Tide! Could it but bring Unstrained the joys of reborn spring,
Green hillsides peopled with gay bloom—
The risen souls from Winter's tomb;
Blithe meadowlarks with lilting voice
To bid us with the Earth rejoice;
New hopes to heal the anguished pain
Of those whose hearts lie with the slain.

'Tis Easter Tide! And shall we sing
In praise of a forgotten King?
Or must our song yield to the cry
Of bitter hearts that bleed and die,
Our paean but a mockery
Of thousands rotting on the lea,
Of thousands more who march to yield
Their blood upon the battlefield.
Must we still turn our outraged thought
Upon this slaughter greed has wrought?
No longer see the Christ arisen,
But tortured, bleeding in his prison?

'Tis Easter Tide! We can but pray
For those nailed to the cross this day.
Our hymns are hushed, our spirits fail
Before the thoughts of sword and nail,
Of needless wounds of bomb and steel,
Of lives ground 'neath a Pilate's heel.

'Tis Easter Tide! Again it brings
Its warning to unheeding kings;
Its message to the tortured brave
Who blindly fill the martyr's grave.
Our songs are silenced, yet we hear
A voice reverberating, clear:
We see before the altar rail
A Specter of an angel pale,
With lilled sword and crown of flame:
"Hearken! I speak, in Jesus name,
A message from far Calvary,
Bidding thee rise again, as He!
Arise, men crucified, and stand Obedient to your God's command!"

'Tis Easter Tide! And will ye stay
Entombed in dust when your maimed hand
Has power to hurl this sione away!
Arise, and o'er the ravaged land!
Even as Christ, teach kings to pray!

'Tis Easter Tide! Those empty-aisled
Cathedrals, bomb and blood defiled!
'Tis Easter Tide! Think, ye mad czars,
Think of the tortured Christ, the scars!
Think ye! And in contrition end
This anguish of Herodian wars!
Turn thy perverted power and rend
The stone which holds you to your doom,
The stone which shuts you from the stars,
And out of your inglorious tomb
Arise rebaptized in His Name,
And cleanse your tainted souls of shame."

The Allemania, recently licensed to write business in California, will be represented by the Clarence de Veuve general agency, with headquarters at San Francisco.

On his retirement from the presidency of the West Coast-San Francisco Life, Thomas L. Miller was made the recipient of a vote of confidence and a handsome silver loving cup.

Julian Sonntag, for ten years vice-president of the West Coast Life, and this month elected vice-president of the West Coast-San Francisco Life, died at his residence in San Francisco last Sunday, after a short illness, largely due to grief over the death of his wife five months ago. He was one of the well known men of the city, and extensively interested in business enterprises.

J. H. Bridgeford, who will be remembered as secretary and general manager of a Tacoma, Wash., fire insurance company, which passed over the Great Divide, and who has been doing field work in Washington for the Pacific States Fire of Portland, Ore., has been elected secretary and a director of the latter company. He will practically manage the underwriting end of the Pacific States, and is amply competent to perform the work in a satisfactory manner.

O. H. Mickel, the popular supervisor of agents of the Aetna's casualty branches, with headquarters at San Francisco, has joined the ranks of the benedicks. The lady was Miss Madeline Solari of San Francisco.

The following appears in a circular issued to its members by the Insurance Brokers' Exchange of San Francisco: "The question of reciprocity between tradesmen, store-keepers and large establishments on the one hand, and the members of the insurance fraternity on the other, is of particular interest to brokers, especially when, deserting the home field, lines are placed with companies and brokerage concerns in other parts of the country. Preliminary action has been taken in a conference with the heads of a leading department store."

The new building now being erected adjoining the Tyson agency on the south and the Norwich Union on the north will be occupied by the McClure Kelly companies, Yorkshire and the Northern and the Phoenix Assurance Company, represented by Mr. Irving. It will be ready for occupancy in about four months.

C. J. Stovel, until recently and for many years a general agent for the Pacific Coast of numerous fire insurance companies, has accepted an appointment as metropolitan agent in San Francisco of the Law Union and Rock, and the Union Assurance under Manager Harry H. Smith.

The tempest in a teapot between local labor union organizations and Secretary Mohrhart of the Pacific Board over the discharge of union printers employed in the underwriters' printery, and which at first threatened to result in serious reprisals on the part of the labor organizations, has been quieted, and all is peace.

A serious effort is being made by the city of Oakland to motorize its fire department at a cost of one hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars.

The California Industrial Accident Commission has arranged for four safety hearings in San Francisco as follows: Laundry safety orders, April 24; Engine safety orders, April 25; Woodworking, April 26; Elevator, April 27. Similar public hearings will be held in Los Angeles on May 8, 9, 10 and 11.

A. T. Von Etlinger has been engaged as manager of the Automobile Insurance Company's fire department on the Pacific Coast, with headquarters at San Francisco. Mr. Von Etlinger was formerly with the Commercial Union and in British Columbia, and for twenty years has been familiar with conditions on the Coast.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

GOVERNMENT LIGHT ON GASOLINE SITUATION.

According to Secretary Lane's latest report to the Senate on the gasoline situation in the country there are sound economic reasons for the recent increase in price. Here are several classes of comparative figures furnished by his department on the present situation: In 1910 there were only 400,000 licensed autos in this country; in 1914 the number had increased to 1,253,875, and by January 1, 1916, the number had reached 2,250,000. These figures do not cover the increased use of gasoline in fields where motor boats, farm tractors, farmers' pumping stations and other daily users prevailed.

Against these figures the same report shows the rate of gasoline production increased in approximately the same period. The year 1904 furnished 6,920,000 bbls.; 1909, 12,900,000 bbls.; 1914, 34,915,000 bbls.; 1915, 41,600,000 bbls. Crude petroleum, from which gasoline is refined shows the following production: 1904, 117,100,000 bbls.; 1909, 183,200,000 bbls.; 1914, 265,800,000 bbls.; 1915, 267,400,000 bbls. The year 1915 was memorable in oil history as furnishing the marked shrinking of several strong Eastern and Southern fields, notably the Cushing field, Mid-Continent, a field famous for the extraordinary large content of gasoline—30 per cent—carried by its crude petroleum. That field alone fell off in production some 200,000 bbls. a day, between April, 1915 and January, 1916, an estimated daily loss of 60,000 bbls. of gasoline in that period of time.

According to Secretary Lane's report, the Lima-Indiana field is 93 per cent exhausted; the Appalachian, 74 per cent; the Gulf Coast and Colorado, 70 per cent each; the Illinois, 60 per cent; Kansas and Oklahoma, 50 per cent; Northwest Louisiana, 47 per cent; North Texas, 40 per cent, and California 34 per cent. This leaves three fields with 50 per cent of their estimated content untouched. California, with her 89,500,000 bbls. of production in 1915, easily leads. But her crude petroleum is most of a carbon base, low grade, and the gasoline content averages only an estimated 2½ per cent.

Naturally, the oil drillers on this continent are eagerly scouting to find new petroleum deposits, thousands of wildcat wells are drilled yearly, but the results have been practically negligible. In California the day of the gusher is past, and pumbers have become the salvation of the situation. A comparison of production during January and February of 1915 with the like two months of the present year shows a falling off of 60,000 bbls. California's daily production of crude oil this month will range close to the 800,000 bbls.

TIRED OF LIFE.

—Tuthill in the St. Louis Star.

For a year or more past, refiners have been alive to this growing situation, and over a year ago began to turn their attention to seeking new and efficacious methods of getting more gasoline at cheaper costs of refining. Standard Oil Company proved successful in that line by discovering the Burton process. The Interior Department of the Government became alive to the situation through the Department of Mines, and experts were assigned to study the problem of finding a cheaper method of refining. The result is the present Rittman process, of which free use is given by the government to any citizens who wish to embark in that enterprise. Rittman recently resigned from the government's employ to head a big corporation that has organized to refine gasoline by that process. In California, the Independent Agency, the biggest organization of independent oil men in the State, is now at work building a refinery to use the same process.

Efforts to escape a gasoline pinch of high prices is also being worked out by experts who are experimenting with carbureters that will burn cheaper grades of oil such as kerosene, or certain forms of distillate. Such a successful kerosene burner would at once almost treble the amount of fuel in sight, as compared with gasoline. The motor car has become such an inseparable part of the American citizen that he will stick persistently to the problem of seeking a cheaper fuel. In the past, his proverbial ingenuity has helped him out of more intricate problems, and it will do so in the present case.

UNCLE SAM PILING UP HUGE TRADE BALANCE.

Against the pessimistic observations of the wing of Eastern forecasters, who declare that a stringency in the business situation will follow on the heels of the announcement of peace in the European war and that the Continental nations will flood this country with their productions, comes the cheerful and more reasonable promise of the Eastern optimists who declare that the business situation of the wing of Eastern forecasters, who declare that a stringency in the business situation will follow on the heels of the announcement of peace in the European war and that the Continental nations will flood this country with their productions, comes the cheerful and more reasonable promise of the Eastern optimists who declare that the business situation in this country will continue to improve because of the increasing scarcity of manufactured products throughout the world. Shelves are reported bare in all the manufacturing countries except in the United States and Japan. Europe has transformed its biggest factories into plants for the manufacture of munitions of war, and these are filled mostly with women because the regular male operators have been forced into war's service. Transportation charges in shipping have climbed several hundred per cent, and will likely climb higher after the war till new tonnage, now building, relieves the situation. Shipbuilding plants all over the world are working overtime. It is hard to conceive under this situation how Europe can flood this country or the lands of South America and Asia with its manufactured goods. More reasonable is the idea that the European belligerents will be compelled to buy great quantities of building materials, machinery, agricultural implements and food products from this country, in the first rush of rehabilitation. Japan is harvesting, and expects to continue to harvest, continuous profits now and after peace is declared. That country is multiplying millionaires in the present trade with Europe almost as fast as this country. In fact, the merchants of that country are showing more energy and resource than those of the United States in signing new business in foreign trade. She is even boldly invading the South American field with representatives, backed by the influence of the government at Tokio. The National City Bank of New York has shown commendable enterprise and spirit in establishing branches in the several big cities of South America in order to facilitate trade and exchange with that continent. The big exporters of this country should follow up with efficient selling agents if they expect to gain a footing in that rich field of trade.

Meanwhile in this country the high cost of living follows the advance in wages. Many of the big national concerns have already voluntarily raised the scale of wages. U. S. Steel made another announcement of an advance of 10 per cent this week. As usual, the public eventually pays this advance in higher prices. The financial situation just now is full of promise and strength, unless by some complication this country should be dragged into the European maelstrom of blood madness. The total national bank resources have of late been rapidly mounting, within a year an increase of 20 per cent, so that the amount has now reached the extraordinary sum of $13,838,000,000; which means that this country is again in a position to loan out several billion dollars to any foreign nation or nations prepared to submit the necessary security.

ART MOVEMENT WAVE IN SAN FRANCISCO.

No movement of late has been as stimulating and encouraging for the future of San Francisco than the present keen zest and persistence which various organizations interested in the arts are endeavoring to develop here on broad and lasting lines. Painting, the plastic arts, music, the drama, pageants, more beautiful gardening, in fact anything that is stimulating to idealism in the beautiful. This condition, of course, is the natural reflection of daily intimacy with the alluring beauties of the recent Exposition, the halo of which continues to inspire the imagination and the hope of the residents around the bay. This same spirit has again roused leading local citizens to a determination to build a grand opera house, adequately equipped and with a subscription list that will guarantee the best of productions and costs, worthy to be the standard house of opera for the Pacific Coast. Strong efforts are now underway by the votaries of painting, captained by the San Francisco Art Association, to preserve the Palace of Fine Arts on the Exposition grounds, with an allied movement to maintain the Marina, give every sign of becoming successful. That splendid and profound bronze of the gifted Rodin, has been presented to the city by Mrs. A. B. Spreckels, and has been put in a notably fine place in Golden Gate Park, a noble and lasting gift that should perpetuate the broad and noble generosity of the donor. A like movement is also underway by the ladies of the California Club to purchase what was extolled as the most popular statue on the Exposition grounds, "The End of the Trail."

The committee of ladies have already selected an ideal location for its setting should their offer to the artist, James Earl Fraser of New York, be successful. The eastern terminus of the great Lincoln Highway across the continent to the Golden Gate begins at a huge bronze arch in New York; the end of the same highway reaches the Pacific in Lincoln Park, overlooking the Golden Gate, and everlasting combers of the broad Pacific Ocean, a spot that is the veritable "end of the trail" across the continent and the place of setting for the statue. A proposition is now underway to have the statue cast slightly larger in bronze. Details of the purchase of this statue seem to be progressing favorably. In music, the Symphony Concerts and the Philharmonic Concerts of next year are being planned on a more substantial scale. More signers of high artistic abilities and more instrumental players are routing their tours through San Francisco, and this season the local devotees of music are accordingly hearing some of the most famous of the European exclusive favorites. This unusual opportunity is, of course, due solely to the fact that the European war has turned their faces to America for desired employment. Their routing this way, however, will set a precedent that will obtain in a measure after the war, and numbers of them will acquire the habit of occasionally placing California on their itinerary. In hastily sketching these local movements in art, due credit should be given to that little band of pioneers who, led by M. H. de Young during the memorable Midwinter Fair, seized the opportunity to gather such prizes in art as they could with which to establish the nucleus of what has since become an attractive popular collection of its kind in Golden Gate Park. Theirs was a modest beginning, but it bridged the local popular taste in art to the opulent display at the recent Exposition.

BOSTON'S NEW IDEA IN EXPOSITIONS.

Already the recent Panama-Pacific International Exposition is being recognized throughout the world as the last word in repressing the old form of designing and conducting international expositions as conceived and conducted in Europe and this country for the past hundred years. Accordingly, those cities and aspirants who are contemplating holding expositions are turning their visions to the heights of Art seeking for some new form to express their idea. Among these aspirants are those attempting to incubate a new and original idea in materializing the next international exposition to celebrate the Pilgrim Tercentary at Boston, the historical landing of the Pilgrim Fathers. The committee on plans is unanimous on the vital point that they must make a departure and get away from the old conventional form of expositions, which is becoming too huge, too vast, too ponderous, for even an enlightened visitor to scan cursorily, according to the Boston notions. Their object is to cover the great achievements in science, education, religion, philosophy, music and all other arts of the past 300 years. With this limited three centuries to cover they believe they have the latitude to drop the exposition idea which has prevailed in all its conventional form for at least a century. Sensationalism, bigness, loudness and the bizarre will be strictly eschewed. Whether this is a swing of the pendulum between Puritanism and the modern Boston spirit is an enigma to the Western mind. However, San Francisco has shown the world what it can do in successfully planning, conducting and building an exposition.

Famed Palais Du Glace of Paris Will Be Rivalled By San Francisco's New Ice Palace

The grand opening of the Techau Tavern Ice Palace at Eddy and Jones streets, on next Monday night, May 1st, will see indoor ice skating in California for the first time in this generation—that is, where the public will do most of the skating and not professionals. The Techau arena is a magnificently large and beautifully arranged rink where two hundred couples may skate at the same time. The San Francisco Amateur Hockey League will play all its matches there, and so will the Caledonian Curling Association of California. That "Techau Service" will prevail at the new rink guarantees the highest form of perfected ministering to the wants of the Palace patrons. Competent teachers will show us how to skate and then to dance. This will be in the mornings largely. In the afternoons and evenings there will be public skating and wonderful exhibitions by the world's best professionals—Paul Wilson and Claire Cassell, the Pauleens and Alfred and Sigfrid Naess, with Carol Young, Sdyl Wolf, Mae Raymond and Dorothy Strassman, all from the "Castles-in-the-Air Skating Palace," New York, assisting. Selwyn Joyce, a miracle man among stage directors, is going to put on the Ice Fetes at the Techau Tavern Ice Palace, and is now in charge. You can rent skates at the rink for a small fee, and also you can have a light supper service in the Cafe de Luxe where the loges and boxes are located. The music is to be superfine, so Manager A. C. Morrison says. Franz Adelman is coming back to Techau Tavern after an absence of fourteen years, and it will be his orchestra to which we shall "skate-dance" at the Palace.

The smart caper, once the skating season is in swing, is to dine at the Techau Tavern on Powell street, where an elaborate Table d'Hote dinner will be served every evening at 6:30 o'clock at $2.50 a plate. This service is especially to accommodate the skating enthusiasts who will repair to the Ice Palace after dining, in time for the opening of the skating exhibitions at 8:30 o'clock. But of opening night: The boxes in the Cafe de Luxe will be filled by San Francisco's typical first nighters at all the big and interesting functions—sporting and social. There will be the wonderful spectacle, "Alpine Nights," with marvelous dancing, figure and fancy skating, ensemble dancing, with a chance for everybody to skate before and after the show. Soulful dance music, truly sensational lighting effects and combinations, an elaborate interior decoration, and a big crowd—another ien strike for San Francisco. Among those having reserved boxes and loges for opening night are:

Mr. Edward De Guigne, Mr. and Mrs. John Lawson, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Templeton Crocker, Mr. and Mrs. Fred W. McNear, Thornwell Mullally, Mr. and Mrs. E. M. O'Brien, Mr. and Mrs. S. F. B. HIYA! HERE'S ROBINSON'S BIG CIRCUS.

Give the kiddies a chance to get pop-eyed with the greatest joy of childhood—the wonders of a really big modern circus, the greatest of its kind on the continent. John Robinson's enormous ten big shows combination with a four ring circus and a million dollar menagerie, will open a four days' entertainment at Eighth and Market street, Sunday, April 30th, with two big shows each day. Fifteen hundred people are employed in the 500 big circus acts. Reserved seats may be had at Sherman, Clay & Company's music store, Kearny and Sutter streets.

Big "Ad." Talk Across the Continent

Advertising men of New York and San Francisco eliminated distance and talked with each other over the telephone this week, and in the jubilation of the occasion they switched occasionally, and allowed Chicago, Pittsburgh, Denver, Winnetucca, Salt Lake and Omaha to butt in on listening. The banquet of the Association of Advertising Agents underway in New York and twenty San Francisco representatives of advertising men worked this end of the line through the courtesy of the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Company.

Harrison Atwood, vice-president and local representative of the H. K. McCann Company, advertising agents, exchanged greetings with H. K. McCann, member of the firm in New York and vice-chairman of the New York meeting.

To show the value of the transcontinental telephone in a business transaction, Atwood reported to the New York member of the McCann Company the prosperous condition of the business here and outlined a contemplated trip to Seattle, Portland and the Northwest to be taken within the next few days. Atwood also held conversation with H. W. Casler of the New York Telephone Company in New York.

B. B. Page, associate publisher of The Call, talked with O. H. Blackman and addressed the advertising men holding receivers at the New York meeting.

Other conversations across the trans-continental wire were between William Woodhead, former president of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, in San Francisco, and P. B. Bromfield, chairman of the New York meeting; between Mr. O'Shaughnessy of the Chicago Advertising Association, in Chicago, and George C. Sherman of the executive committee of the New York Association, in New York; between J. B. Pinkham, business manager of the San Francisco Examiner, in San Francisco, and William H. Johnson, chairman of the magazine committee of the New York Association, in New York; between F. A. Marriott of the Overland Monthly, San Francisco News Letter and Motoring Magazine in San Francisco, and J. W. Morgan, secretary-treasurer of the New York Association, in New York; and between J. L. Adler, advertising manager of the Bulletin, in San Francisco, and Collin Armstrong of the newspaper committee of the New York Association, in New York.

T. W. Harris was to have talked to George Hill, vice-president of the American Tobacco Company. The latter was unable to attend the banquet in New York, and Harris told the 200 or more advertising men gathered in the Eastern metropolis of the great success the Tobacco Company of California had experienced in its campaign of newspaper advertising.

"The fact that the unprecedented success of La Marquise cigarettes on the Pacific Coast is due entirely to a campaign of newspaper advertising is sufficient proof of the value of that method of reaching the public," said Harris. He concluded his address by telling of the prosperity experienced by the California branch of the American Tobacco Company during the past year.

Other features of the transcontinental communication were the transmission across the country by the wire of three pieces of music, including "The Star-Spangled Banner," played on Victrola records in San Francisco, and the carrying over the wire of the roar of the Pacific Ocean to the New York banquet as motion pictures of the San Francisco beach were being shown there.

Henry G. Bates was in charge of the wires for the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company in San Francisco.

NEW LOCAL STOCK EXCHANGE FIRM.

Harry B. Gregg, who has acted with unusual success as secretary-treasurer for Captain Matson's large interests for the past 14 years, has joined with Le Roy T. Ryone in the stock and bond brokerage business under the firm name of Ryone, Gregg & Company, with offices in the Kohl Building. Both Gregg and Ryone have had a thoroughly varied experience in the stock and bond business with big and influential firms dealing in gilt edge securities. The new firm is thoroughly equipped as regards details and judgment as well as ample capital. The firm has already been elected as a member of the San Francisco Stock & Bond Exchange, and has full wire connection with Eastern firms and exchanges.

A Thought

BY ZOE ACKERMAN

What marvel that the hurtling hurricane,
The summer shower,
Should both be revelations of the same
Unfathomed power.

What wonderment the orchid's luring bloom,
The noxious weed,
Should spring alike from nature's mystery,
The pregnant seed:

That slimy reptile with its venomous sting,
And raptured lark,
Are both expressions of th' unknowable
Immortal spark:

That craven murderer, that moron child,
That Christly soul,
Are all embodied fragments of this God
Created whole.

Methinks some other breath than God's somewhere exists
Which breathes corruption into the evolving mists.

PASSING OF JOSIAH R. HOWELL.

Josiah Rowland Howell, member of the firm of Baldwin & Howell, and for many years prominent in the social and public life of San Francisco, passed away, this week, after a long illness. He had been in ill health for many years. Howell was at different times a member of the Governor's staff, a member of the San Francisco Police Commission and a Colonel of the National Guard. He belonged to several exclusive clubs, and was widely and popularly known throughout the city. He leaves a widow, Mrs. Gertrude Dutton Howell, and a sister, Mrs. E. E. Bruner.

—Rarely attractive Easter models are now on exhibition at the two stores of Magnus, the well-known milliner, 178 Geary street and 212 O'Farrell street, the home of millinery in all its fetching variety. Magnus invariably makes a specialty of each season's most original artistic designs with the refreshing result that his seasonal displays of confections are justly regarded by discriminating shoppers as the best in quality, smartness and price. Anxious and nervous shoppers will readily appreciate this saving of time, worry and expense, that is usually expended in the indefinite hunt in search of an ideally becoming hat to frame the individual face. A visit to either of the two Magnus shops will convince you that at last you have found The Right Place.

An Unusually Gifted Child Dancer

"Anna Pavlowa, Junior," is the stage name of the daintiest bit of humanity which has appeared in Universal City, the home of "movies" near Los Angeles, since Carl Laemmle's big motion picture plant was established a year ago. "Anna Pavlowa, Junior," is that newly discovered little dancing fairy, Lena Baskette, only eight years old, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank E. Baskette of San Mateo, Cal., and the most wonderful natural born dancer that this country has produced. Wherever little Miss Baskette goes, she is acclaimed by people at large and by the most discerning critics as a rarely gifted, artistic dancer. The most discriminating among the experts who have seen her beautiful expression in idealistic dancing predict a career for her second only to the wonderful Pavlowa.

Her precocity and unusual gifts attracted the enterprising attention of President Carl Laemmle, of the Universal Film Company, and he signed a contract for her services for six years, an unusually long period in such cases, but a rarely wise one from the viewpoint of the promising artistic developments of the child. Her contract is the longest, in point of time, with the company. Provision is guaranteed that she shall be properly educated during her contract, with special instruction in languages, dancing and music.

The unusual way in which little Lena unconsciously revealed her rarely artistic temperament is an interesting story. Her father and mother, at the time, were engaged throughout the day at the former's drug store in San Jose, and the little child, then four years old, was left at home with a nurse. In order to amuse her, according to the father, he sent a talking machine and musical records to the house. For a year the house ran along on this routine, with now and then further demands by the child for more music records. One day the nurse happened to call the father's attention to the fact that little Lena danced to the music of the records every day from one o'clock to five. A few days later a teacher called in the evening, and recalling what the nurse had said, he asked Lena to dance. Those present were dumbfounded at her remarkable interpretation of the music and her extraordinary finesse in keeping time to the rhythm. The school teacher at once requested that Lena be allowed to dance at an entertainment in the near future. She showed such remarkable poise and confidence on this occasion and produced so much enthusiasm that Mr. Baskette asked his wife to place her in the hands of the best dancing master available. About the eighth lesson little Lena complained to her father that her new dancing master was just teaching her the waltz, two step, schottische and such dances, and she did not like them; they meant nothing to her. She complained that the music did not talk to her as the music in the talking machines; "they make fairy stories." Record No. 70,046, for instance, Liebestraum, she explained, filled her with grief and made her think that her son was dead. "Papa," she explained, "the music makes me think that I am the mother of several children, and the oldest boy I love best. One day he goes over the hills to gather blackberries. Then the rain came down and he did not return. I could not sleep, and waited out in the cold for him till the next morning. Then a man came and told me he was dead and eaten by beasts."

She told various stories illustrating her personification of an Egyptian princess, wood nymphs and other poetical characters, in the simple and direct way of a child. Unconsciously she was simply describing over again the same poetic stimulus wedded with the tempo of music that all gifted dancers feel so clearly and inspiringly.

PERSONAL ADVENTURES IN STAGELAND THIS WEEK Drama Begins Its Second Offensive

BY HENRY McDONALD SPENCER

The fact that the Puritan factor, in spite of other influences, is still dominant in American life and art is shown as well in our plays as in our president's messages with their constant references to righteousness. In "Bought and Paid For," the opening play of the new stock company at the Alcazar, there is a lot of cant about what is right as opposed to what is merely legal, and the moral law is invoked by the heroine as a defense for her conduct. Thus the preacher constantly is seen peeping from behind the playwright. The theme in brief is: A lady expresses distaste for the embraces of a gentleman in liquor, and her own husband at that. It is not that he is a souse; she admits that he is lit up but infrequently, nor does she claim that he ill-treats her in the ordinary sense of the word, far from it, he is too kind. That is all very well so far as it goes, although a New York captain of industry in similar circumstances would be more likely to seek some other woman's society, if we are to believe what we read and hear, but her reason alleged is based on ethical grounds, and she cannot forbear a preaching on the subject with copious references to that overworked moral law. How differently, for instance, a French playwright would have handled the theme, and what delightful satire might have resulted. We can imagine the protesting wife speaking somewhat thus: "Je pense que non. Cochon! mais que vous ete sale. Allez vous en et cherchez une fille." Translated from my perhaps imperfect French into colloquial English, this would read: "Nothing doing. Pig, but you are disgusting. Chase yourself out of here and hunt up another girl."

However, life-is-real-life-is-earnest in America, and I doubt if any one born on this side of the Atlantic or of Anglo-Saxon stock can quite overcome the Puritan taint. We are, indeed, civilized by Christianity rather than by culture.

But to come to the players, for comment on the play has been overworked in its past presentations, the company was received with enthusiastic acclaim on Monday night, and it is safe to say will become favorites with local theatre goers. The leading woman, Florence Reed, is very handsome, and has an attractive personality, at least so it seemed to me from my seat in the back row, but there is no doubt about the beauty and charm of her voice; and this, to one who detests the movies, is a great treat. I may remark, parenthetically, that she is rather heavy and dominating for the role of Virginia in the week's play, which I take was intended for a 110 pound flapper type of leading lady, as such an one would be more likely to be shocked at the amorous sportiveness of a gentleman in his cups, and therefore would be more convincing.

Miss Reed would shine to better advantage in Mrs. Pat Campbell roles, those that are the lineal descendants of "The Second Mrs. Tank" or Lady Windermere's mother, or some other such splendid sinner; and I must confess that I am sufficiently anti-puritan to like this kind of character better than any other kind of character on the stage. It is to be hoped that Miss Reed has plays of this kind in her repertoire, and thus will be able to do full justice to her rich talents and warm blooded vitality.

As Robert Stafford, the New York financial magnate, Malcolm Williams was admirably fitted, and scored heavily in a John Mason part. It is long since we have had the pleasure of witnessing such an excellent characterization done with that perfection of art which seems so artless, so that people in the audience paid him the high compliment of saying that he did not seem to be acting at all.

But the hit of the evening undoubtedly was James Gleason as James, or Jimmy, Gilley, the slangy, underbred brother-in-law of the abused wife. There may be better Gilleys, but I have never seen one, and I don't believe the role could be handled by any one more effectively than by Mr. Gleason, who ought to be called "Jimmy" too. Whether the author intended it or not, probably not, Jimmy is the best role of the play, and is a real live lovable human being, in spite of, or perhaps on account of, his vulgarities and common ways; and, mark well, there is not a bit of uplift flapdoodle about Jimmy.

Helen Sullivan, as the sister, was obviously a foil for the lead and got away with it; Marion Dentler had only a small part as the maid, and I think will make a charming young ingenue when she gets the chance, as I assume that is what she is in the company for. As for Y. Ikeda: Whether it is an advantage to have a Japanese play the part of a Jap is a question; the stage, after all, is not life but an illusion of life, and—well, Coquelin has a long essay on the subject, and I shall not endeavor to epitomise it here.

The company as a whole and the presentation are marked by a solidity and sureness which are bound to give the public confidence in whatever it may undertake, and I, for one, am very glad to say: "Welcome to our city."

Orpheum Scores Seven Out of a Possible Eight

The genial and popular press agent of the Orpheum, Captain Dillon, from whom the press tickets flow, told me that only once in the history of the Orpheum did the critics unanimously commend all the acts on the bill, and that week was the poorest in the history of the house. So much for criticism, which should I suppose be played with a copper. However, at the risk of queering the show for the rest of the week, I am constrained to say that I like very much seven out of the eight acts on the current bill.

Last week, I am afraid that I did not do Fannie Brice justice, and the ex-Leading Lady handed me a jolt in consequence, but little does she know of the exigencies of make-up or the fact that the composing-room foreman is the real editor of the paper. Fannie is a dear, and has the vis comica to a degree possessed by few women; she plays as if she really enjoyed it, and any time she wants to spend a week end, properly chaperoned, in a palatial country house—well, I am sure that she would be the life of any party. It is worth the price to see her josh the St. Denis act. Ruth St. Denis, with her big, beautiful body and queer little school-girl face, gave us some new and weird interpretations, and was ably helped by Ted Shawn and six attractive young lady assistants. The act was beautifully staged, and shows traces of the Rhinehart influence, also Gordon Craig.

If some good fairy had only whispered to "The Girl in the Moon," when she was distributing flowers among the audience, to pin a rose on the large, handsome, bronzed man wearing, among other things, a wrist watch, a malacca cane and a monocle (concealed), and sitting in the third row left, she would have received a notice that would have turned the rest of the performers green with envy; for the l. h. b. man with the silly and exotic impedimenta is very susceptible to feminine flattery.

Percy Bronson and Winnie Baldwin are old musical comedy favorites in San Francisco, and did a lot of quick stuff with just the right amount of suggestiveness for piquancy.

Mrs. Chilson-Orhman, whose blonde loveliness made you forget how well she really sang, gave a few numbers which showed her to be the possessor of a perfectly trained operatic voice with exquisite flute like notes. You will have to take my word for the rest of the bill, as it is all to the good (all but one—mentioned last week, but which still continues to bring down the house.)

Advance Notices

Otis Skinner at the Columbia—Otis Skinner, one of America's most distinguished actors, comes to the Columbia Theatre next Monday night to open a two weeks' engagement in his new comedy, "Cock o' the Walk," written especially for him by Henry Arthur Jones, the English playwright. "Cock o' the Walk" is an amusing satire on stage conditions in London at the present day, and the critics agree that it is the best play Mr. Jones has written in a long time. Besides, it provides Mr. Skinner with a part that fits his personality without a wrinkle. Anthony Bellchamber—that is the name of the character Mr. Skinner impersonates in this piece—lacks the picturesque rags and dirt of Hadji the Beggar (in "Kismet," the last play Mr. Skinner presented on the Pacific Coast), but he is not less interesting and amusing. Bellchamber is an actor, one of the "old school," a worshiper of "Will" Shakespeare, whose lines he spouts on all occasions, a Bohemian, bibulous, irresponsible, but lovable. The supporting company—a particularly good one—includes Janet Dunbar, Enid Bennett, Luella Smith, Walter Gibbs, Walter F. Scott, John Rogers, Harry Dodd, Henry Crocker and Ernest A. Elton. Mr. Skinner will give the usual matinees at the Columbia on Wednesdays and Saturdays.

Big Musical Comedy Season for Columbia—Following the engagement of Otis Skinner at the Columbia Theatre there will be inaugurated a musical comedy season which bids fair to attract widespread attention, for an all-star aggregation is to be brought from New York to appear in a series of latest Eastern hits. Among the principals will be Eleanor Henry, Dorothy Webb, Maude Beatty, Arthur Cunningham, Robert Pitkin, Madison Smith, Stanley Ridges, Victoria Gauran. A large and attractive chorus will be seen and heard to fine advantage, and it is expected that the costuming of the pieces which are to be presented will create quite a sensation, for the management has given special attention to this detail. "The Midnight Girl," by the authors of "Adele" and other successes, will be the opening production. The scale of prices will range from $1.00 to 10 cents. The productions will be of a class far in advance of any seen here in many seasons.

Orpheum—The Orpheum bill next week will have as its headline attraction Stella Mayhew, whom the New York press call the cheeriest of all comediennes, and Billie Taylor, who will present their own up-to-date songs and chatter. Miss Mayhew has been the particular bright star of many successful musical comedies and the joyous headliner of innumerable vaudeville bills. James B. Donovan, who describes himself as "The Man You All Know," and Miss Marie Lee will appear in a skit called "Doing Well, Thank You." It is an admirable vehicle for the introduction of their songs and witticisms. Miss Robbie Gordone will be seen in her classic reproductions of famous porcelains, ivories and oil paintings. She is not only an artist, but a beautiful girl as well, and her poses are replicas of the most famous works. Hildegard Mason and George Murray, a clever team who make themselves popular in songs and chatter, will appear in a ludicrous skit called "Getting the Goat." Colonel Marc Diamond, a giddy gallant who has celebrated his eightieth birthday, and Mme. Grant, a blushing debutante who is considered old enough to be presented in society, she having reached the age of sweet seventy, will distinguish themselves in dances of the current vogue. Vinie Daly will return for next week, and Percy Bronson and Winnie Baldwin, also Ruth St. Denis, assisted by Ted Shawn and her company of dancers, will close their engagement.

The third concert of the series will take place at Pavilion Rink Thursday evening, May 11th, when another delightful program will be presented by the sixty-five artists of the Orchestra. The symphony will be Tschaiakowsky's Fourth, op. 36, and the other numbers will be the overture to "The Marriage of Figaro," by Mozart, and the Spanish Caprice, op. 34, by Rimsky-Korsakow. The soloist of the evening will be Emilio Meriz, concert-master of the Orchestra, his selection being the Concerto for Violin in G Minor, by Bruch. Seats will be ready at Sherman, Clay & Company's, a week from Monday.

Each child will also receive fruit, milk, sandwiches and other goodies, such as soda, popcorn crisps, and the like. From 10 o'clock in the morning until sunset there will be a continual round of fun. Four bands will furnish music, 300 children will render May Pole and other fancy dances, while a score of other talented amateurs will keep the program moving on the open-air stage. All the children need to bring is their eyes and their appetites. There will be sufficient food for all, and every variety of free entertainment.

Pantages.—Raul Periera, former court violinist to ex-King Manuel of Portugal, and his original stringed sextet, will be featured on the new eight-act bill opening at the Pantages on Sunday. A program of semi-classical and popular selections will be rendered by the musicians, all of whom are talented favorites with Pantages audiences. Rosie Lloyd, who from advance notices does not rely on the fame of her sisters, Alice and Marie, to win laurels on the vaudeville stage, is a special offering on the new bill. Rosie has the family Lloyd wink, wears a flock of London frocks, and sings Coster ditties with the assurance of an English music hall star. "A Holiday in Dixieland," with William Mastin, Virginia Richards and ten ebony hued singing and dancing fun-makers, is another pleasing attraction. Other good acts will be presented by Marion Munson, a protean actress, styled "the quickest woman in the world;" Pealson and Goldie, in a jolly little skit, "After the Dog Show;" Harry Tsuda, who flirts with death from the top of a lofty globe; and the seventh chapter of that interesting mystery serial, "The Iron Claw," will unravel another episode in the chase after the baffling laughing mask.

ENGAGEMENTS.

ORMART-GARAT.—Mr. and Mrs. Michael Ormart announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Marie Ormart, to Louis Garat, son of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Garat. Both families are prominently identified with the French society colony of San Francisco. Mr. Garat's family came here from Nevada, where they own extensive land properties, about three or four years ago.

WOODWARD-VOGLE.—The engagement of Miss Bessie Woodward and Dr. Samuel S. Vogle is announced. Miss Woodward is well known in the sorority circles of the University of California, from which she graduated not so long ago. The family home is now in Santa Rosa. Dr. Vogle is a surgeon of the Northwestern Pacific Railway, and is well known in San Francisco.

PENNOYER-MORGAN.—The announcement of the engagement of Paul Geddes Pennoyer of Berkeley and Miss Frances Morgan, daughter of Pierpont Morgan, the powerful financier, has caused a flutter of pleasurable excitement in society throughout California. The news is of especial interest, however, about the bay, where young Pennoyer and family are well known. No date has been set for the Pennoyer-Morgan wedding, but it will probably be this summer, and, needless to say, will be one of the most important society events of New York.

WEDDING ANNOUNCEMENTS.

BENJAMIN-SUSSMAN.—Miss Ray Benjamin and Leo Sussman will be married next Wednesday afternoon at the home of the bride's mother, Mrs. Rebecca Benjamin, on Laguna street. Three o'clock is the hour set for the ceremony, which will be witnessed by about seventy-five relatives and friends. Following their honeymoon the young couple will make their home in Mill Valley for the summer.

PISCHEL-FLETCHER.—The wedding of Miss Inez Pischel and Dr. Harold Fletcher will take place May 20th at the summer home of Dr. and Mrs. Kaspar Pischel in Ross Valley. The wedding will take place out of doors in the gardens of the Pischel home.

WEDDINGS.

GLEESON-BULOTTI.—The marriage of Miss Elizabeth Gleeson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Gleeson, and Charles Bulotti, took place Wednesday evening at 8:30 o'clock at St. Ignatius Catholic Church. The Rev. Father Cavanaugh read the ritual. After the ceremony there was a reception at the Gleeson home on Fulton street. About 200 or so guests were present. Mr. Bulotti and his bride will tour the Northwest, going on the Canadian Pacific on their honeymoon. They will reside on Fulton street, across from the Gleeson home.

WOOSTER-RICHARD.—The wedding of Miss Oroville Wooster and Walter L. Richard took place at the Church of St. Thomas in New York on Easter Sunday, Rev. Dr. Ernest Stires, the rector, officiating. The wedding ceremony was followed by a reception at the home of the bride's uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. C. Augustus Spreckels.

LUNCHEONS.

BRIDGES.—Mrs. Charles Bridges, wife of Captain Bridges, entertained recently at luncheon at her home at Fort Mason. After the repast the remainder of the afternoon was devoted to cards.

CROCKER.—Mr. and Mrs. William H. Crocker gave a luncheon at their home Sunday in compliment to Mr. and Mrs. Thomas DeWitt Cuyler of Philadelphia.

DARLING.—Mrs. Clara L. Darling was hostess Tuesday at a luncheon at the Francisca Club, assembling some of her friends in honor of Mrs. William Ashburner, the recently elected president of the Colonial Dames.

FALVEY.—Thursday Mrs. A. J. Falvey gave a large luncheon party at the Clift Hotel, with bridge afterwards.

KEYES.—Mrs. Alexander Keyes presided at a luncheon of fourteen covers on Thursday afternoon. The pleasurable affair was given at the hostess' home on Jackson street.

GERSTLE.—Mrs. Mark L. Gerstle was hostess at a luncheon complimentary to Mrs. Margaret Cameron Lewis, the authoress, who is in Berkeley visiting relatives.

HEARST.—Mrs. Phoebe A. Hearst was hostess Tuesday at a luncheon at the Hacienda at Pleasanton in honor of a number of the delegates who arrived Monday night on the "Suffrage Special."

HIGGINS.—Mrs. Marvin Higgins gave a luncheon party at the Francisca Club on Friday.

MAILLARD.—Miss Marion-Leigh Maillard was greeted by some of her close friends at the informal luncheon given Tuesday afternoon by Miss Kate Crocker at her home on Laguna street.

VITT.—R. C. Vitt will be host at a large luncheon party this afternoon, entertaining about a hundred guests. It will be in the ballroom of the Hotel St. Francis, and following the luncheon there will be a tea dance.

WHITWELL.—Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Whitwell of Boston gave a luncheon at the Burlingame Country Club Sunday, having about a dozen or so in all. The guests were friends of Mrs. William Howard, mother of Mrs. Whitwell, in whose honor the affair was given.

DINNERS.

BENTLEY.—Mr. and Mrs. Robert I. Bentley gave a dinner party Saturday evening at their home in Green street in honor of Miss Esther Bentley and her fiancé, Stanley Powell.

CURTIS.—A dinner followed by bridge provided much enjoyment for a group of friends of Surgeon and Mrs. Elmer E. Curtis Saturday evening. The party assembled at their home in Mare Island.

THE HOTEL PLAZA

HAMILTON.—Mr. and Mrs. Edward H. Hamilton were hosts at a handsome dinner party Sunday night at their home on Broadway, entertaining in compliment to Mr. and Mrs. Charles S. Young.

HENLEY.—Mr. and Mrs. Barclay Henley, Jr., presided at an informal dinner Monday night at their home. The affair was in honor of Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Meckle of Toronto, wealthy tourists who are here for a few weeks and are guests at the St. Francis.

MICHAELS.—Mr. and Mrs. Leopold Michaels were hosts at a delightful dinner Monday evening at the St. Francis Hotel.

SALVATORE.—Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Payne, Mrs. Edward Cudahy, Miss Amy Brewer and Gerald Cudahy were guests of Victor D. Salvatore at dinner Sunday evening at the Lodge.

TEAS.

BRADEN.—Mrs. E. B. Braden and Miss Winifred Braden gave two large bridge teas, one on Tuesday and the other on Wednesday. There were about a hundred guests at each party and a large number of them from San Francisco. The two affairs were given at the Braden home across the bay.

CHAMBERS.—Mrs. Edward Chambers will be hostess at a tea on May 6th in honor of Miss Osedas.

DARLING.—One of the pleasurable affairs of Friday was the informal tea at which Mrs. Clara L. Darling entertained in compliment to Miss Helen Beck of Philadelphia, who is visiting Mrs. Darling on Clay street. It took place at the Francisca Club.

FAGAN.—Mrs. Paul Fagan was hostess at a large tea at her home on Broderick street Tuesday afternoon.

HOTZ.—Lieutenant and Mrs. George Hotz have issued invitations to a tea which they will give this afternoon at their home at Fort Barry.

Between Two Worlds.

Eastern visitors who really get the lilt of life out here never fail to be impressed with the energy displayed by women of the smart set. In New York and one or two other big cities on the Atlantic seaboard the women turn everything in the way of routine work over to their social secretaries.

There are many women here who could afford such secretaries, but the number of those who have them is negligible. Mrs. Will Crocker, Mrs. Francis Carolan, Mrs. Eleanor Martin, Mrs. Phoebe Hearst, and at the most a dozen other women, employ secretaries, but the secretary plays a very different part than she does in the New York households of to-day.

At a luncheon given the other day in Burlingame for Mrs. Whitelaw Reid, some one told a story of a New York woman who was trying to climb into society by giving vast sums to fashionable charities in the hope of meeting society women on the various committees on which they were supposed to serve. At the end of a year of such service she was asked to renew her contributions, and her answer has gone the rounds of all the inner circles in New York.

"I've spent $30,000 this year for the pleasure of sitting at board meetings with a lot of hired secretaries, and it's too high a price to pay for the privilege!"

San Francisco society women do not send their secretaries to represent them on the various boards to which they belong, and contributions from climbers continue to be a source of revenue, though not one that boosts the exchequer to any very considerable degree. While there are several conspicuous examples of families that have used the Children's Hospital, and one or two other organizations, as first aids, and have earned their places on the boards by a flourishing use of stub pens on substantial checks, an analysis of the published accounts of all the organizations shows that only a tithe has accrued to them through the social ambitions of the wealthy.

New York charity is evidently the place where all good Western climbers go when they die!

The Perversity of Conversation.

Speaking of social secretaries, have you ever observed that conversation has a perverse way of steering its own course in the direction that perhaps the most fastidious hostess would not wish it to go. For example, all through this particular luncheon for Mrs. Whitelaw Reid, one of the guests insisted on telling stories in which social secretaries played the leading roles. Sometimes sympathetic, sometimes unpleasant parts were assigned to them by the raconteuse, who apparently forgot that Mrs. Whitelaw Reid's son, Ogden, several years ago married his mother's secretary.

The hostess tried in vain to turn the stream of conversation into another channel, but not until her entire cargo of stories was safely docked in port would the determined lady let any one else steer the conversation into other waters.

The hostess need not have fussed, for those who know Mrs. Whitelaw Reid intimately tell me that although at first the Reids were rather disappointed that their son, who might have married into a noble English family or in the bemillioned Knickerbocker set of New York, should choose a wage earning young woman, they gave in gracefully to his choice, and are very proud of the brilliant young woman.

Mrs. Ogden Reid was a college graduate and a young woman of very good family, who took a secretaryship with Mrs. Reid as just one step in the career of independence which she had mapped out for herself, and along came the scion of the house of Reid and knocked her future plans into a cocked matrimonial hat.

Charity Events Rule.

Outside of the innumerable claims which private affairs have made this week on the smart set there have been a dizzy lot of public duties and pleasures. Monday and Tuesday nights were given over to dansants, in which the various sets, town and country, military and civilian, joined in merry and successful endeavor to raise funds for worthy purposes.

On Wednesday, the town was converted into a rosebud garden of girls, the flower of the social sets going forth into the highways and byways, to pin, as it were, a boutonniere in the lapel of the coat of Sir San Francisco, that debonnaire gallant among cities, who can never say "nay" to a pretty woman and her cause.

All day long the women interested in buying shoes for the orphans in the care of the Catholic Humane Bureau acted as flower venders, and from their main depot took orders for potted palms and plants donated by the owners of the finest conservatories around the bay. The proceeds of the day have not yet been itemized, but the sum total will exceed the expectations of the most sanguine promoter of the flowery idea.

The hoofbeats of thoroughbreds sets the tempo for the end of the week. The horse show, which began this Thursday night, has come to be one of the annual events to which society looks forward with genuine interest. Some of the youngsters who are taking part do really remarkable stunts, and the daring feats of little Edna Taylor, the daughter of the Will Taylors, sets the pace for the sub-teen set. Mrs. Will Taylor never went in much for equestrian sports, Mrs. Gus Taylor having had all the family enthusiasm in that direction, but even she gave up riding several years ago, and it remained for little Edna to win a really conspicuous place in horsemanship.

Miss Elva De Pue was missed from the events in which she always scores. She was thrown from her horse while riding in the park last week, and sustained a painful injury to her foot, which will keep her in the house for some time. The Misses Marion Newhall, Jean Wheeler, Beatrice Nickel, Ruth Zeile, Kate Crocker, Ruth Perkins, Julia Van Fleet, Kate Brigham, Amelia Gordon and Gertrude Hopkins gave clever exhibitions of correct riding, and while their performances did not entail any daring feats that would thrill a "movie" audience, it was very pretty and graceful riding and much appreciated by the society people who made up the audience.

The horse show is scheduled to last through Saturday night (so is Toreador Will Tevis, Jr., but his mother fears he will break his neck, and has ordered him to cut out some of the realism of his stunt.) On Saturday night there will probably be no dancing following the show, as every one is planning to go to the Fine Arts ball on that night, and many of the parties that have been made up for the Horse Show will adjourn to the ball later in the evening.

What's in a Name?

The Theodore Freylinghuysens of New York recently came up from Santa Barbara, where they spent the winter, and were guests of the Will Crockers at New Place. Mrs. Freylinghuysen came up to town to do some shopping one afternoon, and introduced a new fad in the local shopping district. Instead of stopping to spell her name for the clerks from whom she made purchases, she expedited her business by handing them a card specially printed for shopping purposes.

Those who, like Mrs. Freylinghuysen, have names that have swallowed up most of the alphabet, will appreciate what a time-saver the card method is. Before her marriage to the New York and Tuxedo "multi," both as to money and name, Mrs. Freylinghuysen was Mrs. Le Grand Cannon. She tells a funny story about a woman who was invited to a week-end party at Newport to meet her, and thought that the hostess was inviting her to go to the Grand Canyon of the Colorado, and they talked at cross purposes over the telephone until finally they both got on the same current, and the prospective guest discovered that she was not being asked to meet "Nature's Grandest Wonder," as the folders call it, but a very charming specimen of the feminine gender.

Educational Smokes.

Mrs. Walter Hobart wears her cigarette case instead of carrying it. The case hangs from her wrist on a slender chain—and thereby also hangs a tale. Not long ago there was a convention of teachers in town, and a group of women from one of the up-State high schools went for luncheon to the St. Francis Hotel. The teachers had been intrusted with a fund collected by the pupils with which they were to buy a handsome wedding present for the woman who has been principal of the school for several years, and has endeared herself to every one.

One of the teachers, with an eye that has not been spoiled by squinting too much at text books, spotted Mrs. Hobart immediately as the smartest looking woman in the room, and she directed the glances of the other members of her party to the little gold "purse" hanging by a chain from her wrist.

They all decided that that would be just the sort of beautiful novelty for the pupils to give the principal, and the energetic young school "marm" who discovered Mrs. Hobart decided there could be no harm in sending a note over to her by one of the waiters, explaining the reason for their interest and asking where such a "purse" could be obtained. The note was about to be sent over when Mrs. Hobart opened the "purse" and drew forth a cigarette.

It would never do to present a retiring principal with a cigarette case, so the note was not delivered. But the teachers thought that it was such a good joke that they told the story.

The most colorful military social event since the visit of the Atlantic battleship fleet was the military ball at the St. Francis Tuesday night. Society, with its proverbial love of brass buttons, appeared in the full strength of its most alluring confectations. An additional touch of color was given to the regular martial ensemble by the presence of the California Grays. This event, the tea dance for the Canon Kip Mission on Monday, the preparations of various committees for coming events, whose headquarters are in the St. Francis, and a succession of private dances and teas have produced in the big hotel this week a picture of animation unusual even around Union Square. Among the hostesses were Mrs. Charles Templeton Crocker, Mrs. Frederick Kohl and Mrs. Robert Hays Smith, at a pretty dinner dance in the Rose Room last Saturday.

The children of the West Oakland Home will be assured of their playground for another year through the annual benefit for the Home. It will be a ball at the Hotel Oakland next Saturday evening, and will be one of the delightful events of the Easter week. The following prominent women will act as patronesses: Miss Grace Trevor, Mrs. Edward Marion Walsh, Mrs. J. F. Ackerman, Mrs. A. Schilling, Mrs. Thomas Crelling and Mrs. Daniel Easterbrook. Mrs. Daniel Webster is president of the Home, and the directors who are planning the ball are Mrs. H. Anderson, Mrs. E. J. Boyes, Mrs. J. W. Crockerton, Mrs. James Dunn, Mrs. James Ellison, Mrs. Richard Ely, Mrs. W. E. Fites, Mrs. Minna Gleason, Mrs. C. Gomertz, Mrs. A. F. Gimbal, Mrs. Louis Manning, Mrs. Ivy Murphy and Miss Elizabeth Smiley.

GREAT FUTURE FOR SAN FRANCISCO.

"So far as other ports on the Pacific Coast are concerned, San Francisco is the only one; it is a greater seaport than ever before, and its opportunities are tremendous." That is the view of President Ripley, president of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad, as expressed on his present visit to this city on one of his regular trips of inspection. In discussing plans for the future, President Ripley said the Santa Fe would not build any new extensions in California this year. Touching on the threatened big Eastern railroad strike, where the engineers demand an annual increase of $100,000,000 to their wages and the recognition of a basic eight hour day, he stated that such a strike would cost the company a great deal of money—perhaps necessitating the passing of several dividends, but the strike will not help the men, and the railroad managements are united in the position that the demands could not be consistently granted.

The Background of the War Zone

The German general staff must believe the capture of Verdun worth having even at the prescribed price set by the French of three Germans for one Frenchman, judging by the tenacity of the present attack. Should the Germans eventually win, the result of the contest will have lost its full force through the sacrifice paid in lives and in the length of time. The victory would lack all the brilliancy, elan and smashing conquest which marked the "double quick" conquest of Belgium and the initial dash on the road to Paris. It is of some interest to know that Field Marshal Count von Haeseler, the great German strategist, has been chief adviser to the Crown Prince of Germany, who is nominally in command of the attack. Leading publicists of Europe believe that the Prince was selected for this important and world spectacular attack, the strongest citadel in the western defense of France, for the express purpose of capturing that great stronghold and thereby gaining the world's limelight as the most successful general developed in the present war. To such worshippers of the War God as the German nation, such a victory would make him the national hero and the ideal superman to follow his father to the throne.

The shift of more than a corps of Russian war veterans to France, via Marseilles by steamer, is significant that both sides realize that the outcome of the war is to be determined on the western front. This was indicated in a measure when the Germans failed to reach Warsaw. Both sides are now bringing into the western lines every man available. The battle of Verdun appears to be preliminary to the big grapple in the finals.

The passage by the House of the government armor plate bill seems assured, and that means its enactment into law. The measure is a most wise one, if not exactly the kind of preparedness a private munitions trust would desire. The full independence of the United States must be preserved, and this implies that in its policies of war and peace it shall not be controlled in the least by powerful capitalistic interests concerned in the manufacture of army and navy supplies. The more that private profit can be divorced from war the better.

Announcement was made in Philadelphia this week that A. J. Drexel Biddle will offer 10,000 Philadelphia young men of the Drexel Biddle corps to President Wilson. The offer will be contingent on the refusal of Germany to accede to the demands of the United States. Biddle told of his plans for a citizens' army of 1,000,000 men. "Already in this city," he said, "there are 10,000 men enrolled in the citizens' army."

Russia would no doubt like very well to beat Britain to Bagdad, but the recent small victories of the British force which is trying to relieve Kut-el-Amara suggest reinforcements which may strengthen the campaign there. The great difficulty has been to provide an adequate supply of light draft vessels for transport on the Tigris, but probably the shortage is being gradually made up. If the British expedition can resist attack and keep itself ready for a brisk march, it will have a good chance after all to reach Bagdad before the Russians. The distance is not great, and if the grand duke's army continues its advance to the west, the Turkish forces on the Tigris will find a retreat prudent to avoid the risk of being cut off. Both to Britain and to Russia Bagdad is of special importance as the chief city on the road to the Persian gulf, one of Russia's possible warm water outlets. To England this region has long been an object of solicitude because it commands the route to India, and though Russia is just now an ally, it would be much pleasanter to have Mesopotamia occupied by British troops.

Quite as important as the war council of the allies for fixing upon a common military plan is the economic conference held in Paris recently. If the allies, now held together by a common peril, should be able to reconcile their acute conflicts of interest, such a program as is outlined might, in case they win the war, be a step toward the larger world organization which theorists have forecast. It would include, for example, common action on a multitude of business matters, even to the elimination of the loss involved in the transport of gold to meet trade balances and of the inconvenience due to the differences in the commercial laws of different countries. But in so far as the conference relates to tariffs, trade preferences, etc., to be continued after the war, it must be said that the moment is not propitious for action. A settled peace cannot come from tariffs favorable to the allies, "reasonable" to neutrals, and strongly discriminating against enemies. Moreover, just as the allies are bound to fight to the last ditch against German territorial aggression, so the central powers must resist to the end such an anti-German trade policy. But it is yet to be seen whether the allies can pool their interests, which are by no means identical.

“Cars may come and cars may go, but the “Olds” goes on forever”

SEVENTEEN years ago the first Oldsmobile was made; it ran and is running yet—Seventeen years hence the 1916 Oldsmobile will be running.

The Oldsmobile has always had a splendid reputation, now it has created a new standard in the Superlative Quality Light Car—the new requirement is for an automobile, fully equipped, weighing less than 2800 pounds, yet it must have power, speed, style and comfort.

The Oldsmobile stands alone in respect to Economy ▯ Reliability ▯ Ease ▯ Style

Do you know that the “Olds 43” will go one thousand miles on 50 gallons of gas? It will.

Do you know the “Olds 43” will save 36% on tires? It will because it's light.

Do you know any “Olds” and every “Olds” will outlast all other cars? They will because they have.

Can you ask more? No. Then drive the Oldsmobile.

STATE LINCOLN HIGHWAY ASSOCIATION TO MEET

San Francisco was designated as the Pacific terminus and New York as the Atlantic terminus by the large Eastern manufacturers who are back of the Lincoln Highway, and they designated a well defined good dirt road across the continent which is to be the shortest distance between the two great cities, and a route that would be used by local as well as transcontinental tourists the year round, and the difference in distance in actual mileage, of the great Highway and the railroads across the continent at the present time is but three miles, and as soon as certain changes and highways are improved, as the work is now well under way, this will be reduced by several hundred miles.

It was not the intention of the National Association originally to build roads outright, but to select the best satisfactory route, arouse interest along the great highway in all the towns, cities, counties and States, through which it passes, and mark the same with the Standard Road marker, which has been done in good shape as far west as Omaha.

One can readily see what this means for Northern California, and as Joseph E. Caine, State Consul for the Association in California, stated before a meeting at the Oakland Chamber of Commerce held Friday, "The Lincoln Highway means more to California than another transcontinental railroad, and as much, if not more, than the Panama Canal."

Henry B. Joy, President of the Packard Motor Car Co., is president of the Association and one of the leading workers, together with F. A. Seiberling, president Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co.; Carl G. Fisher, president Prest-o-Lite Co.; Roy D. Chapin, president Hudson Motor Car Co.; John N. Willys, of the Willys Overland Co., are among the list of founders and active directors of the National Association in charge of the work which has been carried on from Detroit, which is a long distance from the Highway.

Plans are now being made by Mr. Caine, State Consul, together with Robert Newton Lynch, manager of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce, and others to call a meeting of all the Consuls in California, as each small town, city and county, through which the Highway passes is represented by a Consul who looks after the affairs locally in behalf of the Association. It is the desire of Caine, Lynch and many others interested in this great undertaking to get these Consuls together and perfect a good, strong, active organization that will strive to make Northern California the Mecca for tourists, and establish San Francisco for all time as the terminus of this wonderful highway.

The Consuls along the Highway in California are as follows:

Truckee, John Fay.
Colfax, John M. Newman.
Auburn, J. A. Livingston.

THE NATION'S BUYING CAPACITY

The tremendous buying power of the country is well illustrated by the phenomenal increase in the number of cars and trucks in use in the United States since 1911. For that year a total of 677,000 was recorded which, during 1912, jumped to 1,010,483, a gain of 333,483. In 1913 the total was 1,253,875, or 243,393 more than were recorded as being in use during the preceding year. As shown by the 1914 and 1915 statistics mentioned above, the increase in the number of vehicles in use from 1911 to the end of 1915 is 1,- 746,788, or practically the total number of cars and trucks in use in this country a year ago. In other words, the gain in car and truck registrations during 1915 is almost as large as the total number in use at the end of 1911.

Taken in conjunction with the yearly production statistics, the registrations are specially significant. In 1911, American motor car and truck manufacturers produced 209,957 cars and trucks, their annual output increasing rapidly with each succeeding year. In 1912, a total of 378,261 vehicles left their factories, increasing to 450,000 in 1913, and for 1914 the figure of 515,000 given by the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce was held to be so conservative that it was from 5,000 to 15,000 below the actual production total for the year. The chamber estimated that 30,000 of the number given were commercial vehicles. During 1915 the same authority gives a total production of 892,618 cars and trucks, of which 842,249 were passenger cars and 50,369 were commercial vehicles. Over 200,000 freight carloads of motor cars were shipped during that year.

The total retail value of the cars and trucks built in the United States in 1915 was given as $691,778,950, of which $565,856,450 represented the passenger cars and $125,992,500 represented the commercial vehicles.

Eight States showed an increase in registrations in 1915 over 1914, this gain varying from 10,000 to 30,000 vehicles.

RECKLESS DRIVING IS "ASSAULT"

The court of appeals of Georgia has decided that a person who injures another by driving an automobile recklessly may be prosecuted by the State for assault and battery. Lawyers who have followed the case in which this decision was rendered say that if the injured party dies, the driver may be charged with murder. In the test case a motorist who ran into a buggy, injuring two women, was tried and convicted of assault. He was fined $250, and appealed. The court of appeals upheld his conviction.

Army Makes Run to Half-Moon Bay

As there has been a great deal of comment on the recent maneuvers of a company of U. S. Regulars in making a run to Halfmoon Bay from Fort Miley, S. F., in automobiles, and the News Letter's account having received especial commendation, we print an amplified story of the trip with some further details which were unobtainable at the time. That all matters connected with our country's defense are particularly timely is emphasized by the grave situation of this country in relation to Germany, to say nothing of the unsatisfactory condition of affairs beyond our southern border.

That the quick transportation of men and guns from one possible point of attack to another is recognized as an important factor in Coast defense by the U. S. Army was demonstrated April the ninth, when the Thirteenth Company of Coast Artillery, with a four and a half ton howitzer, made a run from Fort Miley to Halfmoon Bay entirely in automobiles. The California Automobile Reserve Corps, which is composed of a number of the leading auto firms, supplied the motor vehicles, while the officers and non-coms. of the Machine Gun Co., Fifth Inf. N. G. C., accompanied the column as observers and to obtain extra instruction and actual experience with the regular troops.

A 7-inch howitzer was sent to Halfmoon Bay from Ft. Miley in 3 hours on a powerful "Saurer" truck, and the artillerymen were taken from Miley to Halfmoon Bay in autos in one hour and fifty minutes, as the Automobile Reserve Corps

The truck carrying the cannon accomplished in three hours what it would ordinarily take twelve horses a day and a half to do, and the soldiers in less than two hours covered ground that would mean a severe two days' hike.

This was the first test given the newly formed Auto Reserve Corps, and Brigadier-General Wm. L. Sibert, commanding the Pacific Coast Artillery District, who accompanied the soldiers, pronounced the test an entire success, as also did Colonel Alfred M. Hunter, commanding the San Francisco coast defenses, and Captain H. D. Ryus, commander of the auto reserve corps, to whom much of the credit must be given for the perfect manner in which the experiment was conceived and executed.

The Thirteenth Company, 110 men strong, under command of Captain Jas. R. Pourie, and carrying full infantry field equipment, piled into thirty cars furnished by the Cadillac, Oldsmobile, Buick, Reo and Chalmers agencies, all of which hold membership in the corps, at Fort Miley, at 9 o'clock, and led by motorcycle policemen, started the dash to Halfmoon Bay. The Saurer truck, equipped with Goodrich solid tires, contributed by the International-Mack Corporation of San Francisco, had previously started its trip.

Accompanying the expedition were

Captain Marriott of the Machine Gun Co., and his non-commissioned officers in two Chalmers autos and a big 8-cylinder seven passenger King. This was the only National Guard detachment with the forces.

The run down was made through San Mateo and over the mountain road, which is exceptionally hilly, very winding and extremely rough in places. The Saurer truck, with its heavy cannon aboard, was overtaken on the summit of the hills between San Mateo and Halfmoon Bay. It had not made one stop for the entire trip, and reached Halfmoon Bay but half an hour after the flying squadron of automobiles had arrived there.

At Halfmoon Bay the soldiers threw up shelter tents and had a hot dinner; after an hour and a half rest, camp was broken and the return run was made along the shore road. Going and coming, not a single car "straggled," and the automobile corps proved to the satisfaction of Fort Miley officers that with its aid a portion of one day was all that was necessary to accomplish the same results that would obtain in about three days without motor transportation.

Thousands of automobilists and residents of different communities through which the soldiers passed cheered the dash, and American flags were displayed lavishly along the route.

Corps is made up of the agencies that entered cars, these agencies having signified their desire to aid the Federal Government in every possible way in its preparedness program. Later, it is planned to organize one company from each agency, so that large bodies of troops can be quickly transported to any point within striking distance of San Francisco.

In addition to General Sibert, Colonel Hunter and the officers of the Thirteenth Company, Major Sam Bottoms, Major Chas. H. Hilton, Captain H. H. Sheen and several other army officers were close observers of the work of the automobiles, and pronounced themselves as enthusiastic over the results of the test.

"The automobile reserve corps intends to work hand in hand with the regular army in any San Francisco defense scheme," said Commander Ryus at the conclusion of the run, "and I believe that the trip shows that, if the safety of San Francisco ever depends upon the rapidity with which artillery and troops can be sent to threatened points on the Coast, the corps is going to do a big part in safeguarding the city. To-day's test shows what a tremendous factor the motor car is going to be in any defense plans."

While the trip was accomplished without mishap of any kind, nevertheless the News Letter would take the liberty of suggesting to the authorities that, in face of accident, and to make the trip as much in accord with service conditions as possible, an auto ambulance corps accompany future expeditions of the kind.

Sergeant Charles Goff and the Traffic Officers under him are to be highly complimented for the efficient manner in which they handled the run and kept the road clear for the entire distance, a round trip of 76 miles. The following letter has been received by Captain Ryus from General Sibert:

Headquarters
Pacific Coast Artillery District
Fort Miley, Cal.

From: Major C. H. Hilton, C. A. C.

To: Capt. H. D. Ryus, Commanding California Division, Automobile Reserve Corps, San Francisco, Cal.

Subject: Commendation.

1. The Artillery District Commander, General Wm. L. Sibert, has directed me to convey to you and your associates his great appreciation of your successful efforts yesterday of transporting the 13th Company Coast Artillery Corps, and a 7-inch field howitzer to Halfmoon Bay and return.

2. The time made, one hour and fifty minutes for the company, and three hours and fifteen minutes for the gun, was highly satisfactory, and demonstrated that troops and guns may be moved into positions for defense under emergency conditions by automobile transportation in much shorter time than by any other, and thus their efficiency is increased to a large extent.

3. The promptness, speed and efficient manner in which the men and gun were handled yesterday without a mishap of any kind deserves special commendation, and the same is due all of those who through no slight voluntary contribution of time and material made the maneuver a success.

4. The lesson was good from a military standpoint, and much was learned. The General desires me to convey his best wishes for the continual success of your organization, and to state that he is ready at any time to assist in any way consistent and within his power.

Adjutant, Pacific Coast Artillery District.

ACCOUNT OF THE MANEUVERS

BY A MILITARY EXPERT

The recent maneuvers in which the First San Francisco Company of the California Automobile Reserve Corps successfully transported the 13th Company of the Coast Artillery Corps and one seven-inch field howitzer from Fort Miley to Halfmoon Bay and return, was the realization of a dream that has long been dear to the hearts of every officer of the Automobile Reserve Corps.

Four years ago, Captain Ryus, who is now in command of the Reserve Corps, moved a machine gun company from the Armory in Los Angeles to the hills in back of Oak Knoll. At this time, automobile transportation of troops had been thought of, but little had been done in regard to definite plans, tests or action. Then the European war broke out, and it was discovered that gasoline and the motorcar were about as important to successful movements as shot and shell. The recommendations which had been made four years before became interesting at this time, and the organization of the Automobile Reserve Corps was again put under way. This was not culminated until January of this year, at which time four companies were organized in Southern California and two started in San Francisco. At the present time, after the Halfmoon Bay test, there are four companies forming in San Francisco and one truck company will shortly be organized, thus giving a full squadron.

However, it remained for San Francisco successfully to demonstrate that the Motor Reserve is a valuable adjunct to the United States military forces. In this maneuver from Fort Miley to Halfmoon Bay the distance was covered by a Saurer truck carrying a four and a half ton howitzer in three hours. The troops were transported to this point in one hour and fifty minutes. It must be remembered that this distance of 38 miles could not possibly have been covered, under the old regime of mule and march, in less time than one day and a night. Also it must be remembered that under stress of march conditions the men would arrive at the point to be defended, fatigued and unable to go into efficient action. As a contrast, the men and the gun were landed in Halfmoon Bay inside of three hours in excellent condition, ready for any emergency.

The whole test merely goes to prove that 20th Century efficiency as it is so aptly represented by the automobile, is necessary in military actions and maneuvers. Commander Captain Ryus, President of the Oldsmobile Company of California, deserves the most hearty congratulations and the highest credit for making possible a maneuver of this nature. He has thoroughly interested General W. L. Sibert and his staff in charge of the Coast Artillery Corps, and has received from the General a most hearty commendation on the movement.

Several good lessons were learned during the trip to Halfmoon Bay regarding the handling of men, and while in this instance there was not a single hitch either in formation or pace, the next maneuver should undoubtedly develop a greater speed. At the present time, Captain Ryus is forming a complete Oldsmobile company, and hopes that the other dealers who participated in the Halfmoon Bay maneuver, will do likewise.

The fact that the initial maneuver was so successful promises great things for the future, and during the same movements of the army some very interesting tests are expected throughout the Bay district.

The truck which hauled the big $4\frac{1}{2}$ ton 7-inch howitzer from Fort Miley to Halfmoon Bay and return on Sunday last was a Saurer 5-ton standard stock chassis.

This truck is of the same size and type as furnished in great numbers to the English, French and Belgium Governments by the International Motor Company of New York, and is the oldest in the world, having been built by Adolphe Saurer, Arbon, Switzerland, for the past twenty years, and now built in five European countries, as well as America. The truck as built by the International Motor Company is identical in every particular with those manufactured in the various European plants, and all parts are interchangeable, this feature making it possible for the International Motor Company to sell the various European Governments over five million dollars worth of these trucks.

The Saurer truck is subsidized by the French Government, this subsidy permitting the French War Office to put over 1,400 of these trucks on the firing line when the French army was mobilized. There are approximately 4,000 Saurer trucks in the service of the French army at the present time, the American company still making monthly shipments. It may be recalled that some five years ago the Saurer truck crossed the continent from the Pacific to the Atlantic, carrying a $3\frac{1}{2}$ ton load, the trip being made without a hitch and no damage to the truck other than the breaking of 2 or 3 leaves in the front spring when the truck broke through a bridge over an irrigating ditch.

This truck carries a motor $4\frac{3}{8} \times 5\frac{1}{2}$, developing an A. L. A. M. rating of 30.6 horsepower. It has four speeds, forward and reverse, and the final drive is by means of side chains.

Europe does not favor the worm or internal gear drives on trucks above $3\frac{1}{2}$ tons capacity. The subsidy specifications of both the British and French War Offices prohibit the granting of the Government subsidy to other than chain drive trucks in the larger sizes.

The use of the Saurer 5-ton truck which carried the big howitzer to Halfmoon Bay was contributed by the International Mack Corporation, 2020 Van Ness avenue of this city.

GOODRICH TIRES SCORE AT THE MILITARY MANEUVERS

Mr. C. E. Cook, Coast manager for the B. F. Goodrich Rubber Company, expressed himself as much gratified with the success of Sunday's maneuvers from a tire expert's point of view. "The Goodrich Solid Tires on the Saurer truck gave a good account of themselves, as we expected they would do," said Mr. Cook. "We knew from past experience that our tires were perfectly capable of carrying a load of this sort over good deal worse roads than those encountered Sunday. As a matter of fact, our truck tires are being extensively used on motor trucks, not only on the European battlefields, but also in army operations in the pursuit of Villa. Sunday's demonstration is but another proof of the excellence of our "Barefoot" rubber.

TIRE SERVICE CAR.

The United States Rubber Company sent two men under R. J. Jones of the local branch to change tires on the run for transporting troops from Fort Miley to Halfmoon Bay. The duty of these men was looking after any tire trouble that might happen to any of the 50 cars that transported the troops.

They were very fortunate as to tire trouble, there being but four tire changes to be made on this trip, and as the men were very proficient in this work, it took but five minutes to change each tire. This enabled every car to keep in its proper position in the line; that is, after the tire change was made the car could return to its platoon.

Many compliments were paid the Rubber Company by the different automobile dealers conducting this, as to the speed that these tires were changed at, therefore causing no delay.

The Reo Truck was used by the U. S. Tire Company as its service car.

CHALMERS CARS WELL ADAPTED TO HILL WORK

Two Chalmers cars were used by the officers and the members of the Machine Gun Company, 5th Infantry, N. G. C., to transport part of this command on the movement made to Halfmoon Bay. Neither car nor tires gave trouble on the entire trip. The high speed motors of the Chalmers are most efficient in all contingencies, and the easy riding qualities of the car were commented upon by those who had the good fortune to make the trip in them. That these cars are particularly well adapted to California is shown by the fact that on the hills they can pick up "on the high" when stopped by obstructions or otherwise.

KING "8" MAKES A RECORD

A notable feature of the run to Halfmoon Bay with the regular troops from Fort Miley was the performance made by the seven-passenger King "8," which transported six of the non-commissioned officers of the Machine Gun Co., 5th Infantry, N. G. C., over the 76 mile run, ascending the three summits of the Coast Range over roads of all conditions, entirely on high speed. The car gave no trouble of any kind on the trip, and demonstrated its ability to "go and do" every task required of it. In view of the fact that it held its place in line and equaled the best performances on the trip of cars costing much larger sums, the results were particularly gratifying to the local representative of the King Motor Company.

Luxury Cars
With the Super-Six Motor

IN the Hudson Super-Six we are showing this season six luxurious bodies. Each is a masterpiece, built to emphasize the Super-Six supremacy.

The closed types are built by craftsmen of international repute. Every line and detail marks them aristocrats. Nothing could be more exquisite. Yet the Limousine and the Town Car are priced but $2500 at Detroit. And the Touring Sedan (illustrated) $1900.

Each embodies the greatest motor in the world—the patented Super-Six. It is 80% more efficient than other like-size motors. Though small and light, it delivers 76 horsepower, and has broken all stock-car records.

All this is due to lack of vibration. Friction and wear have been almost eliminated. You never knew such smoothness, such luxury of motion. You never saw such performance as you'll see when you come for a ride.

"The Killarney of California"

A trip to Half-Moon Bay and around the Spring Valley Lakes

By the Automobile Editor

Our friend from the East wanted to see something of California that would convey to his mind the most typical impression of the northern part of the State, and, with the business man's rush, had to see it right away and with only half a day for the trip. Being the auto editor, I was supposed to know all about roads and routes, so I was called upon to act as cicerone. As we wanted to do things in style, I cast about for a car which would supplement the good impression that we hoped the scenery would make, and I naturally bethought myself of the Pierce-Arrow. The telephone was put to work, and we got hold of Mr. Banta, the genial assistant to Mr. F. W. Culberson, Pacific Coast manager of the Pierce-Arrow Sales Co. No, the Pierce-Arrow did not even have a demonstrating car available; in fact, the chief's private car had been snapped up by an impatient purchaser, so great had been the recent demand; but Mr. Banta would be glad to come along and bring his own light Six, as he did not want an Eastern member of a Pierce-Arrow family to be disappointed. You say: "Why not have hired a car?" Well, that is not done in the best newspaper circles, at least not this year.

Shall I confess it? The trip was made on the last rainy day, nor in the circumstances could it be postponed; but if any one has an aesthetic sense he will realize that the green and purple foothills of the peninsula look their very best in a gray haze which softens the tones and throws a glamor of mystery, like the veil of a pretty woman, over all it reveals and half conceals. The effect, so to speak, is of suggestion rather than statement, surely the crux of art.

We got off to a fairly early start, and went down the county road, turning off at Redwood, and were soon passing the beautiful links of the Menlo Country Club. Here we stopped and played nine holes of golf—most golfers are motor enthusiasts—and then skipped to the nineteenth hole, where, after the usual libations and reminiscences, we set out again for Halfmoon Bay via the Canada road and Burns's store, and although there were intermittent showers the road held out well, and we arrived at the beautiful crescent shaped bay at two-thirty, rather sharpset for luncheon. Fortunately we struck a French Hotel, whose proprietor had every sympathy for irregular hours, and did not have the Puritan obsession of regularity so common in some parts of the country, especially where our visitor came from. A couple of chickens were lynched or stood up against a wall and shot forthwith, and before we finished cleaning up, the genial host announced that, "Messieurs et Mesdames were served."

And then the part of the trip that particularly I wanted to show the visitor commenced. First we passed seemingly thousands and thousands of acres of artichokes, which are infinitely more romantic than cabbages or turnips, or any of the commonplace northern vegetables. Do they not call up visions of full-bosomed peasants with Madonna faces and Carmen temperaments "somewhere in Italy." While cabbages may be more practical as a mere matter of food supply, yet there is no suggestion about them of poetry or picturesqueness, nor anything but the drab recital of every-day life which we all try to get away from, whether by means of a story, a play, a drink, or even the movies. So then on to the beautiful chain of lakes which constitutes the water system of the Spring Valley. These lakes, I am afraid, are not sufficiently appreciated by the local residents, but our Eastern friend was enthusiastic about them and the surrounding country. "Do you know," he said, "that if this country was adjacent to New York, you would have one million people settling here within a year, or as soon as their leases elsewhere expired." "Yes," said the chauffeur, who had been listening eagerly, and who had recently arrived from Southern California; "if this were near Los Angeles, there would be two million lots laid out and sold inside of a year of the time that it would take to put out the publicity."

I suppose that we are perhaps too near the beauty of our countryside on both sides of the bay really to appreciate it; therefore I do not think that I am expatiating on the obvious when I say that the beautiful and well known Windermere Lake country of England—which Wordsworth sung; the Scottish lakes and the Killarney region in Ireland, may well be compared to our own minor lake country within half an hour's ride of our civic center. Our gentlemanly German photographer tells the rest of the story by means of the camera's plates, and much credit to the representative of this nation—which you must admit is efficient, however your sympathies lie, and I never concealed mine—for the painstaking and patient manner in which he waited between showers and gusts of wind. I still hear in my dreams his words of admonition: "Now, all keep still, and I will vatch the vind." So often did we hear this request and promise, that "vatching the vind" became the "vatchvord" of the trip.

One of the Spring Valley Lakes in San Mateo County, comparable in beauty to many of the famed European Lake Regions

By the way, I have heard somewhere that there are Fords and automobiles. Well, as the zenith to the Ford nadir it may be said: "There are Pierce-Arrows, automobiles and Fords."

Not a little of the satisfaction of the trip arose from the efficiency and velvety grip on the rain drenched asphalt displayed by the B. F. Goodrich Co.'s Silvertown Cord Tires.

HINTS TO NEW DRIVERS.

Take your time during your first month of driving, keep cool, and have a reason for everything you do, and above all, think—do not forget it, think—you will get along all right.

"Know what each pedal is for, know what each button will do, but be sure about it, and do not lose your head. Then you will not get into any trouble.

Early morning is the best time to learn the rudiments of driving. Go slowly and keep to the right. Get in the habit of watching for street cars both on the street you are driving and on the cross streets.

After a short period, when you feel satisfied you have mastered the elementary things, drive later in the day when the traffic is heavy. But be careful. This will accustom you to crowds. During the learning period drive slowly. Do not speed up. Most of the trouble comes from driving too fast.

Find out all about your car and treat it with consideration. Watch lubrication. You do not go without food for several days, nor should you allow your car too be without sufficient oil and water.

And remember your car is a piece of machinery. It is not infallible. Do not expect the impossible of it.

Most Marvelous Road Record in Motor Car History

The car used was a regular stock Touring Car, Model D 6-45, which sells on the Coast at $1170
All former record holders were much larger and higher priced cars.

Another Remarkable Demonstration of Buick Speed, Power, Endurance and Reliability

The extraordinary time made by the Buick Six up the long hard grades, over rough mountain passes, fording streams and racing over miles of desolate desert in its intercity dash was no surprise to us. We knew that the Buick valve in head motor was capable of driving the car at a continued speed of more than sixty miles per hour when called upon. We also knew that the Buick chassis, notwithstanding the continued heavy hammering over rough roads at unusual speed, would be in the same perfect condition at the finish as at the start. By this remarkable performance we have demonstrated to the public the superiority of Buick construction.

Not a Mishap on the Entire Sensational Run

LIGHT MOTOR TRUCKS FOR MACHINE GUNS

Mars, after charioting around for thousands of years directing mankind's conflicts, has drawn on goggles, grasped the wheel and roared for more gasoline and speed.

Mars has gone a-motoring.

Were Sheridan's famous ride to be made to-morrow, the celebrated General would call for his racing car. For the motor car is the one new thing under the sun in warfare which the European war has developed. Even our own affair in Mexico was held up just long enough to meagerly equip the expedition with provision trucks. Press despatches almost daily contain accounts of the utility of both the touring and commercial car.

The important part the motor car plays in warfare is pointedly illustrated in the above picture of the KisselKar Six-42. In this case, members of the 32d Company, Coast Artillery Corps, Fort Baker, Cal., in service uniform, are shown in the act of being transferred to the front with a machine gun ready for action.

In the general movement for preparedness, the motor car has found a fixed place. It is absolutely indispensable. Furthermore, from one end of the country to the other, country-circling military roads are being advocated to increase the efficiency of the automobile. History records the fact that it was the lowly taxicab and good roads that saved Paris from the smash the Germans directed towards it in the early days of the present war.

The value of the motor car in preparedness is recognized to the extent that the government is contemplating a census to be used in war emergencies. Meantime, the mental attitude of America is changing, too, and preparedness is changing from political to educational.

J. A. CANNON BECOMES CHIEF OF WHITE STAR SALES STAFF

Significant news in the national development of the White Star Refining Company's products is announced by President H. B. Earhart in the appointment of J. A. Cannon as sales manager.

Mr. Cannon comes from Cleveland, where he was for several years sales manager of the National Refining Company. Mr. Cannon is a veteran of the business, and is known to every oil distributor of note throughout the country.

Mr. Cannon is favorably known as an able student of oil trade conditions, and as a frequent and valuable contributor to the technical journals.

Mr. Cannon has centered his activities on lubricating oils, and as an expert in the manufacture and in application of these oils his advice has been much sought after. He has specialized particularly during his career in trying to establish positive uniform tests by which the quality of oil may be judged. In this connection he has initiated many important innovations in the industry. For instance, in collaboration with Lovibond, the wellknown British laboratory, he worked out a system of color glasses which are now accepted for general use throughout the oil industry.

In connection with his other duties Mr. Cannon will collaborate with Mr. E. A. Scheu in developing more intensively the distribution of White Star Extra Quality Motor Oil, which, on account of its exclusive use by the Ford Motor Company and its various branches and service stations, has met with a remarkable, universal demand throughout the country.

Buick Stock Car Breaks Los Angeles—San Francisco Record

Also World's Inter-City Time for Distance

Only the breaking of a brake rod, which caused the driver of a Buick automobile between Los Angeles and San Francisco to slow up, prevented it from cutting the time between the two cities half an hour or more from the record of ten hours forty-seven minutes made on Tuesday last by an ordinary stock car, and, incidentally, established a world's record for inter-city travel at the distance.

This tells the story of how much closer Los Angeles has been brought to San Francisco by the modern motor car, and how, for the second time within a year, gasoline has triumphed over steam by besting the time of "The Lark," the crack Southern Pacific train, between the two cities.

To a 1916 Buick six-cylinder touring car go the laurels for setting the fastest pace at which man has ever traveled on this inter-city run, for in setting this mark the Buick cut 1 hour and 23 minutes from the automobile record established last June, and reached here some three hours ahead of "The Lark's" scheduled running time.

In this remarkable run the Buick covered 457 miles at an average speed of 43.6 miles an hour, and despite this fast clip for over ten hours arrived here "humming" as perfectly as at the start, and was not stopped once for a tire change. Certainly a tribute to the development of automobile engineering principles.

The start was made from Los Angeles on Monday night at 8 o'clock with Joe Nikrent at the wheel and with Fred Nikrent and George Daniels as passengers. Joe Nikrent drove the car to Fresno, 235 miles, without leaving the wheel, in 6 hours and 5 minutes. At Fresno, Earl Jackson joined the party and acted as pilot into San Francisco, arriving at Guerrero and Market streets, the official end of the inter-city record run, at 6:47 Tuesday morning. Jackson's time for the 222 miles he drove was 4 hours and 42 minutes. He could doubtless have cut this time close to 30 minutes had he cared to take chances from Redwood City into San Francisco.

At Redwood City Jackson had the Buick bowling along at about 60 miles an hour when he suddenly observed the dangerous sink in the State Highway which has been causing motorists much annoyance. He pulled on his brakes suddenly and must have snapped the brake rods, for the car kept moving rapidly and he hit the "gully" at about 50 miles an hour, nearly throwing the two men in the tonneau out of the car. From then on Jackson cut down his pace materially. He knew he had the record and took no chances of running into anything that might cross his path along the road. As a result, he pulled up to the finishing point more like a driver of an ordinary touring car than a record breaker.

The Buick used to make the trip was a regulation stock car, the smallest type turned out by the Buick factory this year. It was stripped of the fenders and top. But one extra tire was carried, and this was never unstrapped from the rear end.

Charles S. Howard, head of the Howard Automobile Company, California distributor of the Buick line, and who won several trophies with the Buick cars in the early days of automobile racing on the Coast, picked up the record-breakers at San Mateo and piloted them into the city.

Quite naturally he was most enthusiastic over the splendid record made by the car, and said the performance easily demonstrates the remarkable strides made in automobile construction within the past few years. "Bob" Thompson, Howard's chief aid, was also at the finish, and, like Howard, was as proud as a peacock over the fine showing of the car.

KisselKar Truck

CHASSIS PRICE
$1250.00

3/4 TO 1 TON CAPACITY

A determination to specialize in the building of this size of truck in greatly increased quantities has made possible a chassis price of $1250, a figure that will surprise, most of all, experienced engineers who know Kissel quality.

It will surprise you when you see the truck itself, when you examine its perfect worm drive rear axle, its exclusive motor, its strong, simple, accessible, economical and long life features. You will then readily agree that it is the best buy on the motor truck market.

Hundreds of thousands of dollars have been thrown away by experimenting with motor vehicles produced by obscure or experimental manufacturers.

Therefore the service reputation of the truck and the responsibility of its manufacturers should be an important concern with every buyer.

"How long has this make of truck been on the market?" "What kind of service has it given?" "Is it manufactured or merely assembled?" "How strong is the concern behind it?" "How well do they stand in the industrial world?"

Those are things you want to know—because it will save you much money and trouble if you know them.

KisselKar Trucks qualify in every test of truck stability, service and satisfaction. The Kissel Motor Car Company qualifies in integrity, ability and experience.

There are seven sizes of KisselKar Trucks, the latest model being the new 3/4 to 1 ton which, compared point by point with any other vehicle of its size, is unquestionably superior.

OAKLAND MOTOR POWER SHOW OPENS TO RECORD ATTENDANCE.

The Pacific Motor Power Show, which opened in the Oakland Auditorium last Tuesday night, featured one of the most complete displays of motor vehicles ever held in this country. The exhibit, which included every type of motor driven vehicle, attracted a record breaking attendance both of Oakland and San Francisco motor enthusiasts. With the opening of this event, the transbay city has taken the lead in the holding of big automobile shows, as well as an automobile manufacturing center.

The show will close May 6th. Oakland dealers and men interested in the Lincoln highway, who have promoted the show, have made arrangements for a series of interesting programs for the benefit of the automobile enthusiasts. Special days have been set aside for the State Automobile Association and other good roads associations of the coast, and it is planned to give a series of demonstrations of the various types of motor vehicles as a feature of the show.

Motor clubs and highway officials from all parts of the United States sent messages for the opening of the show, while the Oakland city officials took an active part in the opening ceremonies.

FOOT PASSENGERS MUST TAKE CARE OF THEMSELVES

New York's Court of Appeals has decided that a man does not exercise ordinary care without first looking to see if the way is clear. For this reason the court has reversed a verdict against an express company, one of whose automobiles knocked down a pedestrian while he was sauntering along with his coat collar turned up and his hat pulled down over his eyes. In the eyes of the law "ordinary care" means more than merely looking once when starting to cross a busy thoroughfare in the middle of the block, as far too many pedestrians persist in doing, is not to exercise ordinary care. Neither does the pedestrian exercise ordinary care when he takes the nine hundred and ninety-nine other chances he does every day. Ordinary care sounds simple enough, but it means a lot, and the law should make its observance obligatory instead of optional on pedestrians quite as much as upon drivers of vehicles. As it is now, the general opinion is that Providence, the law and the driver must all look out for the pedestrian who does not feel that it is incumbent upon him to look out for himself in any way whatsoever.

A Sensible Car That Economizes and Endures

3400 R. P. M. CHALMERS

The backbone and mettle of a motor car, after all, can only be shown up on country roads.

The new 3400 r. p. m. Chalmers, by facing all kinds of conditions on all kinds of roads without whimper, apology or flinching, has proved that she's got the stuff in her.

She has proved that she is no mere citified, boulevard performer; for no car on earth of her price or size has ever gone about its business everywhere with her energy, endurance, strength and spirit.

Her conquest of hills and rut-riven roads is the talk of every county seat. She has climbed hills on high gear and pulled through country roads on "high," where conditions were so bad that the running boards dragged.

These are two of the reasons why the 3400 r. p. m. Chalmers is such a sensible car for the farmer to buy. She does not boast of fantastic records of performance made by a tuned-up, doctored-up, professional-driven car on the race track. Her achievements have all been recorded with ordinary drivers at the wheel and ordinary roads beneath her tires.

Owners throughout the country have driven her over roads on which they admitted it was a shame to drive any car, and she has made amazingly good.

The 3400 revolutions per minute of her engine, recorded without skipping and with absolute safety, prove tremendous engine strength and precision.

Long engine-life and high engine-speed have always been twin features of the most successful engines of all kinds. 3400 r. p. m. means long life because it reduces side thrust of the crankshaft to the minimum, and side-thrust means wear and tear.

The 3400 r. p. m. Chalmers is a sturdy, long-lived piece of machinery, built not only to endure, but to economize.

You get 18 miles of light-footed going out of every gallon of gas. You add many miles to the life of your tires because of the smooth velocity with which her engine delivers might.

The same throbless, fretless engine-action, whether you travel at the rate of 3 or 60 miles an hour, whether one or five are aboard, means riding comfort that springs, good leather and 9-inch cushions only partially explain—riding comfort that has never been dreamed of before in a $1090 car.

Her pick-up responds with the same velvety obedience in the Dakotas as on Michigan boulevard. She economizes with fuel over Kansas gumbo, just as on Fifth avenue.

From every angle, you'll find the 3400 r. p. m. Chalmers a sensible, practical, value-delivering car to own and drive.

Drop in and see her at your Chalmers dealer's the next time you go to town.

One look—one ride—and you'll realize why she's cast her spell over 100,000,000 Americans.

GREAT DEMAND FOR MODERN ELECTRIC CO.'S PISTON RINGS

The Modern Electric & Machine Co., of Indianapolis, Indiana, are working night and day to supply the demand for their R & M Conform piston rings. These rings were developed and patented by Messrs. Ransdall & Meyer, after years of experimenting and study. The rings consist of three parts, a bull ring and two conform rings made of a special analysis a few points softer than the cylinder wall. The Bull ring is "V" shaped. The two conform rings taper so as to ride on the bull ring. This arrangement not only enables the conform rings to be carried out by the bull ring pressure, but also by the pressure of the combustion. As the ring is softer than the cylinder wall, there is absolutely no danger of scoring the cylinder by its use. The inventors claim that as the construction of the ring is mechanically right, its use results in uniform high pressure, and complete combustion, so that every particle of gas used makes power. It reduces the gasoline and lubrication expense. The ring also prevents to a great extent the formation of carbon.

The Modern Electric & Machine Co., who are the manufacturers of the R & M Conform piston rings, have just recently taken over the sale of their ring, which was formerly handled by the Superior Auto Parts Co. The officers of the Modern Electric & Machine Co. are T. A. Meyer, President and General Manager; L. H. Knue, Secretary and Treasurer; H. W. Ransdall, Vice-President and Experimental Engineer.

Mr. Meyers says: "We are planning an extensive selling campaign for the 1916 season, and are prepared to enlarge our plant to take care of all orders. Our rings are made in all sizes, and for all makes of cars, and a large stock of the various sizes are on hand at all times. We are also having a great demand for our piston which is made of maluminum. Maluminum is an aluminum alloy of great tensile strength, which gives the pistons great wearing qualities and lessens the weight about 35 per cent of that of the standard cast iron pistons. This great reduction in weight reduces the inertia forces about 65 per cent. With this great reduction of vibratory forces, the results and benefits as shown by actual use are, briefly, elimination of vibration, noise and wear and tear of bearings.

Higher efficiency is developed by the engine with less consumption of gasoline and oil. The motor has a quicker pick-up, more speed, and is more easily cranked."

What a Difference! THAT'S what I used to be, BUT LOOK Today

Today, nearly down and out, NO PEP, no enthusiasm, just bum tired, and the booze has claimed my end. MIGHTY FEW have the life or energy if soused with alcohol. Many today think they are strong and worthy, BUT is it so? No, "old chap," you have lost confidence in yourself. The shame of self is before the one who imbibes the OLD STUFF.

The body, as you know, is composed of MILLIONS of cells. Why not keep them wholesome and strong? Booze makes these cells weak and inactive—in many cases totally dead. The power to run the human machine recedes and gets lower every day. But the man who drinks thinks different: it is only when the jolt comes that the conscious mind awakens. As a rule, it's too late. Thousands today are physically weak from their own folly, yet foolish enough to think they can deceive NATURE. Be honest with yourself, IT'S IMPOSSIBLE to deceive the GOOD within nature.

Don't be the FIFTY PER CENT DEFICIENT MAN. Wake up to yourself, NOW—TODAY. Health is the MOTHER OF SUCCESS. Without health what are you? Without BOOZE you can drive that brain power into every success, bring enthusiasm and more happiness than ever before—IT'S WORTH WHILE.

U. S. STEEL MAKES RECORD EARNINGS.

All previous records for earnings of the United States Steel Corporation were surpassed in the first quarter of the present year, according to the detailed statement of the directors. They declared quarterly dividends of 1 1/4 per cent on the common stock and 1 3/4 on the preferred. Total earnings for the first quarter of the year amounted to $60,713,624; net income, $51,218,559, and surplus $32,854,171. These figures compare with the previous high record made in the quarter immediately preceding of $51,232,788 in earnings, $40,853,113 in net income, and $23,300,692 in surplus. The most remarkable feature of the statement was the steady rise in monthly earnings with the progress of the quarterly period. For January, earnings amounted to $18,794,912, swelling to $19,196,396 for the shorter month of February, and amounting to $22,722,316 in March. The balance for the quarter, after liberal allowances for depreciations, payments applicable to the sinking fund and other outstanding bonds, amounted to $45,512,872, whereas a year ago there remained a balance of only $915,058.

The price of raw sugar continues to climb, and forecasts are made that it will reach 8 cents. As the season progresses, the Cuban apparent shortage is growing, and the refiners now recognize that the price must go to a point where consumption in this country will be curtailed, for there is not enough sugar to go around. The Hawaiian crop, while normal in quantity, is late in reaching market on account of the wet winter. This is fortunate for the Hawaiian plantations, as their sugar has been held back while Cuban raws were coming into the market. The result is that only 20 per cent of the Hawaiian crop has been marketed.

Further increases in operating revenues and in net income are shown in the Southern Pacific Company's report of operations for March, 1916, the figures in the report being the largest in the history of the corporation. Gross operating revenue showed an increase over March, 1915, of nearly two million dollars and the net income, after taxes, gained $834,323.

San Francisco shipyards lead the country in the gross tonnage of vessels they have under construction, according to a compilation just made. At the Union Iron Works, the United Engineering Works and the Moore & Scott Iron Works are being turned out twenty-five vessels of various kinds, with a total gross tonnage of 243,478.

Treasury officials estimate the income tax now being collected will reach $106,000,000, or $25,000,000 more than a year ago.

"Come right on in, Sam," the farmer called out. "He won't hurt you. You know a barking dog never bites." "Sure, boss, Ah knows dat," replied the cautious colored man, "but Ah don't know jes' how soon he's goin' to stop barkin'."—Marine Journal.

Home Industry

INSURANCE

The California Industrial Accident Commission has ruled that where the injury is permanent in nature—i. e., incurable—the temporary increase or decrease in earnings need not be considered. This is so even where the injured employee continues to earn his wages following the accident in an amount equal to or in excess of his former earnings. There must, however, be shown an incurable injury and an average impairment of earning power to last for the rest of the employee's life. It must not be assumed that an injured employee will remain in the same employment always, and if by reason of permanent injury or disfigurement he is handicapped in seeking other employment or exercising his physical powers to the utmost, compensation should be awarded for this loss of earning capacity.

The industrial Accident Commission has just issued figures giving the number of deaths in the industries of California during 1915, as compared with statistics for 1914. In 1914 there were six hundred and ninety-one workers killed as against five thirty-three in 1915. The commission credits this effective work in behalf of "Safety First" to the cordial support from employers and employees, the public generally and the press. That this reduction comes as the result of careful planning is shown by the decrease in the main industries. It is hoped that a handsome reduction will be shown for each succeeding year. The aim is that no preventable death shall take place.

—The Irish Republic got as far as designing a flag, anyway.

—San Francisco is a very artistic town—if the price is not too high.

—It is a lonesome and benighted State that hasn't a favorite son for president.

—Corruption never showed its hand more openly or shamelessly than in its opposition to Brandeis.

—Now that the preservers have preserved the Palace of Fine Arts, let them preserve silence for awhile.

—The town should thank Schmitz for giving it a good laugh by demanding the recall of Mayor Rolph.

—Isn't it about time for the war prophets to begin predicting about next autumn's "drive" and winter operations?

—Hetty Green, desperately ill, was cured by a hot toddy. That proves her human, but it bars her from the W. C. T. U.

—Roosevelt is in great fear that the United States will become Chinafied; but his greatest fear is that it will not consent to become Teddified.

—Automobile man ran his car into a safety station, yet paradoxically enough, he wasn't thinking of safety first or he wouldn't have done it.

—"Well," says the shade of Shakespeare, with a sigh, "they're about through with these celebrations, and I can rest for another hundred years."

—Mechanics building United States submarines have quit work. If the new divers are anything like a lot of the old ones they will follow the example of their builders.

—A familiar sight on the Marin ferry boats is the man in khaki with his hands several inches apart telling how big the biggest fish was. Is the man a liar? Yes, generally he is.

—The medical examiners of the United States Marine Corps say that a man is taller in the morning than in the evening. This information having been imparted to an anxious and eager world, it can resume its task of making war and chasing Villa and battling for baseball pennants and trying to keep Roosevelt from getting back on the throne.

—Oakland man sued for a divorce because, although he was earning but $125 a month, his wife insisted that he buy her $50 hats. Wife-beating is a vicious thing—except sometimes.

—Rubber has gone to so high a price that women in Germany cannot afford garters. Never mind—when things grow worse they will not be able to afford stockings, then they won't need the garters.

—A daily paper ponderously remarks that the "League to Enforce Peace" gives promise of great usefulness after the present war. It certainly has a slim chance now to make itself useful.

—Movie actress, hit by a stream of water directed by Charlie Chaplin, and knocked unconscious, has been awarded $67.57 damages. It would take Chaplin about a quarter of a second to earn that much.

—Records of early days in San Francisco, unearthed recently, show that it cost $43,000 to pave one block of street. It is evident that the little "bit on the side" for interested parties prevailed then as it does now.

—Secretary Lansing says the present war will bring about many changes in international law. But one international law is as good as another so long as no more attention is paid to them than has been paid during the present conflict.

—Oregon man, after spending a dime in postage promoting his own boom for the presidency, backed out. Bet a dollar he is a prohibitionist—one of that tribe that becomes scared to death after the expense of anything mounts over a jitney.

—The police judges, according to their decision in gambling cases that come before them, seem to have decided that playing cards or other games of chance for money is not gambling—especially when indulged in by those who control blocks of votes.

—Two boys confess to having stolen forty automobiles in the past six weeks, running each one until the gasoline was exhausted, then abandoning it. That's enough to make them heroes among the sob sisters, who will not only want probation for them, but advocate a pension.

—President Wilson shook hands with ten thousand persons at various receptions last week. It is a silly country, waste of energy, and the first president that puts a stop to it will earn fame—and the dislike of a lot of people who like to brag that they shook hands with the president, b'gosh.

—Vacation pay was demanded the other day for two rig employees who have been dead for months. They didn't ask for it themselves, being indifferent about the matter, but they had left behind to guard their interests on this raised quite a fuss about it. It is cheering to record the fact that it wasn't paid.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

LOS BANDERILLOS.

—Bradley in the Chicago Daily News.

Is Verdun destined to pay off in a large degree the war debt of Europe? If precedent in like wars still prevail, it is on the books that this great fortress of France and the natural attractions of forests, water courses and rolling fields in which it centers will become a magnet after the war which will draw a hegebra of visitors to that historical spot as did the plain at Waterloo, where the imperial ambitions and power of Napoleon became dust. It is of record that following that tremendous historical spectacle the modern fashion of traveling over Europe was instituted. Naturally the first visitors were those who visited the battle ground to satisfy their wonder and curiosity. Many of these were English, eager to see the spot that crowned so gloriously their troops under Wellington. Being in Belgium, and at the threshold of France, they visited Paris to see the Tuilleries and the quarters and background of the dreaded Napoleon. Eventually with the wealth that developed, the courses of these tours were extended into Egypt and the Orient, and fed later with ever increasing throngs from America. Hundreds of millions of dollars have been spilled over Europe by American visitors. After peace is declared, the impatiently waiting hotel managers, past masters in captivity, will spread their nets so cleverly that the old time trade will return, and the "thousand new American millionaires" made by the "war babies" and "war trade" will lead the procession. Paris, after her defeat at Waterloo, was resourceful enough to make the enemy and other nations of the world contribute to her financial rehabilitation by making that city the most beautiful and ostensibly "wicked" city on the Continent. Practically all travelers on a run over to Europe "for a breathing spell," considers the air about the Parisian cafes, theatres and Bohemian haunts as absolutely "necessary for understanding these foreigners." And the payment is in proportion. In vain do the hotel keeper, the real estate dealer and the railroad agent of this country shout "See America First." "Nothing doing till I see Verdun—and Paris," is the reply.

Entertainment is the magnet that draws the patronage of the wealthy these days; comfort, service and entertainment, and the hosts of the hotels dotting Europe are magicians in providing the kinds of entertainment that stirs the sluggish nerves of the most blase. Verdun and its historic battlefield will be duly inspected, and then will begin the mad race of the touring American visitors for the old and the new delights provided by the profusely smiling and bowing maitre d'hotel, standing before each inviting establishment in Paris, Berlin, Vienna, Budapest and Cairo. However spent of the disbursements will be simply returns of the money spent so lavishly here in the past two years for munitions of war.

SOUND COLONIZATION SCHEME Never in the history of California has such a concerted movement from all parts of the State been fixed on the problem of breaking up her big tracts of idle lands and dividing them among settlers of thrifty character. Railroads, steamship lines, bankers, land magnates, county and municipal organizations, business men, newspapers, tourist associations, and the irrepressible land agent are all putting their shoulder to the wheel in an effort to boost this new scheme of land settlement to success. Now comes a new impulse in the movement through a co-operative study by the State Rural Credits and Land Colonization Commission, University of California and Commonwealth Club for the purpose of securing an accurate understanding of the present situation in this State with reference to land settlement and the influences affecting rural development; further for supplying a definite basis of fact for any legislation on this subject that may be recommended to the next legislature. A thorough field investigation of land and irrigation of the State will be instituted, and very likely stretch the gathering of the desired data through the present year.

The plan proposed will work effectively for efficiency and eventual economy, and is a gainer of time in the end, for out of it will come a more thorough, broader and more intensified knowledge of the many interlocking problems that must be handled properly to attain success in moderate time. The kind of people who will eventually develop the present large areas of unsettled land and the social conditions and ideals of the communities created will vitally affect the civilization of the State in the future. Every effort will be made to place a colonist on the kind of land that he is best equipped mentally and physically to develop, and the rural credit system will make sure that he is a sound investment. Each of these settler units will be on the plotted maps of the several associations that will try their best to cultivate him into a thriving citizen asset of the community, mentally, physically, financially and morally. The office headquarters of this new practical movement to better the colonization of California will be established at the University of California at Berkeley, and be under the direction of Dr. Elwood Mead, representing that institution, and the Commonwealth Club on Advances to Settlers. This new amalgamation of interests and their high standing in effectiveness and their acquaintance with the field of attack gives assurance that California has at last entered on a new period in colonization where thriving and effective results will be attained.

THE RISING PORTENT OF INTERNATIONALISM.

France is already tackling the big problems, social, financial and industrial, which she sees will arise naturally from the eruptions of the present war. These are being plumbed by leading men in their respective fields, and on these reports legislation is likely to take its future course. A few weeks ago one of the recognized leaders of labor in France was invited by a big representative body of manufacturers and business men to elucidate the prospective demands that organized labor would likely make following the close of the war. Succinctly, his answer was, a larger share in the profits and a more open and frank understanding between employers and employees in the conduct of a business. The internationalization of the labor forces of the world was also forecasted. Labor leaders in the countries of the belligerents believe that there will be a large shortage of labor in their respective territories, and they forecast that the only way to relieve this shortage will be to import men from such countries as are in a position to supply them. They say that there will be no distinction made in Orientals, African, Islanders or Europeans. Organization will handle these groups of laborers, and they will be assigned their proper place in the ranks of labor. Demand will be the keynote of the number admitted to a country, and this influx, of course, will be easily controlled through the strict national border lines guarded by standing troops. National commissions of labor and international commissions of labor are forecasted for the purpose of handling the floating and fixed number of laborers in any country, so that at any special time these commissions will know just how many laborers they are in a position to either supply or ask of any outside nation. These new ideas in handling the flux of labor lifts that problem into a new realm, and paves the way for a closer knit internationalism, an internationalism that will make itself felt in the near future as regards war and world wide problems.

SAVING THE UNEMPLOYED FROM THE "SKINNERS."

The public employment bureau recently inaugurated by the State with branches in this city, Los Angeles, Oakland and Sacramento is making extraordinary headway and relief in handling the unemployed situation, according to the last report of Labor Commissioner J. P. McLaughlin, who is in charge of the bureau. During the month of March, the four offices named filled 2,069 positions, 1,241, or 60 per cent, of which were out of town. This is double the amount of positions that were filled in the preceding month, and indicates that the State bureau will, in course of time, control the filling of labor employment in California, and run out of business those unconscionable and intolerable labor employment fagins who fatten on the ignorance and poverty of luckless laborers. The object of the State Legislature in establishing this bureau at the last session was to save those seeking employment from "skinning" by these notorious rascals.

The filling of the 2,069 positions by the State Labor Bureau during March means a saving of $5,000 in fees to the laborers during that month alone, as no fees are charged. Marked success has followed the introduction of the bureau. Employers who at first regarded the free system dubiously, are now confident that it fills a requirement, and they are dropping their "trial orders," and becoming regular patrons. Local merchants and capitalists will be glad to know that the San Francisco bureau leads the quartette in providing positions, thereby removing those furnished positions into the purchasing and providing class. The local office for men is at 933 Mission street, and the women's department in the Pacific Building. 2,111 applications were registered—1,315 men and 796 women. Of the men, 739 found positions, and of women 140, an increase of 745 positions over the number in February. The positions ranged through agriculture, building, construction, clerical, professional, hotels, restaurants, railroads, mines, machine shops, printing, publishing, transportation, wholesale and retail trade, woodworking, furniture and casual laborers. It begins to look as though the establishment of this bureau will eradicate all signs of the old-time annual winter problem of the "unemployed."

SCHMITZ EXCELLENT OBJECT IN THE RECALL OF ROLPH.

The attempt of the Schmitz non-partisan alliance, "backed solidly by thousands of indignant taxpayers," to recall Mayor Rolph, is regarded as a joke or an extremely serious matter, according to the viewpoint of the taxpayer and the members of the phalanx of 36,000 voters that stood by Schmitz in the last election. His "opening gun" is the pregnant announcement of a man who knows what he is after, and discerns the course by which he may attain his ends. The ordinary taxpayer who grins over this announcement in the daily paper makes a grave mistake in treating it as a joke, if he will recall the upsets made in numbers of local elections. How many voters ever dreamed that Rolph's old-time family circle of supervisors would be shot to pieces.

Aside from all this there is a new political combination in town bent on controlling the civic center and all the indefinite power that arises there. The Exposition has taught local idealists a great deal about the aesthetic arts; at the same time it has illuminated some very capable politicians with the idea that, after all, the old time boss leaders were babes in the game and that the time has come when some really fine Italian hand craftsmanship can be put over that will set a high record mark in the great specialty of municipalcraft.

Evidently the ex-Mayor has himself sensed all this, and firmly believing that as the present Mayor has not the rugged strength and all-round experience to meet the occasion, he deems it best to urge a recall and replace him with a man fully qualified to meet the emergency. San Francisco has plenty of that kind of timber, and no anxiety is felt that he will be unable to provide a proper substitute. Even in a pinch, there are men on the present board of supervisors who perhaps, if pressed, would be willing to fill the breach were Rolph recalled. Never before in the history of the city has there been so many supervisors incubating to succeed as Mayor. In fact, it is generally recognized by the gentle proletariat that they are expected to vote the next Mayor out of the present board of supervisors. To lift one there by the recall would only be taking time by the firelock. Rolph himself will be mollified, and indeed greatly elated, by learning later that he will be permitted to run for Governor.

—By a kindly dispensation of Providence, the taxpayers of this State are being allowed to “blow in” all the funds they care to in the mad scramble of furnishing funds to the politicians for spending money. The records show that taxes are increasing with the years at a startling rate under the “educational processes” of the thimblerriggers. Where a very large percentage of the tax money disbursements goes is an enigma; much of it, of course, is thrown at the birds and written off in the ledgers at Sacramento as “Support of State Institutions.” During the last fiscal year the taxpayers, as puppets, paid in $191,493,200, and the cheerful politicians paid out $201,670,673, leaving a balance to be met of $10,177,473 for the “sucker” citizens to defray next year as best they can by redeeming that amount, with accumulating interest, of bonds. Can you beat it? California State, county and municipal returns all show that practically every branch is spending annually more money than is set aside in the regular taxes. The total bonded indebtedness of the various departments of the State totals $268,039,504, and is climbing like Jack’s beanstalk. Perfunctory attempts are made occasionally to check the present craze for burning the taxpayers’ money, but every shift in that line peters out except the climbing debt. Congress, each session, sets the national example with its mad eagerness to smash the “pork barrel.” It’s the American madness just now; but the piper must be paid eventually.

—John Francis Neylan, who runs the State Board of Control, and incidentally several other boards in the State, has passed the required examination before the law interrogators, and is now a lawyer in the making. If he proves as indefatigable in the law as he has in politics, since he scampered over the State as publicity man for Governor Johnson during the latter’s first campaign, he may eventually inherit the chair that has been so unselfishly battered by his boss. If Neylan ever misses a trick it is because he wants to pass it over to his opponent, and thereby load the latter with a boomerang. In the same law examination, two well known and persistent secretaries of State Boards did not fare so well; to wit, “Doc” Philip L. Jones, Secretary of the California Medical Board, and Charlie Dietrich, Secretary of the State Railroad Commission, which seems to indicate that they are much better politicians than incubated lawyers, as 42 centimeters could not blow them off their jobs.

—A delightfully rare old decrepit specimen of the Justice Shallow type, who mildews the bench in Chicago, ruled this week in an injunction suit that Rodger Bacon wrote the plays unjustly ascribed to Shakespeare. With a little more jaundice accumulated in his constitution and another like brainstorm of unreasoning, the learned Solon will in the near future shine rosy-faced with the inspiration that Mayor Rolph wrote Shakespeare according to the mystical acrobatic acrostics and the complicated cyphers that mysteriously thread their way through the Mayor’s recent poems. Indeed, it is notorious in the Mission belt that Mayor Rolph is shrewdly suspected of “putting over” something symbolical in his recent verse, whether it is a claim that he wrote Shakespeare or whether it is a ukase of some sort of inflame in his gubernatorial aspirations, or simply an esoteric rescript to the initiated only that dunderhead Chicago judge will be able to fathom.

—Members of the local Real Estate board have pledged $12,000 towards a fund to purchase a pry with which to break into the “inside workings” of so-called “municipal economy” in the hopes of discovering the unholy leaks that eat up the taxpayer’s money, that old time thimble-rigging political game that sidetracks a large percentage of the city’s treasury money “into the air apparently.” Former Mayor Schmitz, who now occupies a seat at the regular weekly meetings of the board of supervisors by virtue of an ordinance which grants any ex-mayor the right to join in the discussions before the board, has pointed out during the past several months where large chunks of money have disappeared into the thin air that hangs around certain municipal contracts. The Real Estate board will be entertained with Chesterfieldian grace and consideration by Nelson, Wolfe, Welch and others who strive to do their civic duties with artless thoughtlessness to inquisitive strangers. Real Estate sharps are rated in the Book of Judgment as “nerve A 1, dominant,” when it comes to putting over a deal. But, alas! and this is no fairy tale: to send that innocent, amiable and brainy looking bunch of property sharks against the supervisors named will be simply the repetition of the story of Little Red Riding Hood and the Wolf. Have the real estate men no friends?

—Henry Ford is out with a pronouncement that he is not a candidate for the presidency “unless the people want him.” That’s a rather common ailment, Henry, at this season: it seems to be catching and permanent, as Bryan, Fairbanks, Clarke, et als, will tell you if you quiz them with a telepathic message. According to your recent statement, you opine that the office should seek the man. Sure it should. But the trouble with the office, this season, is that it has been badly mixed up in war’s alarms, preparedness, safety first, Doc. Bryan’s fulminations and spring fever, with the consequence that the office is in a wretched funk, all shot to pieces, as it were, and is unable to hobble around to your door. Opportunity heard the rumor that you were ready to pungle up several million scads as a feeler for nomination, and old Op. put on the high gear in a rush to reach your quarters before you changed your mind, but you beat him to it on the change, as he didn’t stop to rap. You are naturally, reasonably and certainly right when you regard the mention of your name for a nomination as a great joke. Let the matter rest there and continue to paste feathers on the new bird of Peace. Congress is already carrying too many jokes for the people.

—Somehow, that fossil black pearl which was recently found by a Stanford geologist delving in a mass of strata formed eons ago, has stirred the antiquarian bile of a Berkeleyite who intimates that if the Palo Altoans are seeking interesting fossils of by-gone days they may readily find them nearer the faculty headquarters. Can the result of the recent collegiate boat race have aroused such venomous antipathy, or is Berkeley “feeling the ground” with a range gun to batter some collegiate mark south of the San Mateo line, or is the fling merely the expression that the West feels that it is up to the required mark of preparedness now sweeping over the nation?

—As stated by the News Letter several months ago, the Villa raid on Columbus was instigated by certain interests in this country that are extremely desirous of involving the United States government in complications with Mexico. The idea was to show, if possible, that Carranza was helpless to handle the situation and that intervention was necessary. Every effort was made to attract the discontented in Northern Mexico to join Villa and start a new revolution. Bogus news was freely provided to certain suborned newspapers in this country. If these culprits succeed, they will clear up millions.

China As It Is To-Day

BY CHARLES DENBY.

(Son of the Former U. S. Minister to China.)

When I first went to China, I traveled by a Pacific Mail steamer from San Francisco to Yokohama; by an American man-of-war from Yokohama to Taku; by tug boat, some 60 miles from the warship at Taku to Tien-tsin; by a boat drawn by coolies three days up the Peiho river; from Tien-tsin to Tunchou, which is 14 miles from Peking; and by sedan chair, borne by coolies, from Tunchou to Peking.

When I returned to that city last April, I proceeded from Japan through Korea by a modern train of Pullman cars to the city of Moudken in Manchuria, and thence by a comfortably equipped train operated by the Chinese Railway administration to the very gates of Peking, doing the whole journey from Yokohama to Peking in about three days.

The great development that has come onto the Chinese in the last two decades is a very remarkable one, and to the observer not familiar with recent Chinese history, apparently a very abrupt one. The facts are, however, that the old regime in China received a fatal blow in the China-Japanese war of 1894-95. Up to that time the affairs of the empire had gone on in a deliberate way, unthreatened by danger of any more serious conflict with foreign powers than an occasional missionary case, which was usually settled by a money indemnity; or by a commercial dispute, which was won by Chinese procrastination. By the act of Japan, however, in defeating the great Oriental giant and showing the world that China was not, as had been supposed, a Colossus which it was unwise to arouse, China was formally introduced to that strenuous circle known as world politics.

It is not too much to say that many a statesman of the old Chinese regime regretted the introduction, and looked back with satisfaction on the days when the "vermillion pencil," as the emperor's edicts were described, compelled the respect even of the ministers of foreign powers. When Japan, however, had shown how easy China was to despoil, something even more fatal to Manchu control than spoilage by foreign powers was invited. The Chinese subjects of the emperor began themselves to wonder if the "dragon throne" was really as formidable as they had supposed through two hundred trembling years. The dreams of the Chinese patriots that the "great pure" Manchu dynasty could be overthrown began to appear more possible of realization, and here were born the first republican plots, which in 1911 resulted in the abdication of the last Manchu emperor, and the establishment of the Chinese republic under the citizen Yuan Shih-kai.

How unforeseen the development of foreign life in China really was is shown by the growth of her cities and of their modern facilities. When the city of Shanghai was laid out as a foreign settlement in 1843, it was practically an area marked out in the middle of cabbage patches along the banks of the Woosung river. The idea of these first settlement builders was that they required a place for sojourning only and not a place for permanent residence, and the settlements were laid out accordingly. The streets were narrow; in fact, in the early consultation as to the laying out of the streets, the principle was declared and acted upon that all that was necessary would be lanes wide enough for a coolie to carry on his shoulder packages of tea. Shanghai has labored ever since under the results of this short-sighted design.

Now the city is one with a population of 500,000 Chinese and 14,000 foreigners—a great commercial metropolis. It has a well organized fire department, a large police department comprising a foreign force of all nationalities, and some thousands of Chinese and Indians, and a tram car service equal to that of any city in the far East. It is inhabited by a wealthy and cultured foreign community which make it their permanent home.

The impetus which modern improvements may attain in Oriental countries when they are once started, is illustrated by the experience of the tramway. In Shanghai, up to 1909, there were no tramways at all. The traffic was handled by jinrickshas and Chinese wheelbarrows, as well as some foreign carriages, the insufficiency of which was increasingly felt. In 1909, after serious doubts as to whether they would pay, tramways were laid down, and so successful have they been that in 1914, five years later, they carried 60,000,000 passengers, and it is estimated that not less than 75,000,000 will use the service during the present year.

Of course, the most remarkable change which has occurred in China has been the change of government, of which the autumn of 1911 saw the accomplishment. It is difficult to conceive of the scope of the transition from a despotic empire under a Manchu sovereign to a constitutional republic under a Chinese president, but that change has come, and to the well informed, much good has been the result thereof.

The Chinese were always a sluggish race. Their evolutionary experience taught them that the most profitable occupation for their minds was planning for the next meal. The result was that they grew to become contented with whatever form of government they had, if it left them in reasonable peace to pursue the avocation which provided the meal.

The most depressing commentary that has been made upon the Chinese character is that, while the physical and mental equal of any race in the world, they have never shown themselves prompt to respond to a spiritual appeal.

I spent some time in China from April to August this year, and had the gratifying experience to receive an entirely different impression from the republican Chinese to any which I had ever had from the same people when subjects of the emperor. It really seems as if the thought which the citizens of the republic had been compelled to exercise by the recent political events, had enlarged their understanding and had given them a different outlook on the world. I, in common with others who know the people well, feel great encouragement as to their future development.

One of the most portentous thoughts that can occur to well wishers of China concerns the condition in which she finds the world at her entry upon the exercise of republican self government. At this moment when her people are beginning to try to pattern their country on the model of the representative governments of the world, what a condition confronts them! We have spent a hundred years by our missionary, commercial and official efforts trying to evangelize and uplift the Chinese people and to teach them the glories of western civilization. Now when these efforts begin to bear tangible fruits in the awakening of the Chinese people, they look abroad and see the western civilized powers engaged in the most gigantic fratricidal struggle in history, and if they turn their attention to the nearest of the recently acquired adherents of western civilization, viz.: Japan, they find her using the equipment of her civilization to browbeat her peaceful neighbor. The thought might easily occur to reflective minds in China that if western civilization has not taught peace to the powers of Europe, and if the adoption of a western form of government has only led Japan to covet the territory of her neighbors, there may have been some virtue which has been lost sight of in the form of civilization which China is asked to abandon and under which she was immune at least from the perplexities which now confront her.—Saturday Detroit Press.

Skating As a Pastime

What to Wear

BY CLAIRE CASSEL, CHAMPION LADY SKATER OF AMERICA

Good shoes and skates, worn by beginners from the moment they start their lessons, are essential, and not only assist the skater in his efforts to master his lessons, but prevent him from acquiring ungraceful positions of the feet while practicing. I am quite sure that one-half of the complaints about weak ankles, sore heels, pains in the lower limbs, etc., are caused by bad shoes and badly selected skates.

Naturally, a little stiffness must be expected by beginners. The same inconvenience that would result from breaking in new golf or tennis shoes at the beginning of each season. However, if the skater finds the same pain continues after a few weeks' trial, the only thing to do is to examine the boots or shoes carefully and consult some expert skater who could probably remedy some of the faults, or, if a new outfit is required, advise the proper kind of shoes and skates to purchase.

A professional who is not interested in his pupils' outfit and allows them to use the wrong equipment, has not got their best interests at heart, and is entirely to blame if proper progress is not made. For continental skating care should be taken as to the height of the heels of your shoes. These should not be too low, as is often the case. Those about one inch in height are correct.

The novice should bear in mind that the unlined hockey shoes with low, flat heels and fitted out with straps and ankle supports of tough leather, are death to the hopes of those wishing to become proficient continental skaters. There is no reason why a skating boot should not be made of the finest and softest leather. A reinforcement can be put in where desired, but thick, boxed toes and heavy soles are not at all necessary. The novice will find it impossible to "point" the toes with a heavy and clumsy boot.

The best of care should be taken of the skating shoes. They should be oiled from time to time to keep them soft and keep out the moisture. It is necessary for the skater to keep her feet dry, and too much attention cannot be paid to her shoes. I could write volumes about skating boots, as they are so important to the beginner.

The skates should be of a standard make and a continental model is the correct skate. The ends of these skates are notched to allow for toe work and to assist in stopping easily and quickly. The demand for certain of these models now is so great that the factories cannot begin to fill their orders. Exorbitant figures are being offered for some of these models which cannot be supplied.

A hockey skate or a skate with a flat blade is wrong for figure skating. No person wearing these skates can turn correctly in figure work, as the radius is too large and the blades too flat. Skates with clamps and straps are useless, as the edge can never be held with such an outfit. The best is none too good for the beginner, and the expensive outfit, if properly selected, is the cheapest in the end.

I have been frequently asked by my pupils as to what kind of stockings are best to wear when skating. A woolen stocking is the best and far superior to silk, as it will absorb the perspiration and is much softer next to the leather of the boot. Some women like golf stockings for skating, owing to their natty appearance. Personally, I do not care to use anything but plain black stockings for nearly all occasions, excepting, perhaps, when giving an exhibition, where white shoes are worn.

The boots used for skating should be reserved exclusively for that purpose and the skates should be attached permanently to the shoes. A pair of properly made boots well taken care of will last for many years, and the skater will be repaid for the initial expense in the end. The boots should always be very high, at least nine inches from the heel. They should be easy to lace. In place of the last six or seven holes at the top of the boots, it is well to substitute the clasps often used on men's storm shoes. This clasp saves time in lacing up the boots and gives them a snug fit.

When All Sports Become Feminised

As Projected by A. S. MacLeod

NOBLE WORK OF THE LATE DR. C. C. WHITMAN.

(From a Paris Letter to the S. F. News Letter.)

Dr. Crosby Church Whitman, son of Judge B. C. Whitman, of San Francisco, California, Bachelor of Arts of Harvard College, Doctor of Medicine of the Faculte of Paris, Medicin-Chef of the Hospital for Convalescent Officers founded by Mr. James Stillman, and of the Hospital for Wounded Soldiers founded by Mr. James H. Hyde, died at his residence in Paris on the 28th of March, 1916, having just passed his 53d birthday.

The outbreak of hostilities found Dr. Whitman engaged in his practice. It was not in his nature to abandon a post of danger, and after securing the safety of patients, going almost to the borders of Spain with them, he returned to Paris to devote himself to the wounded. At once he was called upon by Mr. Hyde to organize a hospital in his residence, to be placed under the flag of the Croix Rouge Francaise. He took up this work with enthusiasm and installed everything in readiness to receive wounded from the battle of the Marne. The success of the Hyde Hospital was supplemented some months after by Mr. James Stillman, who placed his residence at the disposition of the military authorities, as a Hospital Complementaire du Val de Grace, and invited Dr. Whitman to organize this for convalescent officers of all ranks.

Dr. Whitman also acted as Consulting Physician in the Franco-Belge Dispensary founded by Mrs. Wharton.

It was only in January, 1916, on the first relaxation of pressure in these hospitals, that Dr. Whitman realized the magnitude of his efforts. On the advice of his associates, he interrupted his work, as he supposed for a few days. His health failed rapidly, and he passed away in his sleep, in the presence of his mother, physicians and the household.

This brief sketch can give but a faint idea of the good Dr. Whitman did. One of the founders of the Student Hotel Dispensary, which ministers to American women students in Paris who may fall ill, and of the American Hospital at Neuilly, his hand was never stayed in holding suffering humanity. No one called on him in vain for help or sympathy, and the universal and sincere regret that is felt in all classes, both French and of his own country, at his loss, is the finest tribute to his unflinching devotion and kindness to all in need. His patients at the military hospitals came from all stations of life and all branches of the service. Letters he received from men returned to the front, or from their homes, breathing affection and gratitude, would fill a volume. The Algerian tirailleur, the French soldier, the officer of high rank, all felt his devoted disinterested care. Dutiful son, loyal friend, devoted physician, his loss at the zenith of his career cannot be replaced.

NON-PARTISAN MOVEMENT TOWARDS WILSON.

The result of the primaries in California last Tuesday conclusively showed the strength of the non-partisan movement, as outlined by the President in his recent speech at Washington. The Woodrow Wilson Non-Partisan League of California, with headquarters at 150 Pine street, San Francisco, continues to receive the enthusiastic and voluntary offers of support from all the counties in the State and from men of every political faith. The small vote of the Progressive party is an indication of the tendency of the progressive voters to get behind the administration that has accomplished more progressive legislation in three years than has been brought about in any previous thirty years.

The important progressive legislation of the Wilson administration, such as the Federal banking law, the income tax law, the alleviation of unemployment, and the pending rural credits measure, have brought to the support of Woodrow Wilson the thinking non-partisan voters of the country.

There is also seen in the primaries all over the country evidence of the hearty endorsement of Wilson's painstaking care to maintain friendly relations with foreign countries during the stress of conflict now dominating the rest of the world. The wave of prosperity sweeping over the country and the daily announcements of increases of wages in the great manufacturing industries, together with the demand for labor, which has hardly been equaled since the Civil War, is beginning to tell, and business men are not going to be in a hurry to swap horses while this stream of prosperity is at its height.

The Stranger Within Our Gates

BY ARTHUR H. DUTTON.

California's complexion will be lost if the State goes "dry." The State of California is world famous for its gastronomic delights, for the variety, flavor and moderate prices of its food-stuffs. The delights of a San Francisco or a Los Angeles table d'hote dinner, not to mention those ordered a la carte, have been praised in song and story. Cost for cost, at no place in the world can as excellent meals be obtained as in California. This reputation has gone afar, and has brought to and kept in California thousands of excellent people from other States and other countries.

Banish our California wines from these meals and their soul will be gone. Visitors who believe that life should be made joyful, not miserable, who hitherto have participated in the joys of our hotel and restaurant life, will go elsewhere, if prohibition should win; will go to some State or country where liberal ideas prevail; where one element of the community does not seek to foist its disagreeable tenets upon everybody else.

Consider for a moment what the effect will be if the second proposed amendment to the State constitution should be carried at next November's election. This amendment forbids the serving of wine "in any saloon, dramshop, dive, store, hotel, restaurant, cafe, club, dance hall or any other place of public resort." Only in the actual, permanent home of the purchaser may it be served, and the purchaser may obtain his wine only at the winery. While the resident Californian may drink wine in his permanent home—if he has one—he cannot drink it at his club or at a restaurant.

The stranger within our gates is worse off than the permanent resident. He cannot get a drink anywhere. He has heard of the delicious California wines, and would like to have some with his meals. He cannot do so. He might stay in California six months, and go away without ever touching a drop of our fire wine. In fact, he could not touch a drop under any circumstances, unless he should be lucky enough to be entertained in the private home of a sympathetic Californian resident. He might be put up at a club, but he would be dry there, too, for the amendment bars all alcoholic liquors from clubs.

After one such experience after all the pleasant things he has heard about California, the well-living visitor, the man who, with his family, likes the good things of life, likes happiness, likes comfort and likes to enjoy, particularly, the pleasure of a well provided table, will go away, never to return, and will spread broadcast the gospel that California is a good place to stay away from until the period of prohibition tyranny is ended.

IT IS SAID THAT—

John F. Neylan, a cogwheel in the Johnson Machine, who is now chairman of the important State Board of Control, will be appointed on the Railroad Commission, $8,000 per year salary, to succeed Alex Gordon, whose term expires with the close of this year.

Commissioner of Corporations H. L. Carnahan is considered just now the favorite candidate against several Los Angelanos in the prospective appointment to the vacant chair of Lieutenant-Governor of the State.

What hit the recent United Republican party will never be known. Post mortems in such cases are now considered as needless and profane. Among those that saved their bacon and face were: Chester Rowell, Lee Gates, Dr. Pardee, Dan Ryan, Meyer Lissner and others who were absent from headquarters when the news came to hand. There were few present when the hybrid Moose was buried. No flowers. Requiescat in pace.

PLEASURE'S WAND

"Obey no wand but Pleasure's."—Tom Moore.

PERSONAL ADVENTURES IN STAGELAND THIS WEEK

BY HENRY McDONALD SPENCER

A Play of Players

Acting the part of an actor is like making a picture of a picture, and the results achieved in each case are generally futile and unconvincing. It is interesting to observe that the two leading playwrights of the past generation, and the fathers of the modern drama in English, (Sir) Arthur Wing Pinero and Henry Arthur Jones, both have tried such plays, and in both cases have failed; for, with all due respect to the author, what success "Cock o' the Walk," now playing at the Columbia has attained, is really in the nature of a personal triumph for, or rather tribute to, Otis Skinner.

Except that they are both plays about actors and evidently were written to get something off the chest of the dramatist, there is little resemblance between Pinero's "Trelawney of the Wells" and the Jones play. In fact, Anthony Bellchamber (Otis Skinner) is Tom Wrench of Trelawney with the reverse English, as the Pinero protagonist is looking forward and working to rescue the drama from its artificiality and staginess; while Jones's man faces backward and is longing for an opportunity to mouth long speeches which even if they are the immortal Bard's are none the less unreal to a present day audience.

The play itself keeps jumping between two themes, not a major and minor, but apparently equal themes. Here are the two issues joined: (a) The contest between Sir Augustus Conyers (Walter Gibbs), the London actor-manager, and Bridle (Henry Crocker) over the philandering of the former with the latter's daughter. (b) The endeavor of Bellchamber to play Othello to Conyers' Iago. The part of the old time actor in any play is, of course, actor proof, and can be played by any middle-aged or elderly Ham with a resonant voice and "actory" features, which nearly all old-time actors possess. There is a certain attractiveness about Skinner's personality and a decided charm about his mocking tones that make him particularly acceptable in the leading role, but when you have said that, you have said pretty nearly all, for in a double sense is the character stagey. The rest of the characters are, however, so typically English, and in fact so almost locally English, that it is difficult to believe that it was written primarily for Otis Skinner, and therefore for American presentation. While we have many of the I-me-and-myself lads in this country, we have none quite so up-stagey and who hate themselves to the extent that a newly-knighted London actor-manager hates himself. In fact, we have no actor-managers who are also lessees and producers. Henry Miller comes the nearest to Sir George Alexander or Sir Beerbohm Tree, the latter indeed being thinly veiled in Conyers of the play. Max Beerbohm, Tree's brother, by the way, got off an epigram which has created hostility between the two ever since London first laughed at it. Speaking of Sir Beerbohm's performance of Hamlet, Max said it was funny without being vulgar. Again, the caricaturing of the bishops rather misses fire in a country where even Anglican bishops go about clad as other men, and where, if one of the lads should appear on the streets attired in his conventional costume of high cloth gaiters, or leggings to the knees, apron and shovel hat, he would soon find himself leading a mob of delighted and irreverent small boys. While slangy waitresses exist everywhere, yet the peculiar affectations of the English variety, with her painful efforts to appear "above her station" (well played by Luella Smith) are hardly known here, although the type is not hard to place. This is the only play I have seen for a long time that has no part which could be taken by the thick-legged leading lady with the throaty voice and opulent bosom. By no stretch of the imagination can you see any but a flapper (110 pounds), or two flappers, in the other female roles. In fact, the motto of the play is that of a French liner in danger (I shall cross only on French liners), to wit: "Men first."

The play as a whole was excellently cast: The bishops were all good, and I do not think that Tree himself looks the part of Tree nearly as well as Mr. Gibbs. The producer is to be congratulated on his selections: Bridle, the villaite (English for commuter), Clibbetts the Cerebus for the "Chief," also the giggly matinee girls. In fact, the play was a play of types rather than people, and this from the author of "The Liars," which remains in my opinion as the best comedy of present-day life in English, and the brilliant third act, of which is said to have been written by Oscar Wilde.

The "Pipes of Pan"

After hearing and seeing lovely Rosie Lloyd at Pantages this week I am of the opinion that she does not need to be advertised any more as the sister of Alice and Marie Lloyd, for like good wine she needs no bush, nor does she require to work under the aegis of her sisters. Rosie is a dear, and her sweet, soft English voice is a welcome contrast to the middle-Western burr that is conspicuous on our stage. She brings up memories of Devonshire strawberries and cream, of trim hedges and egg-laine, and sweet-scented country sides in an English May. And that is quite an achievement with me for a young woman of the stage.

As a rule, Protean acts are a bore, but Marion Munson manages to weave the thread of a story through her turn as "The Quickest Woman in the World," and accomplishes so many changes in such short order that hereafter I shall never wait more than three-quarters of an hour for a girl to put on her hat. Longer than that, I know now is bunk.

The real coons in "A Holiday in Dixie Land" worked so hard that you feel their efforts ought to have been devoted to a better cause. Why doesn't some one write a little sketch for them to appear in, and let their specialties be worked as part of the skit. If you remember the Black Patti troupe and the little play they presented, and which toured the country almost before I was born, you will know what I mean. A little colored love scene with razors flying through the air and the political aspirations of one of the lovers, would be a good start, and this suggestion I contribute free. Raul Pereira, a violinist, and a number of assistants contributed a musical number which I suppose is necessary to every well regulated bill, and there were the usual acts in "one" which made up a program of more than usual merit. Take my word for it, "Dear Reader," don't be frightened away from Pan's because it is low-priced.

Orpheum

As between this week and last, I shall have to split fifty-fifty with the Orpheum. Last week I approved seven out of the eight acts of the bill, and I was delighted to observe that my fellow critics seemed to disagree with me. When the public disagrees with me I think I am right, but when both public and critics disagree with me I know that I am right. Stella Mayhew is the headliner among the newcomers, and I cannot say that I was much impressed with Stella (not the picture). I think that she would do splendidly in a skit; in fact, I know she would, but not as an act by herself. Why do not these performers utilize the immense advantage of weaving a little story around themselves? For we are all more or less like children, one of whom says: "Daddy, tell me a story, about when you were in the Boer war, you know." And then I have to lie and lie and lie.

Ruth St. Denis presented some new dances, but for some unknown reason she does not seem to be a gallery favorite. By the way, the ex-Leading Lady told me that Ruth did not make-up properly. What nonsense. As the lady arising from the sea—Aphrodite—her make-up was perfect, in fact I told my little 190-lb. friend that all make-up should not be judged by musical comedy requirements, but that it should be determined by what effect the artist is trying to produce. So far as showmanship is concerned, the St. Denis act is all to the good, and I suppose that mysterious thing called personal magnetism is missing; or perhaps because you only pay six and a fraction cents for the act at a matinee, instead of two dollars, it is not valued so highly. Anyway, I like Ruth.

Miss Robbie Gordone (why the final "e"?) was an acceptable offering. She is a very beautiful woman, and that always gets me. For I quite agree with Oscar Wilde that simply being is of itself an art and an achievement. Percy Branson and friend Winnie repeated, and although they are somewhat lazy, they always score. So much for the credit side of the account, which is more than originally I intended to place there; the rest of the bill is somewhat mediocre. In fact, Col. Marc Diamond and Mrs. Grant, the old people, are an illustration of Doctor Johnson's famous epigram about the dog walking on its hind legs: "The wonder is not that he does it well, but that he does it at all." Therefore I am constrained to say that their performance of modern dancing is more remarkable as a tour de force than as a thing in itself.

Advance Notices

Musical Comedy Season at the Columbia.—That San Francisco is ready for a musical comedy season at popular prices is being made evident by the incessant inquiry regarding the beginning of the season at the Columbia Theatre. It promises to bring out the latest success presented by an array of high-class talent introducing names familiar to Broadway musical comedy lovers. "The Midnight Girl," which begins the season on Sunday night, May 14th, is one of the pronounced hits of the past season in New York. It is from the pen of the men who wrote "Adele," and from all accounts is one round of merriment, music, dash and ginger. There are a score of song hits in which the principals, chorus and orchestra, the latter under the baton of William Lorraine, will be able to revel in. The prima donna roles will be sung by Eleanor Henry, who was the talk of New York in the New Amsterdam Theatre production of "Sweethearts." Dorothy Webb, Maude Beatty, Victoria Gauran, Robert Pitkin, J. Humbird Duffey, Arthur Cunningham, Stanley Ridges, Madison Smith, are among the leading members of the big organization, which will include an immense chorus of singing and dancing girls. The elaborate scale of productions and the general perfection of the shows will attract attention in themselves aside from the fact that they are to be presented at prices ranging from $1 to 10 cents.

Otis Skinner at the Columbia in "Cock o' the Walk"

Otis Skinner is appearing at the Columbia Theatre in a role after his own heart. Henry Arthur Jones wrote the part especially for him in "Cock o' the Walk." Mr. Skinner opened his engagement at the Columbia last Monday night, and he has been playing to crowded houses all the week. He will continue to amuse San Francisco playgoers just one more week. In "Cock o' the Walk" Mr. Jones has chosen for his butts the not too highly talented actor-managers of London who have achieved knighthood, the romantic little girls who foolishly adore these same actor managers and make "matinee idols" of them, and the Lord Bishops of the Church of England, who stray into the theatre on such occasions as the Shakespeare tercentenary. As a contrast to the actor-manager, preoccupied with care for his social prestige, Mr. Jones has drawn a wonderful portrait of an actor of the "old school," the bibulous Bohemian Thespian, played by Otis Skinner, who really can play Shakespeare, but only gets the chance to do it by a clever trick. Mr. Skinner's matinees at the Columbia are on Wednesday and Saturday.

Fritzi Scheff, the brilliant Viennese prima donna, who will appear at the Orpheum next week

Orpheum—The Orpheum will present next week a new show with Fritzi Scheff, the brilliant Viennese prima donna, as its headline attraction. The triumph achieved by Miss Scheff during her previous engagement at this theatre is still fresh in the public memory. Her charm, daintiness, style and beautifully cultivated voice always command enthusiastic approval. Miss Scheff's program will be composed of her musical successes, and she brings with her as musical director, August Kleinecke. Manuel Quiroga, the young Spanish violinist who recently made his American debut in New York, and became one of the artistic successes of its musical world, will be a special feature of the new bill. Aveling and Lloyd call themselves "Two Southern Gentlemen," and their dialogue is written for them by Aaron Hoffman along these lines. Both men are excellent delineators of character comedy. Homer Miles and Helen Ray will appear in Mr. Miles' latest sketch, "An Innocent Bystander," which contains an ingenious story. A trio calling themselves "Three Little Pals," are Conlin, Steele and Parks. These two men and a girl sing, dance and chatter in an unconventional manner. Joe Laurie and Aleen Bronson will present a delightful bit of foolery in the shape of a musical skit called "Lost and Found." The Carpos Brothers have a new head balancing and musical act. Stella Mayhew and Billie Taylor will be the only hold-over in this great and novel vaudeville bill.

Third People's Philharmonic Symphony—Conforming to its plan of presenting at each symphony concert some solo masterpiece played by recognized artists, the People's Philharmonic Orchestra will introduce its concert master, Emilio Meriz, next Thursday night in Max Bruch's beautiful concerto in G minor, with full orchestral score and under the direction of Nikolai Sokoloff, the young Russian conductor, who has created a musical sensation in this city by the force and the sympathy of his interpretations. The third concert of the third season of the People's Philharmonic Orchestra will be given Thursday night, May 11th, at Pavilion Rink, corner of Sutter and Pierce streets. The change in the seating arrangements and the substitution of comfortable chairs for the uncomfortable benches were commended on the occasion of the last concert, and have been made permanent. With admittance placed at 25 cents and reserved seats at 50 cents, it is believed that the orchestral treats are brought within the means of all who really love music. The association draws attention to the fact that the only way in which these concerts, involving the presence of 65 picked instrumentalists and a soloist at every concert, can be placed on a self-supporting basis is by the attendance of great crowds; so the appeal is made confidently to music lovers of this city to give the organization the benefit of their moral support by joining the association. Membership is obtained by the mere purchase of season tickets, and this, it is pointed out, is at once most advantageous to the buyer who gets more than his value in the music offered, and who also may enjoy the consciousness of assisting in a worthy effort to advance the musical culture of this great city.

The program for next Thursday night's concert is typical of those catholic schedules assembled by Conductor Sokoloff. It will open with Tschaiakowsky's fourth great symphony, all the movements of which will be played; Mozart's melodious overture to "Marriage of Figaro," the Bruch Concerto for violin and orchestra, and Rimsky-Korsakow's Spanish Caprice, Op. 34.

Strong Vaudeville at Pantages.—A delightful half hour version of Rowland and Clifford's Chicago success, "September Morn," will be headlined on the new eight act show which opens at the Pantages on Sunday. There will be a big company of fourteen funmakers starring Louise de Foggie, Harry Fields and the usual troupe of dancing girls. The action of the piece takes place in an artist's studio, where the celebrated painting is reproduced. The girl posing for the study is a well known model who has been painted by several of the best-liked New York illustrators. The Bowman Brothers, styled "The Blue Grass Boys," will supply the laughs of the new show with their dialect stories and operatic singing. "The Frame-Up" is a surprise sketch dealing with a pair of crooks, a misguided detective and a movie camera. The Ward-Terry players are the participants in the playlet. Other splendid acts will be furnished by the Clairmont Brothers in a loop the ladder stunt; Lowell and Esther Drew will offer a skit, "At the Drug Store;" Chabot and Dixon in a musical variety, and the eighth chapter of "The Iron Claw."

Dorothy Webb, who is coming with the musical comedy company for a season at the Columbia Theatre, is the talented daughter of comedian Webb, so popular at the old Tivoli. She has been a star in Savage's production of "Sari."

Eleanor Henry, the prima donna of the new musical comedy season at the Columbia Theatre, made a big hit in the New Amsterdam Theatre, New York, success of "Sweethearts." Another popular feminine member of the organization will be Maude Beatty.

Among the musical pieces to be offered during the season at the Columbia Theatre are "The Midnight Girl," "Sari," "When Claudia Smiles," "Taxi, 4-11-44."

Lectures at Paul Elder's.—Ashley Pettis will resume his course of lecture recitals on "An Analysis of the Evolution of Pianoforte Music," Tuesday, May 9th, at 3 o'clock, in the Paul Elder Gallery, 239 Grant avenue. The subject for Tuesday will be "Weber, Field and Schubert."

Mrs. Henry Stanislawski will lecture, Thursday, May 11th, at 3 o'clock, in her course on "Recollections of a Childhood in Ireland."

THE SKATING CRAZE HAS ARRIVED IN TOWN.

The new Arcadia Skating Pavilion at Eddy and Jones streets has created such an extraordinary success that the skates on sale in San Francisco have all been bought up by enthusiastic skaters. Of course, telegrams for more have been despatched by shop-keepers, and more skates will be provided. The opening of this luxurious Ice Palace, under the management of the Techau Tavern, pictured a wonderful spectacle, even to San Franciscans. The boxes held a regular opera first night throng of prominent people, while the galleries and balconies were packed. Over one hundred couples skated on the ice at one time, ample evidence of the fact that San Francisco has plenty of skaters only too anxious to put on the steel blade.

The Techau Tavern table d'hote dinner at 6:30 o'clock each Sunday evening in the Dansant Club rooms is the "skating vogue" of the hour. After dinner everybody repairs to the Ice Palace for skating and the exhibitions.

EIGHT EPISODE OF "THE IRON CLAW."

Precedents of the Irish Revolt

Though a person must be past the half-century mark in years to remember when there has been—up to the past few days—any disturbance in Ireland worthy to be called a rebellion, there are nevertheless precedents enough for the rising that has taken place against English authority in the Emerald Isle. For centuries, in fact, Ireland was in a state of almost continuous revolt, and there have been so many attempts to throw off the English yoke that one does not wonder the idea of promoting still another one should have occurred to the authorities in Germany.

Neither is the attempt to aid such a rising with foreign troops a new idea. Beginning with the Scotch in 1314, England's enemies have always realized that here was a place where she could be struck a heavy blow. In that remote time, when Robert Bruce was king of Scotland and the miserable Edward II reigned in London, the Scotch king's brother, Edward, went to Ireland with an army to aid the rebellious Irish against their Anglo-Norman conquerors. Edward Bruce was a fiery blade, and kept things well stirred up for a time, but was finally defeated and killed by the English and loyal Irish, and his followers went home.

After the Reformation there was a new ground for trouble, as most of the native Irish and the original English conquerors remained Catholic, while the English and Scotch settled in Ulster during this period were largely Presbyterians. During the religious wars of Elizabeth's reign there were Catholic risings in Ireland, and several Irish leaders like Shayne O'Neill, Hugh O'Neill and the Earl of Desmond caused much trouble.

The rebels conducted negotiations with Philip II of Spain after that monarch finally became the open enemy of Elizabeth, and in 1580 a Spanish force landed to aid them, but chose an unfortunate time and place for the attempt. It was defeated by the English, captured, and every man put to the sword. Those who dilate on the cruelties of the Spaniards of that day should not forget that Englishmen were no mollicoddlers, to say the least. Among those who had a part in this affair—at least through their presence in the English army—were Sir Walter Raleigh, whom we are accustomed to regard as the flower of knighthood of that era, and the poet Edmund Spenser. True, the Spaniards had for decades been burning and slaying, and the English doubtless regarded their action as mere retaliation. Moreover, the killing of prisoners taken with arms in their hand was not at that time thought of as plain murder, as it would be to-day.

The story of the Irish rebellion against Cromwell and the Puritans is pretty well known. Rory O'More, famed in song, was one of the heroes of this period, but there was little song about the war, in which Cromwell and his men slew and burned until the revolters were utterly crushed. To this day the mere name of Drogheda, which the Puritans stormed, is sufficient to stir the wrath of a Catholic Irishman.

In the revolution of 1688 the Irish were, for once, not the rebels, as they supported the Stuart king, James II, against the revolutionists under William of Orange. But their fate was the same as in the former wars. Louis of France sent troops to aid them, and Ireland was the battleground for mercenaries of many tongues, since William's forces included Dutchmen and Germans as well as English. The Irish in this war had a great general, Patrick Sarsfield, but he was unable to balance the cowardice and incompetence of James II and at the same time cope with the greater power of William, who also had a very able general, the German Schomberg. The battle of the Boyne and the later conflict at Aughrim settled the succession to the English throne, and left Ireland again a subject country.

During the hundred years after the Boyne, Ireland was miserable enough. The English policy was not only repressive, but was foolish in that manufacture and agriculture were discouraged. Both Catholics and Protestants were injured by these enactments, and thousands emigrated.

Famines added to the suffering, and in this century there was much agitation and disorder of the Ku Klux type. The names of the Oakboys, the Steelboys, the Whiteboys, the Defenders and the Peep O' Day Boys became synonymous with ruffianism when viewed from the standpoint of their respective opponents, while the friends of these earlier prototypes of our modern whitecaps and night riders regarded them as true patriots.

At the time of the American revolution there was much agitation, and when the French revolution broke out part of the Irish people sympathized with its aims, though of course the strict Catholics did not approve of its methods. Efforts to cause a rising finally resulted in the French government sending a force of 1,100 men, after an army of 10,000 which had actually sailed from Brest was prevented from landing by adverse winds. If this latter contingent had succeeded in getting ashore with its munitions, the situation would have been pretty serious for England, but as it was the small French force was helpless, and the rebels themselves were routed after gaining some successes. The decisive fight was at Vinegar Hill, and it was indeed a sour dose for the rebels, for they were once more treated with great severity, which was disapproved by even the British governor, Lord Cornwallis. William Pitt, the great prime minister, resolved that union with the rest of the realm was the only remedy, and he brought this about, giving Ireland representation in the parliament at Westminster, but of course abolishing the old Irish parliament.

There have been two risings since that of 1798, but neither of them was really serious. In 1803 the great orator, Robert Emmett, headed an outbreak which was easily suppressed, after which there was no attempt to resort to arms until about half a century ago, when the Fenians set a rebellion on foot. Thousands of Irishmen had served in the Civil War in America and there was thus available a large body of trained men, but the Fenian plans were not well managed. An invasion of Canada in 1866 was bungled and easily repulsed, and in the next year the general uprising which was set on foot was quelled in its very incipency. Later an attempted jail delivery caused some bloodshed, and there was much isolated disorder, but Fenianism collapsed as a revolutionary movement.

Since that time the agitation was more peaceful until recently, though in 1881 a severe law known as the coercion act resulted in the assassination of Lord Frederick Cavendish, chief secretary for Ireland, in Phoenix Park, Dublin. Talk of a resort to arms again came to the front after home rule legislation was projected by the liberal party under Premier Asquith, the Ulsterites being the ones to threaten revolt this time, owing to their unwillingness to submit to the rule of the Catholic majority, while the nationalists responded by organizing volunteer bands and smuggling in arms and ammunition. Just a few days before the war started there was bloodshed at Dublin, when Scotch troops were attacked by a mob. With the outbreak of general hostilities, however, the Irish question dropped into the background, though it is probable that some things which have happened there during the last two years have been suppressed by the censor.

Sir Roger Casement, who was captured last Saturday, when a German auxiliary cruiser with munitions for the prospective rebels was sunk off the Irish coast, is, of all things, an Ulster Protestant, but is an ardent separatist.—Exchange.

The Macomber Millions and Artificial Limbs.

Rumor, wearing its most attractive air and circulating in the "best society," insists that the anonymous donor of $50,000 to the fund for a down-town building for the Y. W. C. A. is none other than Mrs. King Macomber, who two years ago inherited some twenty million dollars from her father, who was a Standard Oil magnate.

Mr. William Crocker, who made the donation in "the name of a friend of all women and girls," has been as inscrutable and sphynx-like as the hero-detective of popular fiction, but from all the sources that tap Burlingame, there have been tiny leaks that converge into a stream which is bound sooner or later to flow through the public highways.

Mrs. Macomber, unlike so many people who press agent their generosity, has a genuine dislike of any recognition of her charitable impulses, and she is constantly doing the most generous things with no inhibitions save silence surrounding the gift. For example, we have been surfeited with tales of sacrifices made for the war sufferers of Europe, but never once has Mrs. Macomber been exploited as one of the lavish givers. One hesitates to tear away this unusual and becoming veil of privacy, for there are so many who can perfectly control their generous impulses save when the strong white light of publicity is beating down upon them, and women like Mrs. Macomber make a rare contribution to one's faith in human nature.

However, I have just heard a story about one of Mrs. Macomber's "silent" charities which I cannot refrain from telling, much as I know she dislikes that sort of thing and highly as I approve of such unusual and beautiful reticences. But for the element of humor much may be forgiven.

About six months ago a salesman for a Chicago firm happened to announce to a business man that the entire output of their factory had been bought by Mrs. King Macomber.

The business man, who knows Mrs. Macomber, was sufficiently interested to ask what kind of factory this was that Mrs. Macomber should buy the entire output.

"Artificial arms and legs, etc.," quoth the laconic salesman, and went on his way.

The business man tells the story on himself, and admits that the next time he saw Mrs. Macomber he tried to figure out whether it was wooden legs or arms she needed, and although her entire anatomy looked perfectly good to him, he decided she must have a wooden arm, and was having a factory turn out a supply for life, in the event that all the factories in the country should be converted into ammunition factories.

To be sure, this explanation did not entirely satisfy him, for he was a hard headed business man, and so when he met an intimate friend of the Macombers, he made inquiry and discovered that Mrs. Macomber had contracted for the output for a year in order to send artificial legs and arms over to Europe to disabled soldiers!

The Macombers have spent a good deal of time during the last three or four years in California, and just before they went East the other day they leased a house in Burlingame, which means that they will be here a good deal next season, and will add to the gayeties of the smart set with whom they are affiliated. The Macombers have one of the original old Spanish land grant ranchos which has never been subdivided, and which has always belonged to one of the descendants of the old Spanish families until the Macombers bought it. The rancho is near Hollister, and the Harry Macombers spend more of their time there, the King Macombers having more wanderlust.

Andrew Welch's Al Fresco Joke.

Mrs. Fred Kohl and three or four other women have kept their enthusiasm for the beagle hunt up to the proper English notch, but it must be admitted that feminine enthusiasm is sagging, and even the male of the species that gets a lot of fun out of seeing a pack of beagles run a rabbit to earth cannot be computed in large numbers.

To be sure, last Sunday was a very hot day, which may somewhat account for the dwindling number who actually took part in the hunt. About a dozen women turned out and trooped merrily off with the men and dogs, but they did not return so merrily. The dust lies so thick now that although their white skirts are made knee length and are worn with white riding breeches, the pristine freshness of the skirts last for about an hour, and they come home a dirty and weary lot. Moreover, the only correct hat for beagling is a little cap like a jockey cap, and although it is very fetching it does not afford any shade, and sunburn and freckles are taking a terrible toll of the beaglers.

Although so few turned out for the hunt, over a hundred and twenty-five sat down to the elaborate breakfast at the Andrew Welch place, and there was much good natured chaffing back and forth about those who "never hike but just come in for the eats."

When some wag said to the host: "Andrew, did you beagle this morning?" Mr. Welch answered: "I didn't have time. You see, I had to go to early mass and then come home and cook breakfast for all of you"—which remark brought down the house, for the Welchs have one of the famous chefs down the peninsula way.

Mrs. Templeton Crocker's Collection

Mrs. Templeton Crocker, as all her friends know, has a seventh sense about the value of money, and although she gets much pleasure out of her own and her husband's millions, she is never reckless. Wherefore, there is much amusement over a story that is going the rounds about.

Mrs. Crocker, having discovered that some bargain antiques which she bought for her house have been declared spurious and are not worth half the money which she paid for them. The greatest collectors have been fooled in this fashion, so Mrs. Crocker need not feel humiliated—if indeed the story is true, for which fact I do not vouch.

Have You a Butler?

But I do vouch for a story about a woman real estate dealer who has been doing a great deal of business down the peninsula way, as the chatelaines of most of the desirable houses down there are her friends, and are doing all that they can to help her to make a success.

A friend of mine in search of a country house went to her and stated about the sort of place that she would like to have.

Said the real estate agent: "How many servants do you keep?"

"I don't keep many," answered the lady, truthfully; "but I employ four!"

"Do you employ a butler?" queried the real estate agent, and when the lady admitted that they were an unbutlered family, the real estate agent said in all seriousness: "I have just the place for you, but I know that the owner will not rent it again to a family without a butler—she did last season, and it made the place sort of lose caste, and we think that is why it has not rented this year!"

Mrs. Judge's Past.

Mrs. J. Frank Judge is easily the best skater in the smart set, and she is the envied of all the tyros on the ice. Mrs. Judge is very popular in the Blingum set, and is teaching her friends, but, as she says: "One must have an Eastern past, or at least a 'cold' past to achieve genuine skill."

This is not the season when every one goes around congratulating fellow members of the temperate zone. The fad for ice skating has put a halo on a snow-bound childhood.

Beautiful Tea Garden Benefit at Coronado.

An "Evening in Japan" for the benefit of the Navy League will be held in Marsh's Japanese tea garden at Coronado, on the evening of May 18th, from six to ten o'clock, when a buffet supper will be served by some sixty members of the younger society set in Japanese costumes. The attractive tea garden will be a veritable fairyland, illuminated by thousands of Japanese lanterns, with music furnished by the band from the U. S. S. San Diego. Fortune tellers in attractive Japanese booths, and a full moon at that time will add to the brilliancy of the affair. The prestige of the names of those interested in this notable function assures success. Mrs. Walter Hamlin Duppe, Mrs. Gale Thompson, Mrs. George T. Newhall, Mrs. Ashley Robertson, Miss Francis Stewart, Mrs. Claus Speckels, Mrs. Percival Thompson, and many other members of Coronado's fashionable set will be sponsors for this affair. Invitations and completed plans will be announced later.

New President of Mills College.

The Board of Trustees of Mills College of Oakland, California, announces the election of Aurelia Henry Reinhardt of the University of California, to the presidency of the college. Mrs. Reinhardt is well known as a university extension lecturer on English literature of the California Federation of Women's Clubs. She is a life member of the Association of Collegiate Alumnae, a member of the Town and Gown Club of Berkeley, of the Prytanean and English Club of the University of California. Mrs. Reinhardt, after graduating from the University of California in 1898, taught in the English department of the University of Idaho. In 1901-3 she was a scholar and fellow in English in the Graduate School of Yale University. While at Yale she edited and translated "The Monarchia of Dante Alighieri, and this publication is now a college text book. Later she held a European fellowship. While in residence at Oxford University in England, she edited and published Epicoene, or The Silent Woman, by Ben Jonson, for which she received the degree of Doctor of Philosophy from Yale University in 1905. The new president of Mills College is a member of Phi Beta Kappa, of the Dante Society of America, and of the Concordance Society of America. A Californian by birth, but of New England ancestry, she is interested in the Daughters of the American Revolution, of which she is a chapter regent. She married Dr. George F. Reinhardt, Professor of Hygiene of the University of California, in 1909. He passed away seven years later.

Dixie Club Will Give Ball at Palace.

Patriotic costumes, in a combination of 1860 crinoline styles and the newest modes, will be worn at the Southern ball, which will be given at the Palace Hotel this evening (Saturday) to provide funds for the National Service Woman's training school to be established at the Presidio next month. The affair has been planned by the Dixie Club of California. Uniformed officers of the National Guard will act as escorts for thirty soldierettes attired in the khaki costumes which have been officially selected for the training school. The California Grays will provide escort for an equal number of Dixie belles, who will appear in crinoline gowns and poke bonnets. Premium tables may be reserved in the Palm Court and ballroom, with supper at $2 per cover. Reservations in the Rose Room, where service will be a la carte, will be made without extra charge. Tickets are on sale at the Palace Hotel, $1.

Preceding the usual attractive matinee dansante on the ocean terrace of the Hotel del Coronado, this week, the children of the Beach school gave an unusually entertaining spring festival and May-pole dance on the west green of the grounds. A large crowd of smart society people enjoyed the spectacle. Special social entertainments of all kinds are regularly programmed by the resourceful management to decorate the rounds of enjoyment at the big hotel.

Plans are being formulated for a garden fete at Coronado in aid of the Coronado Chapter of the Women's Branch of the Navy League. The affair will take place within three weeks, probably at Hotel del Coronado. Mrs. Ashley H. Robertson, wife of Captain Robertson, commanding officer of the U. S. S. MISS COOLBRITH HONORED BY HIGH SCHOOL.

A notable celebration was held at the Fremont High School, Oakland, April 28th, with Miss Ina Donna Coolbrith as guest of honor. The occasion was the presentation of the poet laureate's picture to the school by the Parent Teachers' association, an active organization of 165 members, the largest one of its kind in Northern California.

First, a luncheon was tendered Miss Coolbrith by the faculty, a unique one, inasmuch as the cooking was done by the domestic science class of the school and served daintily. The exercises in the assembly hall followed. When Miss Coolbrith entered, the entire audience of eleven hundred arose and applauded vigorously as she took her seat. After music by the school, the principal, Mr. E. Morris Cox, gave a short and felicitous expression of his appreciation of the honor paid Fremont by the presence of Miss Coolbrith. Mrs. Jellica, a graduate of the school who is gaining honors in the musical world, sang the Needham setting of the poet's famous verse, "In Blossom Time." So sweetly was it sung, and with such joyous abandon of jubilant youth, that the charming vocalist was compelled to yield to an insistent encore, after which Mrs. Marion Taylor was introduced and gave an outline sketch of Miss Coolbrith's life preparatory to presenting her to the audience an address in which due honor was given to the historic magazine, "Overland Monthly," founded by the brilliant Bret Harte in 1868, and with whom Miss Coolbrith served as assistant editor.

Miss Coolbrith's address was punctuated with bits of adventure; side-lights were thrown on the picturesque Indian; Jim Beckwourth, the famous scout, was referred to, and, above all, most interesting anecdotes were told concerning her distinguished associates of former days. Mark Twain was referred to as better-looking in later life than in his early manhood. Reference was also made to Kipling's tribute to Charles Warren Stoddard, one of the Golden Gate trinity, in which he stated that of the three who were famed for writing of the South Sea Islands, Robert Louis Stevenson, Hermann Melville and Stoddard, the last mentioned was the greatest. She also said that Prentice Mulford was the Father of New Thought.

Mrs. Grasser, retiring president of the Parent Teachers' association, followed with a very graceful speech, culminating in the unveiling of a large and handsome picture of the poet laureate, and the exercises closed with cheer by the audience.

RECORD BREAKING RAILWAY RECEIPTS.

Reports issued in Washington this week show that the record-breaking volume of traffic carried by American railways in February was more than surpassed during March. For ninety-four lines, net revenues were 35 per cent greater than in February, 40 per cent greater than in March, 1915, and totaled $53,236,171, or $425 per mile. The increase was greatest in the East, net revenues showing a gain of 59 per cent over March, 1915, as compared with a 30 per cent gain for Western roads.

—Under the new Comstock reconstruction arrangement, with the Union shaft open to the 2,500 foot level the air will go to the lower workings of the Union and Sierra Nevada, passing at the 2,500 foot level into the Ophir workings, where extraction is in progress on the 2,300, 2,400, 2,500 and 2,700 foot levels. The outlet is through the Ophir shaft, so that air may be driven through the Union and Combination shafts—the latter carrying also the pumping system. Thus hoisting is made possible through the Union shaft for all the north-end workings. Neither Symmes nor Slosson would essay an estimate of the probable reduction in operating costs, although this reduction was one of the reasons for carrying out this extensive work. It was officially stated, however, for the first time, that the actual value of the bullion shipped since December 15, 1915, from a territory that was assumed to have been thoroughly explored by Fair and his associates in the early '80's was $191,412.

—It is understood that the business of the California Wine Association is running within 6 per cent of its record and very much in excess of 1915, which was an off year. By the consolidation of cellars, both in this State and the East, together with other savings, operating expenses are running about $250,000 a year less than during the period of the former management. The floating debt, which amounted to $4,500,000 when the present management took over the affairs of the association, had been cut down to $2,225,000. Liquid assets amount to $9,000,000.

—Standard Oil of California has declared its regular quarterly dividend of $2.50 per share, payable June 15th to stockholders of May 20th. This is the 30th dividend of the company.

—General Motors' earnings for eight months, increase, $7,418,458; equal to 105 per cent on common stock, or at an annual rate of 160 per cent.

—Europe's purchases of war materials in the United States total $340,000,000 since hostilities began.

—A Congressman received almost daily letters from a constituent asking for garden-seed, with emphasis on peas. The demand for peas got so heavy that the Congressman was moved to write this letter: “I am sending you a half-dozen more packages of peas as requested. Say, what are you trying to do down there, plant the whole State in peas?” The reply came a few days later. It read: “No, I'm not planting them, but they make bully soup. Send along some more.”—Kansas City Star.

"Children of Hope."

Stephen Whitman's new novel tells the story of Aurelius Goodchild, of Zenasville, Ohio, and his three lovely daughters, Aglaia, Euphrosyne and Thalia—the "three graces"—who, having come into a legacy of $100,000, set out to win in Europe the goals of their various ambitions. Aurelius, as quaint and lovable as Don Quixote himself, inventor, poet, photographer, piano tuner, portrait painter, botanist, chemist, shabby-genteel and imperturbably romantic amateur in a hundred fields; Aglaia, thirty, dreaming of opera; Euphrosyne, twenty-five, with George Elliot in mind, determined to be a great novelist; and Thalia, twenty, filled with emulation of Rosa Bonheur—these are the principal characters. Paris and other parts of the continent, and especially Florence, form the setting of the story. This attractive and original family meet with many adventures in Europe. Singing and painting masters, pension keepers, fellow travelers, waiters, impostors, an endless procession of types, are attracted by their charm or their money. Above all, young men from the four corners of the world gather about the engaging daughters of Aurelius, and make off with them one by one. These and the old world background so skillfully wrought by the author form the elements of a kaleidoscopic narrative which can be described as equally romantic and realistic.

The Right Not to Laugh.

If one were to accuse you of poisoning your grandmother you would presumably smile in an unruffled fashion and go about your affairs without feeling any burden of accusation. But if one accused you of lacking a sense of humor, you would first of all resent it indignantly; and furthermore, for an indefinite time to come you would be conscious of a desire to disprove the charge, scrutinizing anxiously every phrase that might conceal some subtle hidden test, emitting now and then forced laughs on suspicion. Perhaps you boast your emancipation in many fields where public opinion customarily rules. You wear a straw hat when you please; you object to the insignia of mourning; you flaunt your readiness to discuss any subject in mixed company; you do or do not serve butter at your dinner table; yet you are afraid you may not laugh in the right places. Many a one who proclaims his right to individuality of opinion fears to assert an equally inalienable right not to laugh. Deep in his heart he dreads the withering accusation that he lacks a sense of humor.—Burges Johnson in Harper's Magazine for April.

"Come Out of the Kitchen."

This is an unusually delightful comedy romance that will hold the reader from cover to cover, an Alice Duer Miller inspiration. The idea is original, and few readers will be able to guess the ingenious plot till well along to the close. Mrs. Miller's popularity in this line has been emphasized already by her success of "Blue Arch," "Less Than Kin," and other novels. The scene is an old Virginia manor house; the story is what befalls when Burton Crane, a young New Yorker, rents the house for the hunting season, and is confronted with the altogether surprising "servants" who go with it—one of whom, the "pocket Venus," who presides over the kitchen, rapidly assumes a highly important position in the narrative.

"The Child Andrea."

Scandinavia regards this book, by Karin Michaelis as a classic, and indeed so do many discerning readers of other nations, for it has been translated into several languages and occupies a prominent position in international literature. The translation and prefatory note is by J. Nelsen Laurvik, who is so much for the cause of art at the recent Exposition. Corra Harris, who ranks high among the contemporary writers and critics, sets forth simply and plainly the object of the author. "The story, giving the spirit process of development by which a girl is changed into a maiden, was written by a Danish novelist, and is based on the study of a real girl. . . But the story is a classic differing entirely from the vulgar self-abortions published by some women writers in this country who imagine that they are maidens because of a merely physical integrity.

Robert Herrick, Professor of English Literature in the University of Chicago, contributes a fine story of the war to the May Scribner. "The Conscript Mother," a story of Italy, is a touching picture of what war has meant and is meaning to mothers all over the world.

Miss S. T. Prideaux writes about "Italian Picture Frames" in The Field of Art in the May Scribner. The illustrations include some famous examples.

In reply to an advertisement in The Literary Digest, the Funk & Wagnalls Company some days ago received a remarkable book order, showing how far that excellent periodical reaches, and into what unusual conditions. The order came from a prisoner of war in Siberia, and as if almost in irony it called for a copy of Sherwin Cody's volume, "How to Deal with Human Nature in Business." Perhaps the man wanting this book believes that human nature will much abound in business when this war ends, and that then he will not remain a prisoner.

THE UNATTAINED.

In what fair realm thou dwell'st apart,
Beyond the starry gleam,
I may not know—I only know
I met thee in my dream.

O vision rare of light and grace,
Within my heart enshrined!
Thy counterpart in earthly guise
I seek but may not find.

Yet though my quest be fruitless e'er,
Heaven doth more softly beam,
And earth hath fairer grown because
I met thee in my dream.

—Jean Rudolph.

IRVIN S. COBB DESCRIBES KENTUCKY.

In the May American Magazine Irvin S. Cobb writes about his native State as follows: "Of late, Kentucky has gone in less for pistol toting and more for better schools; for fewer homicides and a greater number of good roads. Yet in her essentials she is what she always has been. She leads the planet and the subdivisions thereof in the production of chewing tobacco and Bourbon distillations, which age in the wood, or would do so were it not for the demands of the New York clubs. Likewise, she leads in fine, fast horses; in hemp, although not so much hemp since the electric chair came into common use and the lynchings began to fall off; in corn bread, without any sugar in it; in hog jowl and turnip greens; in ancestors; in colonels who inherited the title or had it wished on them; in poets—not all of our poets write poetry, but all of them think it; in silver-tongued orators; in the proportionate number of latchstrings hanging on the outside; in the use of doormats with the word 'Welcome' on them; in pretty girls with soft voices and tiny feet and flirtatious souls; in men who believe that Kentucky has the fairest skies, the softest landscapes, the deepest waterways, the clearest rills, the finest people and the greatest undeveloped possibilities in natural wealth, and are willing to fight you to prove it.

"Within her own borders she excels in the ritualistic mint julep and the high-church ham. It takes three years to cure a Kentucky ham properly. The trouble is, that so few persons who have ever tasted one can wait that long."

SCHILLER'S VERSATILITY.

The following story, which appears in The Westminster Gazette, London, is going the rounds of the continental papers. That it has been copied in various Teutonic papers shows that the war has not killed their sense of humor.

A German and a Dane met recently in Schiller's house in Weimar. As they stood gazing reverently on the scene, the German, swelling with pride, remarked to his fellow-visitor: "So this is where our national poet, Schiller, lived."

"Pardon me," said the other: "not national, but international."

"How so?" asked the German, with surprise.

"Why, consider his works," the Dane replied. He wrote Mary Stuart for the English, The Maid of Orleans for the French, Egmont for the Dutch, William Tell for the Swiss—

"And what did he write for the Germans, pray?" broke in the other.

Pat came the Dane's answer: "For the Germans he wrote 'The Robbers.'"—Exchange.

Plans for San Francisco Speedway Maturing

Since the announcement was made a couple of weeks ago that this city was about to be provided with an up-to-date one mile automobile speedway, public interest in the project has greatly increased, so much so that the officials of the California Speedway Association, the organization that is planning and handling the speedway proposition, are besieged with inquiries from people in all walks of life seeking information regarding the new racing course.

With the incorporation of the speedway association last week and the opening of the new offices of the association on the main floor of the Mills Building, definite steps towards the actual work of planning and building the new motor racing course may be said to be under way.

Though the officials of the association have several excellent sites in mind on which to locate the new auto race course, and new ones are being offered each day, they have given no hint as to just where the track will be located. Those who are more or less familiar with the sentiment of the directors of the California Speedway Association, state, however, that a site not very far outside of San Francisco, with both railroad and electric car transportation facilities is being favorably considered, and that within a short time announcement of the site selected is likely to be made.

McDonald & Kahn, the well known architects and engineers, have been appointed consulting engineers, and will plan and superintend the building of the new speedway. The $500,000 stadium at Syracuse, New York, was planned by this firm, as were also a number of other big projects, so that they will bring with them to bear on their work for the speedway a wealth of experience.

The enthusiastic reception that has been accorded the speedway scheme by San Francisco automobile dealers, as well as the general public, has greatly encouraged the promoters, and they state that the success of the undertaking has been assured. As soon as the site selection has been made and plans drawn for the track and grounds, active work on construction will start.

Eddie O'Donnell Wins Raisin Classic

Last Saturday the 300 mile Raisin Classic, which resolved itself into an elimination rather than a speed contest, was won by Eddie O'Donnell, driving a Dusenbergs. The time was four hours fifty-four minutes and one-third second, an average speed of a fraction over sixty-one miles an hour. The largest number of entrants that have faced a starter on the Pacific Coast since the Vanderbilt cup race lined up to start the 300 mile grind. Fifteen of the seventeen cars entered started at fifteen second intervals shortly before 1:45.

Earl Cooper, driving a Stutz, was disqualified in the 182d mile after leading for six laps around the seven-mile course, for changing mechanics without permission of the referee.

The ruling of Referee Walker, backed by E. J. Cheffins, representative of the A. A. A., met with disfavor of the crowd, and a mob, seemingly bent on venting their displeasure on Walker, had to be kept in check by the soldier guards of the course. Until his disqualification, Cooper was driving a great race. His engine was tuned to high speed, and it appeared that, barring accidents, he would win.

Almost from the start of the race the toll on engines and tires of the cars was heavy. The road over which the drivers speeded was in many places soft, in others ruts shook the very vitality of the cars. But six of the fifteen starters finished.

O'Donnell, the winner, drove a steady race throughout. He was leading at the end of the tenth, fifteenth and twentieth laps, and from then on.

At the 210th mile but 60½ miles an hour was being made by the leaders. Considerable dissatisfaction was openly expressed by drivers, men prominent in motordom and spectators, concerning the methods of P. J. Walker, referee, and E. J. Cheffins, A. A. A. representative of San Francisco, in conducting the race. This feeling was intensified by the disqualification of Earl Cooper. It is contended there is no rule specifying that the substitution of only a mechanic is sufficient for the disbaring of a driver. Usually a time penalty is imposed only.

Jim Parsons in a Stutz took second money, 4 minutes and 4 seconds behind the winner. Third and fourth places were taken by Frank Elliott (Gordon Special), and Clyde Roads (Studebaker), respectively.

New Road to Yosemite

Motorists in every section of the State are keenly interested in the proposed new highway into the Yosemite Valley, which, if constructed, will establish a direct route from Mariposa to El Portal, tying up with the Merced-Mariposa link of the State highway now under construction, and give tourists a road into the peer of all National parks, the steepest grade of which will not exceed four and one-half per cent.

Already the course of the proposed road has been surveyed and staked. Its final construction depends upon the successful passage of the $15,000,000 highway bonds issue which will come up for adoption by the people of the State at the November elections. A tentative apportionment of $350,000 has been set aside for the building of the road. With that sum of money a good road may be constructed, but it is said it will require about $200,000 additional to bring the proposed road up to standard State highway construction.

California Fifth in 1915 Car Purchases

Statistics prepared by Fred H. Caley, secretary of the Cleveland Automobile Club, and submitted at the annual meeting of the Ohio Automobile Association, showed that the State of Ohio purchased 58,502 cars during 1915, which was the largest number sold in any State in the Union. According to the statistics, New York was second with 56,671 cars; Illinois third, with 51,150 cars; Pennsylvania fourth, with 43,588 cars, and California next, with 40,700 cars.

March Auto Shipment a Record

Shipments of automobiles during March, 1916, were the biggest for that month that the automobile industry has ever known—amounting to 28,600 carloads, as compared with 17,192 in March, 1915, and 23,809 in February, 1916, the best previous record.

Six thousand of these carloads were made in box cars by taking off the fenders and covering with tarpaulin.

The shortage of freight cars is reported just as bad as ever by the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, which held its monthly meeting last Saturday.

At this meeting the chamber voted the indorsement of the action taken by the New York Automobile Dealers' Association against examining, and licensing all owners of automobiles, believing this measure would fall short of accomplishing what its advocates claimed it would do.

Another Record Broken of Sheepshead

Last Tuesday Ralph Mulford broke the world's record at Sheepshead Bay in a Hudson Super-six stock chassis, covering eighteen hundred and nineteen miles in twenty-four hours. The fastest lap was made in eighty-nine miles per hour, and the average for the entire distance of eighteen hundred and nineteen miles was seventy-six miles per hour. The car was equipped with Silvertown Cord tires, and only one replacement, at fifteen hundred and twenty miles, was made, but this change was merely done as a matter of precaution, as there was nothing the matter with the tires. Mulford sat at the wheel continuously for twenty-four hours, covering the entire distance. The best previous record was made by S. F. Edge in June, 1907, at Brooklands track, England, with six cylinder Napier covering fifteen hundred and eighty-one miles in twenty-four hours. Mulford, therefore, beat the best previous record for continuous twenty-four hours' run by two hundred and thirty-eight miles. This is an extraordinary achievement for driver, car and tires, when you realize the fastest train in the world running between New York and Chicago could not begin to sustain any such continuous speed as recorded by Mulford in his Silvertown-equipped Hudson.

The highest priced complete American stock car offered is the Pierce-Arrow 66, which is listed at $5,900. The crane-Simplex and the F. R. P. are the highest priced chassis, at $5,000. The price of the average complete car is $1,600. In Europe at least twenty makers sell stock cars at $5,000 and over. There are three times as many cars in this country as in all the rest of the world combined. There are about 3,200 cars in the world, and of this number more than 2,400,000 are in the United States.

The United States army has "fallen for" the motor truck and has fallen hard. The line of communication with General Pershing's army in Mexico is being maintained by motor trucks, and every pound of rations for soldiers and horses is being hauled on them. General Funston, who is in general command, has just requisitioned the War Department for 270 additional motor trucks. If the General gets these in a hurry, he will be doing something more than some commercial buyers have been able to accomplish. In this case, however, they should be furnished to him at all sacrifices.

The horse may as well make up his mind to retire gracefully from the business of helping to put out fires. Statistics collected in 1914 for 315 cities showed more than 1,000 more pieces of horse-drawn apparatus than were owned by 670 cities reporting this year, and this latter number includes all the cities in the first report. Inquiry as to what apparatus would be purchased this year in the same cities showed 808 contemplated purchases of motor apparatus against only seven for horse-drawn apparatus. At this rate, manifestly, the horse may soon be one with the hipparion, for all the fire departments care. Speed when in use and a complete loss of appetite in the firehouse are the two things which give the motor its great advantage. To these can be added cleanliness, which is no small matter in residence neighborhoods, and so the horse bows and prepares to retire from a field in which he has won deserved glory.

There are eleven automobiles in Iceland, and five in British North Borneo. There are 15,000 cars owned in Providence, R. I., which has a population of 225,000. Los Angeles, with a population of 450,000, has over 40,000 cars.

1916 Yosemite Auto Rules are Liberal

All roads will be open to motor cars into the Yosemite Valley this season. It will be possible for tourists to enter and leave the valley by either of the Wawona, Big Oak Flat or Counter-ville routes. The following special rules have been issued by the Department of the Interior governing the operation of automobiles on the roads in the Yosemite during the 1916 season:

Entrances—Automobiles may enter and leave the park by any of the entrances, viz., Tioga Pass, Aspen Valley, Crane Flat, Merced Grove, El Portal, Wawona and Mariposa Grove.

Roads—The Tioga road is open from July 15th to September 30th.

The Big Oak Flat road is open from May 15th to November 1st.

The El Portal and valley roads are open all the year, except occasionally during the winter, when there may be some snow on the floor of the valley for a short period.

Direction of Travel—Automobiles may go only over named roads, and only in the direction the arrows point on the automobile guide map of Yosemite Valley.

Driving—Careful driving is demanded of all persons using the roads. The government is in no way responsible for any kind of accident, and cautions all persons against using, except during hours of daylight, the Big Oak Flat road between Stations No. 1 and No. 2, and the Wawona Road between Stations No. 3 and No. 4.

Fines—On the El Portal Road, the Big Oak Flat Road between Gentry and Floor of Valley, and on the Wawona Road between Fort Monroe and Floor of Valley, a fine or ejection from the park, or both, will be imposed, in the discretion of the supervisor of the park, for being earlier or later than the specified time limits indicated below.

Big Oak Flat and Wawona Roads—On the Big Oak Flat Road between Gentry (Station No. 2) and Floor of Valley (Station No. 1) 4½ miles, and on the Wawona Road between Fort Monroe (Station No. 3) and Floor of Valley (Station No. 4) 3 miles, automobiles may go east, down grade, only on the odd hours, speed not to exceed 8 miles per hour, and may go west, up grade, only on even hours, speed not to exceed 12 miles per hour. They must travel between the stations within the hour, but shall not pass between Stations No. 1 and No. 2 on Big Oak Flat Road, and between Stations No. 3 and No. 4 on Wawona Road, in less than 30 minutes.

Accidents—If, however, because of accident or stop for any reason, automobiles do not reach the next station within the hour, they shall be parked off the road, and when that is impossible, on the outer edge of the road, and wait there for the next hour schedule going in their direction.

El Portal Road—Between El Portal and Pohono Bridge, go in either direction.

Bridalveil Road—Go in either direction when going over Wawona Road; otherwise go east, or up-stream only.

Cathedral Rocks, Pohono and Happy Isle Road—Go east or up-stream only.

El Capitan, Royal Arch and Black Spring Roads—Go west, or down-stream only.

Sentinel, Ahwahnee and Lost Arrow Roads—Go in either direction.

Le Conte Road—Go north only across Merced River from Happy Isle Road to Royal Arch Road.

Mirror Lake Road—Go north only from Happy Isle Bridge to Royal Arch Road.

Stops on Floor of Valley—If for any reason the automobile is stopped, it shall be parked off on left-hand edge of road.

Speed—Automobile shall not exceed 15 miles per hour on the El Portal Road or any roads on the floor of Yosemite Valley east of Pohono Bridge; and when passing any group of people, or through the village, and crossing bridges the speed shall be reduced to not more than eight miles per hour.

Penalties—Violation of any of the foregoing regulations for government of the park will cause revocation of automobile permit, will subject the owner of the automobile to immediate ejection from the park, and be cause for refusal to issue new automobile permit to the owner without prior sanction in writing from the Secretary of the Interior.

Damages—The owners of automobiles will be responsible for any damages caused by accident or otherwise.

Garages—In Yosemite Valley automobiles may be housed free of charge in the public shelter or at Camp Curry, Camp Ahwahnee, Camp Lost Arrow and Yosemite Falls Camp. The garage operated by the Desmond Park Service Company is equipped for the housing of automobiles, as well as general repair work, parts, supplies, etc., at prices regulated by the department.

Renstrom Secures Grant Agency

One of the most interesting announcements of the present automobile season was made last Saturday by Frank O. Renstrom to the effect that he had secured the Grant car for this territory. This is one of the latest popular-priced six-cylinder cars to be placed on the Western market, and, according to the plans being made by Renstrom, it will prove one of the strongest competitors for this class of the automobile business.

The new car features the six-cylinder motor, stream line body design, and valve in head motor, typical of the latest developments of the automobile industry.

The size and power of the car are among its most important features. In fact, the Grant is one of the largest of the popular priced cars displayed in this city.

In making the announcement of this new entry into the local motor car trade, Renstrom said:

"The trend of the automobile industry has been toward the light six-cylinder type of car during the last few years, and for that reason I decided to enter this class of competition.

"The Grant car, although comparatively new, has created a great deal of interest in the East, and promises to be a big factor in the popular priced car trade throughout the United States.

"There are a number of new features in this car. The width of the tonneau is greater than in the average popular priced car, while its hill climbing ability and economy of operation should make the car popular in this territory."

Chalmers Makes Low Record in Gasoline Test

Hampered by every brand of bad weather, 670 Chalmers dealers in all sections of the United States and Canada celebrated Acceleration day on Monday, April 17, by dealing the high cost of motoring a solar plexus blow.

A total of 14,961 miles on 670 gallons of gasoline, or a grand average of 22.33 miles to the gallon, was the result of the day's tests throughout the country. The records were made in the face of rain, snow and sleet storms and prevailing high winds. In addition to the economy run, tests were made for acceleration, including standing and rolling starts. An average of 6.5 seconds was established for going through the gears to 25 miles an hour from a standing start. The car used in each case was a standard Chalmers Six-30 touring car.

Scripps-Booth an International Car

No American motor car has proved to possess so extended an appeal to buyers of high class all over the world as has the Scripps-Booth luxurious light car over the period of its first year of sales.

The Scripps-Booth now has representation amongst the highest class of dealers and owners as far north as Trondhjem, Norway, in the land of the Midnight Sun, to Duncdin, the farthest south city in New Zealand.

Rangoon and Calcutta, India; Tokio and Yokohama, Japan; Buenos Ayrcs, South America; Cape Town, South Africa, and Sydney, Australia, together with nearly every principal city in the world, outside of the enclosed war zone, has taken its quota of cars this year, in spite of war conditions and shipping costs, which in many cases exceeded the price of the car.

In the social centers like London, Paris, Petrograd and Rome, Scripps-Booth are especially in evidence, and have been sold in large numbers.

The greatest surprise which the Scripps-Booth Company has received has been that practically one-third of its output has been taken by foreign countries, though all conditions have been against exports in other cars during this period.

FASHION'S FADS AND FRILLS

Although the fashions are still undergoing changes—and before summer is fairly here, we shall probably find many novelties which have as yet not put in an appearance—for street wear, at least, styles are established. The panniers, bustles, ruffles, wired hip pockets, and other weird effects are relegated to the house for evening and afternoons.

The Morning Walk on the Avenue.

One is gratified at the simple, trim street suits and the smart little frocks of taffeta and other silks which greet our eyes in a morning walk on the avenue. The jackets of the serge, gabardine and novelty wool suits are hip or knee length, fitted well through the shoulders and at the waist, which is usually a trifle raised, and are finished with full basques. The skirts, many of them, are of the circular gored models, and hang full and gracefully from the top of a high inside belt. The effect of these jackets, worn with this type of skirt, or with one of the numerous pleated models which are equally popular, is exceedingly smart; and more to the point, perhaps, most becoming to almost all types of figure.

Styles which Conceal Either Slenderness or Avoirdupois.

The spring and summer styles, many of them, seem to be designed with the idea of concealing slenderness, but at the same time, fortunately, they serve equally well to conceal an overabundance of flesh. For instance, let us consider the fitted jacket, with waist raised slightly above the normal, and the full, fan-tail coat, pleated or flared; such a model, while softening to angles, also straightens out curves most effectively. These coats, originated by Mme. Paquin, will in all probability be the features of the spring and summer tailored suits of serge, linen or novelty sport materials.

The Charming Summer Silk Frocks.

We have too thoroughly enjoyed the comfort and becomingness of the simple one-piece frock of silk to let it disappear from view even for a summer. They are being used for the street, for the house, and for evening wear this season, being even more popular than for the past season or two. Plain, crisp taffetas are used in their fashioning, soft crepes and crepe de Chines, foulards and printed silks in checked and flowered effects. Mme. Callot sends us a charming little model of plain navy blue taffeta, combined with Pompadour silk; it has a full, gathered skirt of the plain blue, and a quaint corsage and bustle effect of the Pompadour silk, in its soft, delicate colorings. There is a quaint laced bodice which lends a dainty touch. The sleeves and body portion of the waist are of white lawn, and the belt-girdle is laced over the bust and held in place with shoulder straps.

There are any number of interesting sleeveless coatee or three piece dress effects which strongly appeal to many. These are of taffeta or satin, and are to a great extent replacing the short capes introduced a little earlier.

Belts and Girdles Again in Favor.

One of the most interesting details of the smart little summer frocks, both of silk and wash fabrics, is the girdle. This is made of ribbon, one of the flowered or figured taffetas, an attractive Oriental silk, or a metal embroidered novelty; and for the serge frock or suit, the various leathers, suede, patent leather, buckskin or a novelty of novelties, antelope skin. The ordinary silk girdle now measures at least four inches in width at its narrowest point, and at its widest often from nine to twelve. The widest point is directly in front, the point as a rule coming down over the front of the skirt. In some instances the point extends both up on the corsage and down below; this, of course, is nothing more or less than the quaint, fascinating bodice of our grandmothers' days. Others of the ribbon girdles are trimmed at the ends with wide sash ends, gathered straight to the belt and forming a half tunic effect, with ribbon ruching at the bottom; or again, the sash ends are attached to the girdle at the sides, hang to the knees and are turned back on themselves and caught at the back. Suspender trimmings, sash bows, rosettes, and all forms of ribbon trimmings are tremendously favored.

Narrow belts of leather, antelope, suede, buck and other soft-finished qualities, are used as a finish to serge frock or tailored suit. Wool embroidery plays an important part on girdles, too, being deftly introduced to lend a note of sharp contrast to suit or frock.

A very popular Russian blouse dress is illustrated here, fashioned in crepe Georgette and satin; it is sashed with the Georgette, in a graceful knotted girdle. The frock of serge and organdy is an adaptation of Poiret's Pearl Grise, exhibited at the Plaza some months ago; it is a model that is well liked and becoming.

The Background of the War Zone

"The present war must end at Verdun," General Petain credits the Kaiser with saying, but in war, misquotation is part of the game. There is nothing improbable, however, in the theory that a striking success for the Germans at Verdun would have been followed by a strong bid for peace.

Dr. Liebknecht's alleged discovery that Austria was forced into the war by the Potsdam party, against the wishes of Vienna and Budapest, is chiefly important as further evidence of the gradual awakening of the German people to the true inwardness of the war's beginning. Outside of Germany and Austria the view now exploited by the leader of the socialist minority is an old story.

The program of the world court congress, which is to meet at Carnegie Hall, New York, in May, for a three days' session, will be limited, according to Dr. John Wesley Hill, "to the one topic of promoting a true international court of justice, without reference to any issue which deals with conditions prior to the end of the war and the present needs of adequate defense." This is a wise decision of the promoters. The project is a big one, with great possibilities, and it is desirable that none who favor it shall be kept from contributing to its accomplishment by issues apart from the main purpose. The congress should show that there is less division among Americans than some suppose on the question of real and permanent international peace.

The German situation should be handled without reference to the Mexican situation, and the Mexican situation without reference to the German situation. The suspicion may be well founded that plotters are at work in Mexico, on the assumption that Germany would be helped by the further bedevilment of our Mexican relations; the only way to checkmate them is to let neither situation be much influenced by the other.

The pope holds, it is said, that the hostile attitude of the Belgian people toward the German occupants of the country handicaps those who are working for the resurrection of Belgium. The pope is a competent observer; but suppose the Belgians received their captors with open arms. Wouldn't that be taken as proof that they welcomed the new regime? However, the fate of Belgium must ultimately be decided by the peace conference, and very likely with little regard to present conditions in that country.

War now is costing the nations of Europe more than $90,000,000 a day, according to estimates prepared by the Mechanics and Metals National Bank. The bank estimates the cost per hour to England, France and Russia as $2,500,000, while to the Teutonic empires the cost is in excess of $1,000,000. The total cost of the war, if it is still in progress on August 1st next, will have been $45,000,000,000. Of this sum, Great Britain's share will have been $11,600,000,000, Germany's a trifle less, and France's $9,250,000,000.

"Some day we'll be telephoning through the air without wires." "Maybe. But won't it seem queer to have an operator call back to you and say: 'The air is busy now?'"—Washington Star.

INSURANCE

The Industrial Accident Commission has just issued figures giving the number of deaths in the industries of California during the year 1915, and draws attention to the list as compared with the statistics for 1914. In the latter year there were 691 workers killed, and in 1915, 533 workers gave their lives to the industries of this State. The following table shows the reductions in the death list by occupations (the word "Service" includes employees of men in the professions, as well as those engaged in hotel service, apartment houses, restaurants, domestic servants and amusement or entertainment employees):

	1915	1914
Agriculture	55	62
Construction	78	115
Extraction (Mining and Quarrying)	71	86
Manufacturing	99	121
Service	25	24
Trades	20	24
Transportation and Public Utilities	172	239
Unknown	13	20
Total	533	691

The effective work in behalf of "Safety First" has been accomplished as a result of cordial support from employers and employecs, the public generally, and the press of California. It is a striking result to be able to show a reduction of 158 in the death roll of 1915 as compared to 1914. That this reduction comes as the result of careful planning is shown by the decrease in the main industries of the State, excepting Service, where the record shows an increase of one death in 1915 over 1914. It is the hope of the Industrial Accident Commission that statistics will show a substantial reduction for each succeeding year. The aim is that no preventable death shall take place. The 158 lives speak in terms of breadwinners saved to wives and little children, and an enrichment to the State's citizenship.

As a result of a conference between local representatives of fire insurance companies in San Jose and the executive committee of the Pacific Board, such assurances of co-operation in the correction of objectionable conditions in that city were given as to warrant the executive committee in postponing the date of the proposed fifteen per cent advance in rates to August 1st, to afford an opportunity of remedying the situation.

The Pacific Department of the Citizens of Missouri, Reliance of Philadelphia and Standard of Hartford, under the management of C. C. Kinney, has been consolidated with the general agency of Marsh & McLennan representing the Northwestern Fire & Marine, Hamburg Bremen and Safeguard of New York. The underwriting will be under the management of Mr. Kinney. Territory covered will be California, Oregon, Washington, Utah, Nevada, Arizona, British Columbia and Alaska. Lines, fire, marine, liability, automobile and surplus line insurance.

The city officials of Tulare, Cal., have determined to carry their own compensation insurance. This announcement was made after representatives of the Industrial Accident Commission had demanded a premium of $399 annually. It is the intention of the city council to make an annual appropriation for the purpose of creating a reserve which it is believed will result in a saving.

STRIKING SCENES IN THE WAR ZONE

Bomb attacks used by British in routing Irish rebels in Dublin. The Irish rebels, who had intrenched themselves in St. Stephen's Green, Dublin, have been routed from their position by a vigorous bomb attack directed against them by the British. The General Post Office Building in which the rebels have made their headquarters since the outbreak of the revolt, is now being besieged by the troops of the Home Government. The rioting has broken out afresh, and many women Sinn Féiners are fighting in the streets. Over four hundred rebels have been taken prisoners, and latest reports state that over 100 persons have been killed. The photograph made during the last Dublin strike, shows the rioting which took place at that time in Sackville street, the very hot-bed of the present "Revolution."

—The United Republicans were seriously disunited at the polls.

—The early summer sales are on—the fearful period when wifey sails into husband's pocketbook.

—All these prognostications as to what will happen after the war is over are as harmless as they are futile.

—Doctors proclaim sugar an energy producer. The speed at which it is climbing upward indicates that it is chock full of energy.

—"Home Industry League to Hear Wallace Hatch," says newspaper headline. It would be more fun to hear him crow or cackle.

—Beagle and bugle have been laid aside at Burlingame until Fall. So for months to come the jackrabbits will not have anything to laugh at.

—Miss Maud Coster, New York banker's daughter, is to wed an Austrian count. But the despatches negligently fail to state how much he cost 'er.

—Diplomacy consists in writing a note that leaves a loophole for the other fellow to crawl through when he writes a reply that contains a similar loophole.

—Newspaper headlines say that fifty towns in the Philippines are infected with the rinderpest. And here it's cows instead of towns that catch the pesky disease.

—Ireland's worst enemies have been put out of the way by the firing squad. And the fact is realized by all save a few fanatics of the type of those who were executed.

—Lumberman is accused by his wife of keeping up four separate establishments for four affinities. More costly than maintaining a harem, but also a lot more peaceful.

—Grain men plan to use the bulk instead of the sack method hereafter in marketing their product. They think they can bag more profits by giving the old plan the sack.

—Down East man drank eight glasses of whisky and ate a peck of clams, and died. You can lay it to the whisky or the clams, according to your views on the liquor question.

—The taxi-men are to be allowed to "bark" for custom at the ferry for sixty days as an experiment. Sixty days each would be about right for those responsible for the order.

—It is recorded that a circus giant has died of homesickness. Rather an unusual case—but think how much homesicker a giant would become than a person of ordinary size would.

—Chamber of Commerce figures show that 45,000 commuters come to San Francisco every day. Think what a glut of people there would be if they didn't also go home every day.

—The alarmists and jingoes are yelping congratulations over prospects of peace between the United States and Germany with as much fervor as if there had ever been danger of war.

—The Chicago judge who recently ruled that Bacon wrote Shakespeare has set aside his own decision. Oh, my! So the controversy, which every one thought settled, has been thrown wide open again.

—Thirty thousand San Francisco clubwomen have combined for the betterment of municipal affairs. Let them give their first attention to squelching that projected railway across Golden Gate Park.

—Hiram W. Johnson, maverick governor, must find being a non-partisan a lonesome job. True, he registered as a Progressive. But there weren't enough of that queer brand left to constitute a party.

—Nearly every day brings an account of a bombardment of "unprecedented violence." Of necessity, a limit would be reached some day if there were any limit to the imaginations of the correspondents.

—Ohio boy of eight killed his mother with a shotgun. Maybe our memory is treacherous, but it seems that in our youthful days children were brought up to know that they shouldn't do such things.

Between chasing trains, signing recall petitions and belonging to a dozen or so taxpayers' leagues and societies and associations, the average Oaklander leads a life that makes him the real tired business man.

—The despatches say that cold, statistical figures show that the government's drastic prohibitory law against opiates has not at all diminished the evil. But figures make no appeal to sumptuary law fanatics.

—Angels Camp man was shot in shoulder. Went to hospital. Recovered sufficiently to go home. Was brained with a pick-axe in bed the first night by the man who had shot him. We can't help admiring persistency.

—The uproar against the jitneys continues. But San Francisco, rich and prolific, provides automobiles for its officials. So they, having neither to walk nor to ride in public vehicles, don't know what a nuisance the jitney is. Make them walk and dodge for a week, and we shall get action.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

THE BULL MOOSE AND THIRD PARTIES.

The demise of the Bull Moose party draws attention to the fact that no third party ever attained permanency in this country though the principal or principals of each were eventually interwoven into one or both of the surviving parties, substantiating the truth of the aphorism that principles survive even when parties disappear. Ordinarily third parties are sponsored or led by "the man of the hour," some hero of events flashed in the limelight. Roosevelt, the keenest politician on this continent, lifted himself to the head of the Progressive movement by giving a stronger tug to his bootstraps than did La Follette. The leading principles of the Progressive party will be unquestionably incorporated into the platform of the Republican party as a matter of policy, in order to resolidify their voting strength. The birth of the Republican party was in a measure unique. It was confronted with a split Democratic party, headed respectively by Breckenridge and Douglas, two political giants of their day, and by a Union ticket headed by Bell, who was simply a factor. Republicanism led by Lincoln and his views of the vital issues of that period, prevailed against the old reactionary system. In the second election the issues had become so tremendously important that the leaders of other political ideas realized that smaller parties must get behind either the Republicans or Democrats to determine the great issue of a solid nation. Following the proclamation of peace, parties cropped up on all sides to furnish policies on reconstruction. In Grant's second campaign there were eight that offered tickets, including a Liberal Republican that merged third at the polls.

In a measure a "third party" is recognized as a corrective on one or both of the other parties. Such a party is usually backed by large numbers of insistent voters who are determined to write their demands into the organic law of the land. Though they may be in the minority, they keep hammering as third parties at the elections till in many cases, sooner or later, one of the two standing parties writes the demands into a convention platform, and absorbs the voters of the third party. The Abolitionists, Free Soilers, Free Democrats, Liberals, Grangers, Greenbackers, Unionists, Prohibitionists, Free Silverites, had more or less experience along these lines.

TROUBLE BREEDERS IN THIS COUNTRY.

It is evident that the representatives of the same group of calamity howlers and disturbers that are striving to pitchfork this country into trouble by intervening in Mexico have extended their designs across the border into Canada, and are endeavoring to provoke party strife there. The object is, of course, to catch the Wilson administration between two fires, provoke an alarming situation, and discredit his position and policies. A few months ago, Canada was a unit of parties in loyal spirit to serve the mother country; now parliament is divided over certain charges made in furnishing munition supplies. The same set of bogus news purveyors who are scattering wild statements regarding Mexico all over this country in order to befog and confuse the ordinary citizen of the real facts, are bestirring themselves by supplying subsidized newspapers there with stories and alleged dispatches that are specially edited to deceive Canadians regarding the true issue. Fake stories are given out that scandalous charges will soon be made against General or Colonel Blank; the charges never develop, but the worthless accusation leaves an impression. Among the insidious charges broached by the trouble breeders is one to the effect that the Stars and Stripes have been hissed frequently in Canada. Charges of a similar nature are common. But the backbone of the communities of the United States, Mexico and Canada have too much horse sense to allow the representatives of any foreign nation to bait them into strife. It is more than suspected that Villa's mad act was paid for by the agents of these trouble breeders, and though they succeeded in getting United States troops into Mexico, as they designed, no hostile act led to intervention and an uprising of the Mexican people, as they had hoped. Even the mob that was inspired by these agents to attack the small force of unprotected cavalry failed to strike the spark of strife as its commander handled the situation with consummate judgment. From time to time the designs of these foreign agents are exposed by the secret service of this country, but the efforts of the plotters continue unabated in order to impose continental troubles on America, so that she will not concern herself with what is going on abroad. Incidentally, the object sought is to discredit the Wilson administration.

A STRATEGIC RETIREMENT.

WHY PEACE IS PERCHING IN THE MIDDLE WEST.

Of the four parties in this country that hold as many views regarding peace or war, the two for war are far outnumbered by those in favor of peace, as was developed in Congress when a crucial point hovered for a moment over the horizon and then disappeared. The Middle West, the farming section of the country, is the home of peace. Unquestionably residents there reason that peace is a good bird to cultivate when it brings record high prices for grain, cattle, presents automobiles to each happy farmer, stuffs his bank account and totes him along the high road of prosperity. If the war continues much longer, Uncle Sam, in his present way of high living in the East, is likely to develop gout. For some time past the United States has had the largest stock of gold in the world. In the meantime this country has absorbed millions of dollars worth of gilt-edge American securities from Europe, and the loaning power of the Federal reserve has not been scratched. Besides this, this country has husbanded for two years the several hundreds of millions of dollars that American tourists usually spend abroad annually. With this showing and with prosperity taking on more iris hues, the grangers of the Middle West will continue to congratulate themselves that Peace still perches, and that President Wilson is still on his job at the wheel.

—One of the many big farces in the political management of this city is the "inside control" of the gambling "privileges." A certain clique, carrying voting strength at the polls, enjoys its fat emoluments. The frank and confident methods of these scaly rascals was illustrated, this week, when several of Chief White's plain clothes men made a scouting expedition into one of the pool room dens on Fifth street. While they were making bets and gathering evidence, the man in charge offered several of them $2 each if they would remain awhile, be arrested, go to jail and be bailed out, "so as to 'put over' a showing that had been framed up for a police raid." In a little while, several regular policemen in charge of that beat appeared, rounded up a number of those who had consented, and took them to jail. The usual charges have been placed against these crooked policemen. There will be a farce of a trial, and the old cinch of running the gambling dens wide open will continue. The explanation is that more influential men in the political ring than Chief White is shepherding the interests of these scaly gamblers.

—What's the use of trying to be a hero backed by "Preparedness," $500,000,000 of U. S. Treasury money, and receiving the plaudits of the nation if a man joins the naval militia, is detailed to a cruiser, and early in his new career skins the inside of his hands by sliding down a rope from the deck to a boat alongside. That is what happened Henry Stellings, and he demands part of that $500,000,000 set aside for "Preparedness" as compensation for his burning palms. Forget it, H. C., and be a good loser. You are not the only man to have an itching palm for a few bones in that $500,000,000. Men in your class would skin their palms and consciences for the advertisement alone.

—The luxurious emotions of some of San Francisco's marathon hubbies surpasses the Turks. Here is Will Isaacs, complaining to Judge Graham this week that he cannot afford to pay $75 alimony out of his $175 salary to wife No. 1 because wife No. 2 demands the full menu on her meal ticket. What nerve some men have, and what faith some women assiduously cultivate. Willie could easily make a combined Morgan-Carnegie fortune by selling electric belts, made of refuse paper, to pedestrians dodging jitneys on Market street, and wife No. 2, with her faith in man and Providence should be able to plant the standard of suffrage on the thrones of Europe within a week.

—Grand Juryman Powers and Deputy Sheriff Hefferman, who terrorized an unsophisticated sixteen year old girl with threats of their authority, apparently are members of the lame duck brigade in the present political forces of the city, for they have been unable so far to exercise the necessary "pull" to get them out of their nasty scrape. By all the irreverent powers it cannot be that the inside political ring ruling this city has come to a sense of shame that compels the members to ignore this unsavory mess and let the courts decide the accusation on the merits. The proof will appear in the condemnation passed upon them.

—Shall the "barkers" be allowed to bark at the ferry depot under the proposed amendment to the ordinance regulating taxi drivers and hotel runners at the ferry building? Our city fathers do well to consider this as an unusually ponderous problem, top-weighted and full of suspicious holes of Machiavellian duplicity. Some one is sure to get the small end of the sugar loaf if the barker is muzzled too tightly, which means of course that a tight wad will develop, and Satan save us from such a situation.

A NEW IDEA IN PERMANENT EXHIBITS.

Special clearing houses in certain lines furnish the only ready and efficient requisite, these days, to expedite satisfactorily any diversified line of trade, as is illustrated in the new permanent exhibit building materials and appliances now being handled by Messrs. Fisher and Simpson at the San Francisco Building Material Exchange at 77 O'Farrell street. These building material exchanges are a necessary development of the past twenty-five years, and justly are now regarded as necessary and permanent fixtures in all the large cities of the country. So immensely successful has the one in New York proved that a capacious twenty-five story skyscraper is now being erected for its new home.

The idea behind these exchanges is to establish a sort of permanent clearing house whereby those interested in the construction of a building, anything from a dog house to a skyscraper, may gather and view intimately the various individual materials and appliances that go into the composition of any kind of building, as well as the interior conveniences, furnishings and decorations. These exhibit exchanges therefore present in compact, artistically arranged and mechanically displayed view, samples from concrete to gems of onyx clocks, from the finest lace curtains and Persian rugs to ordinary crockery and panels painted by the best artists. In short, it is a household bazaar, an exposition in miniature. Naturally, the exhibit occupies a very large floor space to display its large assortment of choice samples offered by the leading manufacturers and artisans, and these are arranged very attractively. The prime object is to reduce to a minimum the old-time method of running all over the city to consult architects, contractors, plumbers, house furnishers and the hundred and one other factors that enter into home building. This new form of exhibit eliminates ninety-nine per cent of the old-time foot-work, worry, anxiety, uncertainty, vexation and nerve strain.

Naturally, such an exhibit appeals strongly to architects, contractors and allied callings, and to people planning to build their own homes or making alterations; householders who desire the latest devices in labor saving machinery, the newest thing in wall beds, ironing boards that disappear in the walls and the like. In short, this novel exchange furnishes in bird's-eye range the best samples and prices of practically every essential thing that goes into the construction of a building and its furnishing.

There is no charge to visitors, nor do Managers Fisher and Simpson attempt to sell anything. Their object is simply to show you the materials and appliances on exhibition, and direct you to the establishment carrying the line you may care to patronize. You do your own business direct with that establishment. Several of the leading firms in their respective lines in California and the country are represented in the partial list of permanent exhibitors, as follows:

Acme Patent Window Company, Patent Windows; Albert S. Bigley, Curtains and Draperies; Edwin G. Benkman, Ornamental Plaster; George M. Clark Company, Clark Jewel Ranges; A. J. & J. R. Cook, Leather; California Plate Glass Co., Plate Glass; W. P. Fuller & Co., Paints and Glass; P. Grassi & Co., Terrazzi and Mosaic; Hughson & Merton, Inc., Vacuum Cleaners; W. D. Freezing Repartee.

The gentle art of repartee is not confined to any particular strata in society. A young woman who was gliding over the ice the other day with one of the instructors remarked to him that it was really remarkable that so many of the young women in the Burlingame set displayed so much skill and grace on the unaccustomed skates.

"Oh, that set is used to skating on thin ice!" sniffed he.

Malcolm Whitmans Secede from the Gayest.

The conservatives down the peninsular way would not take issue with him. There are still some traditions extant in the land, and the custodians of these conventions are each year forced to render stricter account of their stewardship to each other for the inroads on their forces are formidable. For example, the older members of the Parrott, the Eyre, the Crocker and other families, frown down upon the doings of the set that has introduced standards made of elastic and guaranteed to stretch to meet the inclinations of the most unconventional. But many of the younger members of the conservative old clans find the upholding of traditions more tiresome than the modern frivolings of the gay set, and it is well nigh impossible for the conservers of the conventions to keep many of the younger element within the old-fashioned boundary lines.

But now and then the conservative forces renew their strength from unexpected quarters. It may be truthfully chronicled that Mrs. Malcolm Whitman has gone over to the conservatives, and therefore her arrival here within the next week or two will not be a signal for the gay set to start any fireworks going. Before her marriage to the New Yorker, Jennie Crocker was a dashing member of the brigade that knows how to play with fire without getting scorched. But along came Whitman, whom she had known in the East, and although many of her friends here and in New York dubbed him a "prig," he won her heart and hand, and incidentally frowned on the over-exuberance of many of her intimates, with the result that she is no longer counted with the clan that keeps Dame Gossip's dish of scandal boiling over the brim. To be sure, this dish of scandal has seldom more substance than a soufflé, but the gossips are ever ready to roll it over the tongue with savor.

Husbands and Chauffeurs.

Just now they bob their heads with tongue in the cheek, over the remark of the father of a family of married daughters, one or two members of which have been rather reckless in late years. At a dinner party at the Burlingame Country Club, one of the men guests told a story about an employment agent who rang up the chatelaine of a fair estate and said to her: "I have the ideal maid for you this time—she is the most competent and least attractive of any listed with me!"

Whereupon the stern father, who frowns down on the doings of the young married set with whom his daughters associate, answered: "That yarn was all very well a few years ago—but now, by Jove, it is the husband who would better see to it that his chauffeur is competent and unattractive! The shoe is on the other foot."

Camerons Flit Gothamwards.

Mr. and Mrs. George Cameron left unexpectedly this week for New York, where they will join Mr. and Mrs. de Young and Miss Phyllis, who have been enjoying a several weeks' stay in the metropolis. Mrs. Ferdinand Theriot (Kathleen De Young) welcomed a little daughter just a few days after her parents left for the East, and their first inclination was to return at once, but the mother and baby have been flourishing so beautifully that they decided to finish their visit in the East. The little daughter is to be named "Yvonne," which is a family name of the Theriots. Their first child, a son, was named Charles, after Mrs. Theriot's deceased brother and uncle.

Miss Marie Louise Black and Her House Guest.

Miss Josephine Marshall, a Virginia belle, who is the house guest of Miss Marie Louise Black, is the most enthusiastic visitor we have had in many a day, and her girlish delight over everything that is being done for her is in charming contrast to the frappe-d manner of so many young girls who accept everything as though it had been their due ever since the glacial period on earth.

To be sure, all kinds of lovely things have been planned for Miss Marshall and her hostess, including such an unusual jaunt as a trip into the high Sierras, tarrying for a day in the foothills, which are carpeted in all the wonder and glory of wildflowers! This week-end, Miss Black is giving a party at Del Monte for Miss Marshall—the other guests who motored down with them including the Misses Leslie Miller, Arabella Schwerin, Messrs. George Bowles, Nion Tucker, Fred Tillman, Fred Van Sicklen, Jack Neville and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Blyth. Charles N. Black, the father of the hostess, will give a stag dinner party to some thirty men, while his daughter and her young friends are week-ending at Monterey.

War Angels and their Pin Feathers.

Miss Daisy Polk leaves next week for Northern France, where she will resume the hospital work which placed her pre-eminent among the volunteers during the first months of the war. Miss Polk was visiting the Herbert Hoovers in London at the outbreak of the war, and that executive and appraising young American realized at once that Miss Polk's command of the languages and knowledge of Eupropean customs would make her an invaluable assistant in relief work. He sent her over to Germany with a group of German school girls, who were in England at the outbreak of the war, and she brought back English girls who were studying in Germany. Miss Polk made several trips of this sort, and then was put in the requisition department of the hospital service in Northern France, where she did highly efficient, but health-breaking work which necessitated a return to this land of peace. Now that her health is completely restored, however, Miss Polk has accepted a call to return to her post, and her family and friends, while regretting her departure, are proud of the fact that she has been summoned to duty, for so many volunteers have proved a nuisance that the authorities, far from welcoming them, are almost in the frame of mind of Lord Kitchener, who would not allow a shipload of society "war angels" to land in South Africa. He sent them back to England to flutter their beautiful but ineffectual wings in the charming void to which they were accustomed.

During her visit to her old home, Miss Polk has been a first aid to parents of young girls fired with illusions about war service. A number of young women who are bored with life here had an idea that they would get a real sensation out of enlistment for war duty, and if Miss Polk had not come along when she did, it would have been impossible for their parents to hold down a number of romantic creatures who visualized the service from fiction stories illustrated by beautiful young women in becoming nurses' costumes going through a series of romantic episodes, one more exciting and stimulating than the other. But Miss Polk's story of the reality of the thing pricked all desire on the part of the unfitted.

Of course, Miss Mary Eyre and Miss Helen Crocker, who are now on their way over to enlist in the ambulance service, have no illusions about their work, and are prepared for all the sorrows and hardships with which the experience is sure to be filled.

Miss Foute Takes Secretaryship.

Miss Augusta Foute, who has been taking a business course, has accepted the position of private secretary to Mrs. William Crocker, and spends part of every day in the fulfillment of her duties. Miss Foute is a great favorite in the Burlingame set, and has always been a particular favorite of Mrs. Fred Sharon's. Some time ago she decided to give up making society the chief business in life, and entered a business college intending to go into the commercial world—but Mrs. Crocker prevailed upon her to take a post with her.

Fashion Revue at Techau Tavern.

The pleasurable round of gayety noted about the Techau Tavern this season enjoys a befitting climax at the week's end in the Dansant Club Dinner in the club quarters on the mazzanine floor. Here a very excellent dinner is served for $1.50 per plate. Last Sunday evening a fashionable throng dined there, the spectacle being quite fetching. It is said the mode of Fashion makes her first bow in San Francisco at each recurring season at these Dansant Club dinners. Well gowned women are always in evidence. The skating vogue has made the Tavern quite a rendezvous for the smart set. The Hurry-Up Luncheon there, and then a repair to the Ice Palace, is the order of the day. Dinner in the evening is always a sparkling function, the Fashion Revue continuing to charm everybody who has seen the pretty girls and heard their really artistic numbers. A very pretty lot, all clever and all gowned bewitchingly. Then there is dancing by the diners, and the novelty gift distribution of Pall Mall library size boxes of cigarettes to the men, with a handsome box of glazed fruits for the ladies—those on the lucky floor numbers, I mean. In these early spring days, Techau Tavern is the joy and life of fashionable San Francisco.

The adoption of the Colonial Room of the St. Francis as the "Little Theatre" of San Francisco, in which local amateurs and visiting thespians may produce classics for lovers of dramatic art, will probably be announced at an early date. Local playwrights, wealthy votaries of the purer drama, and ultra-smart society generally, are expected to co-operate in making possible the production of works which, while a delight to the illuminati, are caviare to the general. Briefly, the idea of the Eastern "Little Theatres" will be followed.

Arrivals of distinguished guests, smart functions of all sorts, banquets, musical recitals and numerous club affairs have contributed much this week to the characteristic animation around the St. Francis. Tea in the St. Francis is, of course, always a popular diversion with our social elect. The other day, I noticed Miss Arabella Schwerin doing the honors for a number of girls who made their debut the winter she did, among them being Miss Gertrude Hopkins, Miss Ruth Zeile and others of the same set. Mrs. Frederick Hussey was nearby, looking very smart in a blue tailor dress; and so were Mrs. Robert Hayes Smith, Miss Helen Dean and Miss Mary Julliffe. The Baroness

Hedy Alice Von Frowein Pardee—who, with her husband, the well-known capitalist Howard Pardee, arrived at the St. Francis the other day—has been much admired during the tea hour, when society congregates in the Lounge.

The Saturday night dinner dance at the Hotel Oakland was a great success. Dr. and Mrs. Daniel Crosby entertained for a party of their young friends. Their guests were Mr. and Mrs. Howard F. Seely, Miss Dorothy Seely, Miss Florence Wilson, Miss Aubrey Angus, Miss Muriel Jones, Miss Ruth Riley, Mr. R. W. Heffelfinger, Mr. Carl Watts, Mr. Donald Thomas, Mr. Kenneth Morse and Mr. Louis Seely Blachly.

Monday, May 15th, senior ball.—Quite a number of dinner parties arranged to precede the event. The Abra Cadabra, Delta Chi, Zeta Xi, Phi Kappa Sigma, will break their precedent of giving their dinners at their fraternity houses, and make up parties that will fill the tan and gold room at the Hotel Oakland.

Mr. J. Nilsen Laurvik has accepted the appointment of Director of the San Francisco Art Association, and will take charge of the galleries, exhibitions and affairs in general of the Association. The directors believe this appointment will bring the association into closer touch with the work of similar institutions and museums throughout this country and in Europe.

Miss Charlotte Burnham Merriam, the daughter of Captain Henry C. Merriam, U. S. A., entertained at dinner last week in honor of her twelfth birthday. Her mother, Mrs. Belle C. Merriam, helped her to receive the guests. Among these were Miss Dorothy Kreiss, Miss Janette Markham, Miss Lorna Delaney, Miss Elizabeth Collins, and Miss Helen Whitney. The dinner was a beautiful affair, and the Merriam apartments in The Nottingham were filled with Easter blossoms.

PERSONAL ADVENTURES IN THE PAINTED WORLD

BY HENRY McDONALD SPENCER

Movie Melodrama on the Spoken Stage

Just one hundred years ago, Mrs. Shelley wrote a "best-seller" entitled "Frankenstein." Frankenstein was a young medical student who conceived himself to be a small-time God, and who constructed from the debris of the dissecting room and the grave a being which miraculously came to life. This monster—known to literature as the Frankenstein Monster—destroyed the bush-league Deity's best friend, subsequently his bride, and threatened the amateur Creator's own life. Whether there is an analogy between the monster and the movies, and whether the actors of the spoken drama (the drama) have conjured up an agency which will ultimately destroy them by depriving them of their job, remains to be seen. In any event, in a double sense, does the canned presentation react on the drama proper; for the technique of the former has appeared in more than one of the recent plays—notably "On Trial."

Years ago melodrama, that is the play of sensational situations, had been laughed off the regular stage, and we had, as we thought, relegated to the ash can, the outworn, dyed-in-the-wool villains, the 170 pound adventuresses, the betrayed damsel, missing wills, stolen diplomatic secrets, and other rubbish of the mid-Sardou period, to say nothing of the more spectacular and obvious accessories such as the shipwreck at sea, and the great sawmill scene in the third act. In fact, the hams themselves no more could play this kind of parts seriously; and when a ham doesn't take his "Art" seriously there must be something wrong with his vehicle. Now the movies have grabbed the old stuff and brought it to life, as more suitable to their capabilities than the drama of character and interplay of psychological forces; therefore, it would be interesting to know if we must trace to the picture-play influence such a production as "The Yellow Ticket," given at the Alcazar this week.

It begins with a bang, so to speak. When Marya Varenka (Florence Reed) enters in the opening scene, the door (center) is left ajar for an instant, apparently by accident; and standing in view of the audience, but unknown to the principal characters on the stage, is the most obvious Russian plainclothesman, who looks like one of the Glooms in a famous caricaturist's pictures. This gives the impression of something sinister, of impending doom, and creates suspense at the outset. Furthermore, it tells the audience that the servant, who is perfectly aware of the cop's presence, is a spy of the Secret Police. A yellow ticket, by the way, is a kind of license which the police give to ladies of the underworld, and which they are obliged to show at all times on demand. Subsequently, the flatfoot arrives, and on interrogating the young lady it is disclosed that the police have bunked her into accepting this kind of identification instead of a regular passport, and that she is truly a "good girl." Baron Stepan Andrey (Malcolm Williams) head of the Secret Police, is present, and, using the situation to his advantage, under the guise of befriending Marya, lures her to his apartment. Before, however, he accomplishes his base purpose—as the young lady novelists would say—she sticks him through the gizzard with a hatpin. He dies, and she is subsequently arrested. Afterwards she is released by the noble young "Amurrican" newspaper correspondent—who had previously fallen in love with her—on the threat that he would publish the scandal to the Russian government in his paper. He leaves Russia that night, taking the young baggage with him.

This play was better suited to Florence Reed than the opening performance of her season, "Bought and Paid For," and she undoubtedly scored in the role which, we are informed, she created in New York. With all due regard for her "artistry," which has been so warmly commended by those in high places—critics of newspapers occupying high buildings—I would take the liberty of suggesting that she drops the play too much every time she speaks. I am aware that to one who plays many of these sob heroine parts, and who has a deep emotional voice, that this is hard to avoid; nevertheless, her acting would be improved if it contained more light and shade. Malcolm Williams, on the other hand, was not so well suited as in the Captain of Industry part of the Broadhurst play. He was hardly suave enough in the early stages, and, how shall I say it? Not carnal enough when he tried to force compliance with his wishes; furthermore, I would take the liberty of reminding him, the Tuxedo is unknown in Europe as evening dress. A little more "dog," in the form of a riband or orders, would suit the general atmosphere of the play. The rest of the characters were well enough: Edward Longman as the noble young American—apropos of whom one of the characters said that the Americans did not love girls so much, but honored woman. This of course brought down the house, although I should regard it as somewhat of a lefthanded compliment—suggesting anaemia. The cops were all truly to the stage born, also the servant of the naughty, naughty Baron. Helene Sullivan did not have much chance, but was agreeable in her role. For those who like melodrama, and judging by the popularity of the movies they are many, the play is well enough. Also it should please the sob lovers and all who hate the cops.

Orpheum

At the Orpheum this week there was Fritzi Scheff, and any time dear Fritzi wants to come on the stage and hold out her arms to me and sing a little and kick up the back of her skirt with her up-stage tootsie, she will get a good notice from me, for I am strong for Fritzi, even if she never sings another note. What is the matter with the gallery, anyway? There was a subdued hiss on Monday afternoon, which amounted to nothing, for the audience as a whole approved very strongly of the attractive young woman, and in fact for the first time in many moons the headliner got the lion's (or should it be lioness's) share of the applause. The downstairs always is politely acquiescent when the home-and-mother singer with the throaty voice, or the freak musical soloist is applauded to the echo by said wellknown gallery. Why do they not let the downstairs enjoy its favorite unmolested? Anyway, Miss Fritzi has a seductive air and the most charming personality of any of the big opera stars who have appeared in vaudeville. Homer Miles and Helen Ray got away with some quick stuff in "An Innocent Bystander," which was a kind of button-button-who's-got-the-button act. I listened attentively to Manuel Quiroga, heralded as the young Spanish violinist, but looked at his lovely accompanist—the young lady's name was not on the programme as it should have been—although I admit that the ex-Leading Lady both looked at him and listened to him. The "Two Southern Gentlemen" (sic), Aveling and Lloyd, pulled off some barroom patter which might well have been omitted, and there was a Chinese trio that opened the show and acted and sang in typical American fashion. The rest of the performance was as usual.

September Morn in May

The dramatization of September Morn (not a picture) at Pantages this week was a vehicle for the presentation of a number of very pretty, shapely and husky young women who were woven into the thread of a story and decorated the stage most agreeably in the intervals of the comedy. Or rather the comedy patter was used, probably, to give them time to change. Incidentally, the skit would be improved if it did not sag so much in the middle by an extra long scene between the comedians. When the eyes of the audience have grown accustomed to the brightness and dash of the filled stage, there are few performers in the world who can hold the boards successfully for any length of the time with a double. It is anti-climactic. However, the performance was very pleasing as a whole. My judgment? The third one from the end, stage left—the tallest girl in lavender, a brunette. You know me, Al.

An interesting little sketch, entitled "The Frame Up," was presented by Jean Ward and Harrison Terry, and depicted an exciting episode of the underworld with an expert woman "dip" (pickpocket) and a grafting "flatfoot" (detective). The play was well done, and I was quite disappointed when the movie man came on at the end, as part of the performance, and showed that the action was for a stage film. I detest the movies anyway. Clairmont Bros. had a ladder trick which was somewhat mechanical; and Lowell and Esther Drew had a lively little scene from a country drug store. There are possibilities in this for a full length farce, and it is reminding of a Hoyt play. The rest of the show was filled in acceptably enough.

Advance Notices

Orpheum.—The Orpheum announces another new show for next week, which will include several of the most brilliant stars of vaudeville. Helene Lackaye, highly talented actress, who has to her credit many triumphs on the legitimate stage, will appear in Alice Gerstenberg's little play, "Overtones," which proved the most successful of all the Washington Square Players' productions at the Bantbox Theatre, New York. "Overtones" is credited with possessing the most original dramatic construction that the stage has known in the past ten years, and it deals with the struggle of the outer and the inner soul of Everywoman. The Watson Sisters, Fannie and Kittie, who unostentatiously bill themselves as "Those Two Girls," are endowed with ability, versatility and good looks. They dress beautifully, and are responsible for one of the most refined singing and talking acts in vaudeville. Lydia Barry, lyrical raconteur, is really one of the sure-fire hits of vaudeville. Mlle. Luxanne, a youthful but skillful interpreter of lyric and classical dances, and a corps de ballet of six pretty, graceful and young girls under the direction of the wellknown composer, Hans S. Linne, will present a series of new dances. Wilbert Embs and Helen Alton are both exceptionally capable vocalists and instrumentalists. Aveling & Lloyd, and Conlin, Steele and Parks are also included in this bill. A beautifully colored Orpheum Travelogue, presenting views of Touraine, France, and the Island of Sicily, will be exhibited. Next week will be the last of the gifted and fascinating Viennese prima donna, Fritzi Scheff, who will be heard in a new song programme.

Musical Comedy Season Opens with "The Midnight Girl" at the Columbia.—A crowded house will be on hand Sunday night at the Columbia Theatre for the opening of the popular-priced musical comedy season which will be inaugurated with the London, Paris and New York success, "The Midnight Girl," by the authors of "Adele," in which will appear a splendid cast of principals and one of the snappiest groups of girls seen here in a long time. The management has set out to give San Francisco a $2 Broadway production, with real Broadway principals, at prices ranging from $1 to 10 cents, and from all accounts they will be more than able to make good. There is an enormous advance demand for seats, and the opening night will see the Columbia Theatre packed to the door by admirers of the many popular stars in the cast. Charming Eleanor Henry, who has come from the biggest musical hit of the year, "The Girl from Utah," is the prima donna of the company, and her role will give her ample opportunity to make good. Dorothy Webb, Arthur Cunningham, Robert Pitkin, J. Humbird Duffey, Maude Beatty, Victoria Gauran, Ruth Saville, Helen Le Cain, Madison Smith, Stanley Ridges, Forrest Seabury and others will be in the long cast. Superb stage effects, elaborate cos-

Lovely Local Celebration for Shakespeare.—A beautiful celebration of the tercentenary of Shakespeare, with garden scenes from his plays, will be given by the pupils and friends of the Hamlin school in an unusually attractive natural amphitheatre in Sutro forest near Forest Hill, on the grounds of Mr. C. A. Hawkins, southeast corner Sloat Boulevard and Nineteenth avenue, next Saturday afternoon, May 20th, at 2.30 o'clock. With fine discrimination those handling the affair have selected scenes and acts from Shakespeare's plays that lend themselves naturally to the background of groves selected. A wealth of excellent talent has volunteered from among well known people to take part in the acts, scenes, folk dances, songs, choruses and instrumentalists.

The programme opens with the overture of Mendelssohn's

Midsummer Night's Dream. Part I furnishes a village green of the time of Shakespeare with a cast of village characters and several dozen young girls of well known local families who divide the parts of straw gatherers and fuel gatherers for the purpose of portraying life at the time Shakespeare lived on the banks of the Avon. Part II presents a German phantasy of The Midsummer Night, with Shakespeare, Titania, Oberon and Puck in the cast, and a swarm of dancing fairies and gnomes, followed by a duet, "I Know a Bank Whereon the Wild Thyme Blows," by Miss Ruth Gibbs, soprano, and Miss Bessie Margaret Murray, mezzo-soprano. Part III introduces scenes from The Tempest, with songs, dancing and music, followed by Charminade scarf dance by Misses Sara Jackson, Estelle McGuire and Peggy Parrish. Part IV is a scene from "As You Like It," with the hunter's song, "What Shall He Have That Killed the Deer?" Part V closes the programme with a dance of the hours, the dawn, morning, noon, afternoon, evening, night. All the dances, except those in the Tempest, will be directed by Miss Helen Adler. Admission, adults, 50 cents; children under 12, 25 cents. Take Haight street cars, No. 17; Mission cars, No. 12; or the fine road for automobiles on 19th avenue.

Pantages Theatre.—Landers Stevens, Georgia Cooper and a company which numbers our old friend, Henry Norman, the character actor of old Tivoli days, will top the new show at the Pantages next week, presenting Walter Montague's expose of segregation, called "The New Chief of Police." This was the playlet which created a bit of a stir last summer, and had a two weeks' run at the "Pan." Miss Cooper will wear a gown that has startled the natives of Seattle with its daring and emphatic lines measuring close to the knee joints. Mrs. Bob Fitzsimmons, number three, and not the number four who has Morton will unravel a yard of witticisms, and the Sunset Six, a sextette of stunning girl musicians, play as sweetly as they look. The rest of the show will comprise the Fanton Trio, Archer and Carr, Reddington and Grant, and the ninth chapter of that sterling mystery serial, "The Iron Claw."

Lectures and Recitals at Elder's.

On May 16th, at 3 o'clock, Ashley Pettis will give a lecture recital in the Paul Elder Gallery, in the course on "An Analysis of the Evolution of Pianoforte Music." The subject for the afternoon is "Mendelssohn, Heller and Henselt." Mr. Pettis will render a number of selections from those composers.

Mrs. Henry Stanislawski will lecture on Thursday afternoon, May 18th, at 3 o'clock, on "Story-telling under the Hawthorne Hedge—How St. Patrick Drove the Snakes Out of Ireland—Shrove-tide—Weddings." This is the last lecture on "Recollections of a Childhood in Ireland."

SKATING TOGS AND FANCIES AT THE ICE RINK

The present skating craze is to an extent a new sport in many enlivening particulars. It is altogether different from the old-fashioned outdoor pastime for which one used to bundle up in heavy clothes, handicapped by excess baggage. Now the fluffiest and most attractive woolen and worsted garments are worn, many of them of patterns and colors that make the rink a kaleidoscope of life, enjoyment and attractiveness. I visited the leading sporting outfitters to see what preparations they had made for the skating enthusiasts, and I thought perhaps enthusiasm might have stimulated the stores into producing a glorious show of "Preparedness." I was amazed at the captivating styles and models united with the good sense of keeping the wearers warm during their exhilarating ice glides.

While the ladies are buying skating suits, hats, stockings, corsets and goodness knows what else, the ordinary run of ex-dancing men think that any old business suit is good enough to go a turn on skates. The plain, practical togs for skating seems to be a Norfolk suit. Experts advise that the coat should not be too long, and that the knickers should fit very snugly, especially around the knee. Tight skating trousers are worn by Mr. Naess, who gives exhibitions at the Techau Ice Rink. They seem to fit the occasion, the judgment of onlookers, and his expert legs perfectly.

On page 16 of this issue we reproduce a number of enlivening photographs of ladies well known in society, and a number of the styles of costumes worn. There is enough chill from the ice to stimulate exhilaration and justify one in being warmly clad. The close fitting sweater is popular and appropriate for this purpose. Gantner & Mattern show some unusually smart styles in these garments. Velvet coats trimmed with fur, and white fur boas are stunning and attractive. Indeed luxuries along this line seem to have no limit. The sessions at the Techau rink morning, afternoon and evening are crowded with skaters, morning being the popular time for beginners. The Hockey Club which has been formed will have an exhibition on the ice, Wednesday, May 24th.

SEQUOIA ART EXHIBITION.

The reception which opened formally the art exhibit by the artist members of the Sequoia Club took place at the club house, 1725 Washington street, Thursday evening, and was attended by an enthusiastic throng of artists and art lovers. The exhibition deserves special mention because the large artist membership of the Sequoia is formed of many of California's most brilliant painters. So enthusiastic were the visitors that it was decided to extend the exhibit to May 20th. The club house will be open to the public afternoons from 2 to 5:30 p. m., except Sunday. To give each and every contribution the space its excellence deserves is impossible. Sandona is represented by a portrait in crayon, touched with a bit of color, of Jack Mulgardt, and is in his usual virile style. Sandona also has a black and white of a mother and child, full of fine feeling. "A Setting Sun," by Constance Macky, shows a girl seated on a window ledge, through which the sun streams on draperies and surroundings, and is very realistic. Cadenasso's "Sunlight" is one of the best things that ever came from his brush. As its title implies, he is working for light effects, a departure from the blackness which so long enveloped him. From Van Slonn one always looks for vitality at least, and in "The Model," he has given it. Of Lee Randolph's work the most important is "A Figure Arrangement," an oil of a charming girl in kimono of dark purple trimmed in blue and bright green, sitting, holding some toys, her face silhouetted against a broken yellow background. Arthur Best is represented by one of his Grand Canyon, No. 18, which we believe one of his cleverest, in the skillful handling of blues and violets, the atmosphere is superb. In "Spring Blossoms" he has rendered a most difficult subject in a most skillful way. Alice Best is represented by several small pictures, all of them clever as usual.—No. 15, Indian Hunter; No. 16, Head; No. 1, a head of a girl with hat and furs, the transparency of the flesh tones in this picture being very fine. Tamalpais from Greenbrae, by Arthur Beckwith, is a powerful picture by this well known landscape artist. "The Wandering Minstrel," by James A. Holden, is a clever picture by one of the cleverest artists of the bay region. Mr. Holden's "The Ship Architect," is also worthy of mention. "Close of Day," by Charles H. Grant, is a powerful sea picture with the storm clouds in the eastern sky, just touched by the setting sun. Mr. Grant seldom exhibits, and this picture should be seen to be appreciated. Theo. Wores' "A Pottery of the Pueblo," is one of the best seen in many a day. E. Spencer Macky's "Opal," a pastel of a nude torso, is fine in drawing, modeling and color. His "Pietro" is a splendid sketch of a young Italian boy. Percy Grey is seen in his usual well rendered, consistent water colors.

Mrs. Obregon, wife of General Obregon, conspicuous in the present military complications in Mexico. General Obregon will likely remain a prominent figure in Mexican affairs, and Mrs. Obregon will eventually be a prominent leader in the social affairs of Mexico City.

Other artists represented by clever pictures, which space forbids our mentioning, are L. P. Latimer, Bertha Stringer Lee, Jane McElroy, Ethel Wickes, Myrtle Young, H. W. Seawell, W. R. Davenport, J. Miller White, Marion Coleman, Kate Maher, Lena Beetz.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL ITEMS

ENGAGEMENTS.

CLIFFORD-HAGEN.—Of interest to the service set as well as to local society is the news of the engagement of Miss Marguerite Clifford and Lieutenant Ole O. Hagen, United States Navy. The marriage will be an event of June, and the honeymoon will be passed in the East. The romance dates from Exposition days, when Lieutenant Hagen and Miss Clifford met at a large tea given on board the South Dakota.

FRIEDMAN-BROWN.—Mr. and Mrs. I. Friedman announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Rita Evelyn Friedman, to Leo H. Brown. They will be at home to their friends on Sunday from 2 to 5, at their residence, 2087 Eush street.

GARTENZAUN-REGENSBURGER.—The engagement is announced of Miss Ida G. Gartenzaun of New York City to Adolph Regensburger of San Francisco. Regensburger will leave for New York in the fall to claim his bride.

KENDRICK-PELL.—Society will be interested in the engagement of Miss Helen Kendrick, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Rodney Kendrick, to Rodman C. Pell, Jr., formerly of New York. The wedding will take place on June 30th.

WEDDING ANNOUNCEMENTS.

JOHNSON-SAXE.—A home wedding has been chosen by Miss Helen Johnson, the charming daughter of Mrs. James Ward, who will become the wife of Arthur Saxe on the evening of May 20th. The ceremony, which will be performed by Rev. Edw. Morgan, rector of St. Luke's Church, will take place in the bride's residence on Buchanan street. Following their honeymoon, Arthur Saxe and his bride will make their home at Burlingame.

TYSON-KALES.—Miss Marie Louise Tyson and Frank Kales have decided upon Wednesday evening, June 14th, as the big date in their lives. It is to be a home wedding at the Tyson residence in Alameda. The usual reception and dancing follow the ceremony. The bride's attendants will be Mrs. Harry Welhe, Miss Edith Rucker, Miss Franc Pierce and Miss Josephine Johnson.

WEDDINGS.

ALLEN-HUTCHINSON.—Of interest to a wide circle of friends is the marriage of Miss Dorothy Allen of San Francisco and William Hutchinson of New York, which took place Wednesday afternoon at the home of the bride's aunt, Mrs. Allen P. Ames, in Nutley, N. J. Only relatives and intimate friends were present. The young couple will reside at Nutley, N. J.

GALT-WELLES.—Letters from New York to relatives in this city tell of the marriage there on April 20th of Miss Elizabeth Ashe Galt and Paul Welles. It took place at the Church of the Incarnation, and the ceremony was followed by a reception. Miss Galt is the daughter of the late Commodore and Mrs. Roger Galt. Paul Welles is the son of Mr. and Mrs. F. R. Welles of Paris, France. He and his bride are enjoying their honeymoon in Canada, and will make their home in New York.

BENNETT-SMALL.—Aboard the United States receiving ship Rainbow, at Yerba Buena training station, Miss Nepha Bennett, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles M. Bennett of this city, Wednesday became the bride of Chief Quartermaster O. Hugh Small of the Rainbow. The Rev. C. Q. Wright, chaplain of the training station, officiated. Three hundred guests from San Francisco attended the ceremony and afterwards danced on the decks to music by the Marine band.

LUNCHEONS.

ONE PAIR OF GLASSES FOR FAR AND NEAR

Time, trouble and disposition are all saved by the recent invention of grinding the equivalent of two pairs of glasses in one. These new lenses are called "Caltex" One-piece Bifocals and the reading and distance corrections are actually ground from one piece of perfect optical glass. No necessity for having one pair of glasses for reading and one for distance if you wear "Caltex" One-piece Bifocals—a great improvement over all other double vision lenses. Remember the name and insist upon having "Caltex" as there are imitations of this wonderful lens.

UNCLE SAM'S BUSINESS CONTINUES GOOD.

Business the country over continues at the top notch rate, with conditions on the whole rather more normal and stable in appearance than a month ago. The railway congestion has been reduced under the management of the committee of officials appointed for that purpose, and traffic is moving more smoothly but to the limit of the capacity of the roads. Complaints of car shortage are heard, particularly from the lumber industry in the Southwest, but considering the tremendous amount of freight moving, the situation is now very well in hand. Navigation has opened on the lakes with an immense tonnage in sight. The lake boats formerly operated by railway lines, and which had to be sold in compliance with law, have either been sold for the coast trade or taken over by a new corporation organized at Buffalo for the purpose, and which will operate in connection with the railways. The volume of commodities moving from original sources into distribution is enormous and well balanced as between merchandise, miscellaneous freight and farm products, although the end of the crop year is approaching, when the latter usually run low. The big crops of the last two years have filled.

—The report of the Crocker National Bank in response to the call of the Comptroller of the Treasury, as of May 1st, shows a healthy and steady growth as compared with the report of December 31st last. In that period loans and discounts increased from $15,472,115 to $16,748,990, and resources from the amount of $35,769,954 to $36,066,208. Deposits are reported at $27,966,429, despite the liberal loans and discounts at this season, which aggregate $16,748,990.

—San Francisco's bank clearings for April show $255,914,331 vs. $212,429,188 for April, 1915. The building permits were $2,126,523 vs. $1,923,049 for April, 1915. The San Francisco bank clearings more than doubled those of Los Angeles

—There is less unemployed men in San Francisco and vicinity at the present time than there has been for many years past, according to the State Employment Bureau and the Associated Charities. Good machinists are becoming very scarce, and a lack of skilled labor is forecasted.

—U. S. Steel has increased its tariff of wages by 43 1/4 per cent since January 1, 1907.

REVIVAL IN MINING SHARES AND SILVER.

There are signs that we will have quite a revival in mining shares, said one of the prominent members of the San Francisco Stock Exchange this week. The great advance in silver during the last four weeks has caused quite a demand for Tonopah shares, especially of those mines that are in the producing class. There was also a good demand for some of the Comstock shares, principally Union Cons. and Sierra Nevada. The steady output of bullion from the Union during the last four months seems to have awakened confidence that a new ore body will be found in Ophir and Mexican on the 2700 foot level. The crosscut now being run will get under the place where years ago quite a large amount of good ore was taken out. A certain class of people are speculating on the Exchange, who will continue to speculate in Comstock shares in preference to shares in any other camp. Small capitalization and the past record of the Comstock Lode is the reason.

LIBRARY TABLE

"Catalogue De Luxe of Fine Arts of the Exposition."

Of all the beautiful books issued on the fine arts of the Panama-Pacific Exposition, these two volumes are the crowning attraction, both in the information conveyed in the text and the photographic imprints of the leading exhibits in paintings, sculptures and other expressions. The two volumes are published under the direction of the Department of Fine Arts in response to a demand for an enduring record of the exhibition. It is intended to be of such a character as shall appeal specially to every serious student of the fine arts, whether the reader shall have visited the Exposition or not. John E. D. Trask, chief of the Department of Fine Arts, and Mr. Laurvik, contributed the excellent editing which has confined the enormous variety of the art treasures within a compass which gives the reader a comprehensive and illuminating bird's-eye view of the essentials of the exhibit, as well as a distinctive idea of the various schools and movements.

Much of the excellent critical work is furnished by Mr. J. N. Laurvik. Professor Harshe, who surveys the print collection, is mainly responsible for the print collection itself; and the laborious task of cataloguing and compiling the important biographical data regarding American artists is due to the faithful efficiency of Mrs. John Dunlap and Miss Helen Wright.

These two volumes are the last word on the fine art exhibit at the exhibition, by far the most attractive and popular departments. Its great impress stimulated the imagination and spirit of San Francisco to a degree that started a widespread local movement to maintain the building permanently as a local institution. A spontaneous movement of that character means an unusual uplift in the aesthetic arts, and the contents of these two volumes illustrate and explain the reason in a natural way. No lover of the Fine Arts Exhibit should be without them.

Of the limited edition, only one thousand consecutively numbered copies are offered for sale. The original price was $15. They are now selling for $7.75.

The Chandler Four-Passenger Roadster is by Long Odds the Hit of the Season

EVERYWHERE people are talking about it. They have been talking about it here for a month past. A great many have placed their orders. All agree that there is no other roadster model on the market to match it in comfort and grace and style of design.

A roadster of the ordinary type—the two-passenger—is not always satisfactory. And even a three-passenger roadster often would not meet your requirements. But this new Chandler roadster, seating four grown persons in comfort and with the top covering all, has struck the popular chord. It's just one more Chandler achievement.

And remember, all Chandler bodies are mounted on the famous Chandler chassis, featured by the exclusive Chandler motor, and free from any hint of experimentation or uncertain theory.

POWER—Ample to take this car, loaded, anywhere that any automobile can go.

SPEED—More than 999 out of every thousand car owners would ever want or dare to use.

MOTOR—The marvelous Chandler Motor, built in the Chandler factory for three years past and famous the world over, FREE FROM ANY HINT OF EXPERIMENTATION.

Federal Aid for Roads in Balance

Federal Aid in roads, insofar as the first session of the Sixty-fourth Congress is concerned, hangs in the balance, to be decided by the ability of the friends of the measure to bring it to a vote.

If the good roads bill can secure a yea-and-nay test, the prediction is made that it will pass by a standard majority, for there are those who would hesitate to go on record against Federal co-operation, though not inclined to accelerate progress to a vote.

Naturally, the A. A. A. clubs and members throughout the country are much concerned with the situation, as they have lent consistent support to the bill put forward by the American Association of State Highway officials, and believe that the Bankhead bill is legislation which should be approved, and then in conference merged with the Shackelford bill which passed in the House.

In the debate in the Senate, pronounced evidence has been given of the great growth of opinion for a logical help in the road transportation of passengers and farm and manufactured products. Senator Underwood of Alabama summarized thus concisely.

"It has been said here in debate that the States themselves are building good roads; that there is no necessity for the Federal Government to intervene; that there is no requirement for Federal aid. Well, that may be true in some of the great, rich States in America; but even in those States it has been found that the State must grant aid, because there are poor communities in those States that cannot bear the burden of carrying the roads through those communities and they must have the aid of the State in order that the roads may reach the parts to which commerce is going. The same is true as to the nation. There are many States and many communities in which, without aid from the National government or the State governments, it would be impossible for them to construct roads. If your roads are not going to be continuous and go through poor communities as well as rich ones, they will be of little value."

Works to Benefit Public

With all the legislative and other measures being taken to lower the price of gasoline to the ultimate consumer, the part taken by the automobile engineers in decreasing the cost of operating cars cannot be ignored. The work being done by the automobile engineers was explained by Russell Huff, president of the Society of Automobile Engineers. Mr. Huff showed that the automobile engineer is keenly alive to the fuel situation, and is busily engaged in devising means of making better use of gasoline or of using kerosene and other less expensive fuels.

"As a matter of fact," he said, "there is no fundamental reason why automobile engines will not operate satisfactorily on kerosene. If gasoline should cost so much that the user can be persuaded to give up his gasoline engine, which is naturally the favorite at present because of the universal familiarity with its operation and because of the high standard of development it has attained—then the engineering workers of the industry can be depended on to provide an engine that will operate efficiently on some other fuel.

"Gasoline, however, is only one out of the many items of expense in running an automobile. Of course it is an important item, and we all hope its price will soon stop increasing and fall back again to its former value. What the owner wants and what he should have, is a car that will have a low total cost of maintenance. The Society of Automobile Engineers is endeavoring to reduce maintenance costs by promoting the principles of interchangeable manufacture. These principles are laid down by the Standards Committee of the society, the work of which has been far-reaching in its effect on the industry."

Spring Styles for Motorists

Especially smart styles for men and women motorists are to be found in all the shops this spring. Many of the coats are so designed that they may be worn for street use as well as in the car. Then again some of the outer garments are reversible that the outer part may be in keeping with the vagaries of the weather.

Looseness is exemplified in nearly all of the outer garments this year. Tussar silk, cheviot, wool velours and gabardines and corduroys are the prevailing materials for both men and women. Some coats for men are being shown in suede, these in many cases being reversible and having a detachable collar so that they may be worn either as outer or inner garments. The side opposite to the leather is usually of gabardine, or some waterproof material.

For men the raglan sleeves, deep set and rather full skirts are prevailing. Special wet weather coats for both men and women are built more along utility lines than for pleasing the eye. Leather is being used considerably for trimming women's garments. Motoring hats are small and close fitting, being both of cloth and straw.

Big Accessory Firm to Locate Here

San Francisco continues to attract the largest and most prominent of Eastern automobile and accessory manufacturers. The latest of the big Eastern firms to establish a branch house here is the Ahlberg Bearing Company. This concern has factories in Chicago and Los Angeles, and has branch houses in Chicago, Boston, Cleveland, Detroit, New York and Los Angeles.

"The firm makes a feature of grinding annular ball bearings and, according to J. W. West, who will have charge of the Western territory, the rapidly increasing number of motor vehicles in service throughout the country has made the grinding of old and worn bearings an important factor in the automobile industry. It is essential that antifriction bearings should be applied in true alignment with the shaft and load, as otherwise the full efficiency of the bearing is not secured," said West recently.

"All anti-friction bearings must be properly lubricated. There is a false impression prevalent that ball and roller bearings do not require oil, but this is incorrect, as they need it, not only to prevent rust due to moisture from condensation or other causes, but they also require it as a lubricant. There is no more important part of an automobile than the bearings, and anything that will increase the efficiency of the bearings in an automobile will reduce the ultimate cost of operation of machines."

You Must Stop! Look! Listen!

In the supreme court of Michigan, in the case of John S. Sanford, of Battle Creek, Mich., against the Grand Trunk railroad, Judge Brooks reversed the earlier decision against the railroad and held that a motor car driver, when approaching a railroad crossing, must stop, look and listen in such a way and at such a distance from the crossing that it really can be shown that he took all necessary precautions in the case.

"The duty of a motor car driver approaching tracks where there is restricted vision, to stop, look and listen, and to do so at a time and place where stopping, and where looking and listening will be effective, is a positive duty and the safety-landing steps the plaintiff failed to take. He stopped where stopping served no purpose, and failed to stop where stopping would have disclosed danger. He made chance, and not sight, the guarantee of his safety," is part of Judge Brooke's deciding opinion.

Gasoline Use Restricted in England

Claiming that gasoline must be distributed more economically, the British authorities are about to take possession of all stocks and assume control of sales to the public. Under this scheme the commercial vehicle users and the army and navy will have a preferential call, followed by doctors and other professional men. Private motorists will come last. The scheme is calling forth opposition. It is the opinion among English motorists that there is very little use of motors for purely pleasure purposes on the island.

Great Interest in New Speedway

According to Ivan R. Gates, one of the directors of the California Speedway Association, the interest in San Francisco's efforts to acquire a modern, up-to-date automobile race course is finding a sympathetic echo in many of the big cities of the State. Gates has just returned from a week's business trip to Fresno, where he attended the raisin festival and automobile races, and had a good opportunity to speak speedway to all the big racers and motorists of this section.

E. E. Thompson of the Thompson-La Casse Auto Company and formerly assistant district sales manager of the Maxwell Motor Sales Company, was so taken with the possibilities of the big speedway project that he consented to represent the California Speedway Association in the Fresno territory.

Superintendent H. A. French of the Motor Vehicle Department gives the following figures to last Saturday for 1916:

Registrations—Automobiles, 172,514; motorcycles, 22,635; chauffeurs, 7,874; automobile dealers, 1,192; motorcycle dealers, 182. Receipts—Automobiles, $1,772,170.20; motorcycles, $44,136; chauffeurs, $14,964.50; automobile dealers, $30,344.50; motorcycle dealers, $808.25; miscellaneous, $1,232.50. Total receipts, $1,763,655.95.

California Second in 1916 Registration

Iowa ranked third in the United States on March 31st in the number of cars registered for 1916, according to figures compiled by Roy Allen, head of the Iowa registration department. New York was first and California second, with 158,000 (they now total 174,000), while Iowa had 136,500 cars registered for the current year on that date.

According to an English authority, it is found in England that women make good automobile drivers (we don't believe it.) There has been an immense influx of women motorists in England in the last six months, owing to men chauffeurs being drafted by the war.

Longest "Jit" Route in the World

The Los Angeles automobile stage has proven a great success, and if the travel increases at its present rate we will be forced to put on more machines," says G. J. Creely, local manager of the company. "Thirty-two high-class touring cars have been put on the run and more will be added as the traffic war-wants. This line has been in operation only a month, but is proving popular with the traveling public. The trip takes thirty-six hours, including a stop overnight. Eight machines leave this city every morning at 8 a. m. and the same number leave Los Angeles at the same time.

"After leaving San Francisco, the first stop is made at Modesto for luncheon, and at Fresno the passengers put up for the night. On the second day luncheon is served at Lebec, the passengers arriving at Los Angeles at 6 p. m.

"The route of travel runs through the fertile plains and valleys of Central California, over the picturesque Ridge route, with its mountainous scenery, giving the passengers an opportunity to view some of the garden spots of California."

R. H. Henderson Appointed Manager of Hartmann Motor Sales

M. M. Hartmann, the head of the Hartmann Motor Sales Agency, announces the appointment of R. H. Henderson as general manager.

Henderson has been long identified with the automobile industry, especially on the Coast, having handled the National and Paige interests in the southern part of the State, and more recently has been identified with the Don Lee organization in the north.

In speaking of the appointment, Hartmann says: "The increased business we have enjoyed has necessitated that I give more time to the general interests of the agency, and after most serious consideration of the appointment have decided that Henderson, from his intimate knowledge of the industry and past executive ability, will be able to give to the patrons of the Hartmann Motor Sales Agency that consideration that has heretofore resulted in our increased prosperity."

Pierce-Arrows Solve Yosemite Stage Problem

After many years' thorough trying out of almost all of the high grade cars, the officials of the Yosemite Big Trees stage line, operating from Madera and Fresno into the Yosemite Valley via Wawona, have arrived at the definite conclusion that in the big Pierce-Arrow touring cars is found the maximum of efficiency, durability, economy of up-keep and operation and their fleet of cars will be made up of this make in the future. Not only must their cars carry passengers, but freight, baggage and the mails that will aggregate more than the passengers in weight. A time schedule is as closely maintained as on railroad lines, and it is seldom that a car is compelled to deviate from it.

A young $23 a week bookkeeper in New York who stole $20,000 from his employers to help him maintain three establishments lays his downfall to the high cost of the gasoline he used in his $1,500 car. Suppose that he kept a car for each establishment, how much would he have stolen?

There are 2,273,000 miles of public roads in the United States which means that for every mile of public road there is a fraction more than one automobile. If this car-per-mile thing was only capable of being carried out to a point where the mile of road was anything like as good as the car that is averaged upon it, what a boon to motordom? As it is, however, only 247,490 of these road miles are rated as good; hence the ratio of good roads to good cars is about one mile of road to every ten automobiles.

A First-Class Garage

There are many garages in town, and the motorist is often in a quandary as to where to go, especially for permanent service. There are very few who give you the QUALITY of service of Dow & Green, in Taylor street, between O'Farrell and Geary. Here your car will receive something more than the "once over," and the prices are moderate.

Henry D. McCoy to Re-Enter Accessory Field

Henry D. McCoy is to re-enter the local motor car accessory field as head of a newly organized company, and with him will go several of his old associates.

When McCoy withdrew from the Chanslor-Lyon Company, after having been general manager of the firm for several years, it was generally believed that it would not be long before he again became active in business.

It is now definitely announced that McCoy is to be the head of a newly-organized corporation, to be known as the McCoy Motor Supply Company, and with him will be associated H. L. Auger, formerly buyer; J. M. McDonald, head of the auditing and traffic department, and William H. Reid, manager of the local branch of the Chanslor-Lyon Company. All of these men have been identified for many years with the latter firm as chief aids of McCoy, and will take equally important posts in the new concern.

Studebaker Co. Enlarges Plant

As a move of preparedness for the 1916 demand for Studebaker cars, additions costing $1,000,000 have just been made, to the Detroit factories of the Studebaker Corporation. The work on these extensions, begun last October, is now practically completed, and will enable the manufacturers of Studebaker cars to carry out their plans of producing 100,000 cars during this year.

With the completion of the increased plant facilities, the production schedule will shortly be jumped from 300 cars a day to 400, thus placing the Studebaker Corporation as the largest builders of cars at or above the prices of the Studebaker Fours and Sixes.

Included in the plant extensions is an entirely new building for the manufacture of heavy forgings, such as six-throw crank shafts and front axles. In the heat treating and carbonizing departments seven large double-chambered furnaces have been built to replace smaller types and increased production accordingly.

Goodrich Output Enormous

Tire output at the plant of the B. F. Goodrich Company, Akron, Ohio, is now running at the rate of 17,000 tires daily. This compares with last year's record output of 14,000 daily. The company is still drawing on its stocks of crude rubber, purchased at low prices last summer.

FASHION'S FADS AND FRILLS

Hats, veils, shoes, parasols, dainty little collar and cuff sets, and all the numerous other accessories which go to complete the costume are charmingly designed this season to fit in smartly with the new silhouette and the general lines of the costume.

Shoe manufacturers are loud in their praise of the short-skirt vogue. In former years skirts have varied in width and trimming, but until this season have always remained at a conservative length. With the modish short skirt of the moment, smart, trim shoes are absolutely necessary to the general effect of the costume. The high laced boot of tan, brown, black or gray is popular with the tailored suit; for afternoons, with the light silk or the novelty cotton frock, the old-time Colonial pump, with its huge buckle of silver or gun-metal, is once more a low-shoe favorite.

Veils, Parasols and Collars.

At the beginning of the season there were any number of novel effects in veilings, but with the advance of the season the call for veilings for street and general use, aside from motoring, dwindles usually to the face veil, of almost invisible mesh, intended merely to keep the hair in place. The trick of arranging the veil over the hair, under the hat, is practical and clever, especially with the larger hats. The hat may be readily removed and the veil remain, keeping the hair smoothly and neatly in place.

Parasols promise to play a more prominent part in this summer's wardrobe than for many a summer past; they are oddly shaped and vividly colored. One of the newest ideas is the blue-bird parasol; these are embroidered, stenciled or applied and spread their wings all around the outside edge of the white or softly tinted parasol, or scatter here and there over the inside surface. It is an extremely dainty notion, completing the summer frock in a most fascinating manner. Ostrich feathers edging the parasol is another effective fancy.

Neckwear this season is as fascinating and offers as many possibilities for individuality as ever. Some smart little novelty ruches from Paris, now being shown in the shops, to complete a costume effectively, are narrow and finished with a buckle, or tie with narrow ribbons.

Popularity of Lace and Embroidery.

The extreme favor being shown the typical lingerie frock has brought lace and embroidery into wide use again this summer. Lace is being used for trimming dresses and blouses, and often forms the greater portion of the garment. The sheer lace flouncings are particularly pretty for summer dance and evening dresses. Metal laces are effective on the more formal gowns for daytime and evening. A particularly pretty use of lace flouncing is illustrated in the little Spanish dance frock shown here; upper portion of skirt and bolero are of taffeta, bodice and flounce of a thread-like flouncing. An effective bit of contrast is introduced in the dark girdle and the narrow ribbons banding the short puff sleeves. Another, a simpler, even more youthful dress, is illustrated of voile and embroidery flouncing; it is charmingly suited to the young girl for summer wear.

The tub-frock is more popular than for many a year; Paris herself endorses the cotton dress this summer. Many attractive novelties are being sent us from the French looms; among them are the artistic piques, voiles, and other fabrics of Rodier, with their quaint patterns and effective colorings. A particularly pretty voile for blouses and frocks is a fine check in color, with a solid selvage; this colored selvage is used as a finish for collar, cuffs, jabots and the like.

The Colored Lingerie Blouse.

The colored blouse of organdy, voile, Georgette, and wash satin, has taken such a hold on the popular fancy that it is quite difficult to find a really attractive plain white blouse, excepting those for sports wear. Pale pink, all tones of tan and yellow, soft blues and grays predominate. The costume-blouse of pale cream lace or Georgette, usually has an interlining of the palest flesh chiffon; the blue waist is piped with pink or another harmonious contrast. It is indeed a season of color and one may indulge to the heart's content.

For the sports blouse, handkerchief and butcher's linen are both popular; pongee, the rough Chinese crepes, and the coarser voiles are also practical and well liked. Costume-blouses and shirtwaists are mostly finished with the open throat or adjustable collar, although with the strictly tailored suit one sees now and then a fetching choker.

Wedding Presents.—The choicest variety to select from at Marsh's, who is now permanently located at Post and Powell streets.

INSURANCE

At the annual meeting of the Board of Fire Underwriters of the Pacific, held Friday, May 5th, R. P. Fabj, manager of the Liverpool & London & Globe, was elected president and Carl A. Henry, of Wayman & Henry, vice-president. The new members elected to the executive committee are Rolla V. Watt, of the Royal & Queen; Sam B. Stoy, of the London and Lancashire; F. M. Branch, New York Underwriters; B. O. Selbach and President Beach, of the Pacific States Fire, non-resident member, Portland, Or. The election of R. W. Osborn to serve on the executive committee was a distinct compliment, as, under the rules of the board, a three-fourths majority vote is necessary to elect a retiring president to that office. Friday's meeting was adjourned to meet on the morning of the following Tuesday at Hotel Oakland, Oakland, instead of at Monterey, as at first intended.

The California Bankers Association, which recently announced its intention to secure a general agency for companies writing fidelity and burglary insurance, with the intention of reducing the cost of these classes of insurance to the extent of the agency commissions, has thus far been unable to secure such a contract. It is understood that the original intention of the association to organize a mutual company for the writing of fidelity and burglary insurance has been abandoned. The whole matter has been laid over until the annual meeting of the association at Fresno on May 20th.

Notwithstanding the fact that Wyoming has no law denying the operation of underwriting agencies, Commissioner Forsythe has announced his intention to withhold a license to all such agencies where it is shown that the parent company is already licensed in the same town and companies having underwriting agencies are accepting the situation without protest.

Under circumstances showing that suicide had been committed, W. H. Robinson, cashier of the Pacific States Fire Insurance Company, was found dead in his private office, Chamber of Commerce Building, Portland, Or., last week. A coincidence with his death was the fact that Harvey W. Wells, insurance commissioner, was just completing the customary investigation of the office.

The Appellate Court of San Francisco has for the third time denied the right of S. W. Levy to recover from the Caledonian Insurance Company the sum of many thousand dollars claimed by him to be due for the cancellation of a contract with him as city agent, entered into shortly after the conflagration of 1906.

H. R. Mann, Jr., F. M. Branch, H. Durbrow, Joseph McBoyle and J. B. Warner have entered into a co-partnership, and will do business under the firm name of H. R. Mann & Co. H. R. Mann & Co. will represent the Metropolitan Casualty, Hartford Steam Boiler Inspection and Insurance, and the La Fonciere Marine.

Edward Brown & Sons have appointed H. G. Doyle special agent for the Svea and First National Fire, covering Colorado, Wyoming, Utah, Idaho and Montana, with headquarters at Denver. Mr. Doyle has been examiner for Edward Brown & Sons at San Francisco for eight years.

George E. Home, auditor of the State Fund, was seriously injured at San Diego last Monday by a blow in the eye from a hammer in the hands of a blacksmith whose pay-roll he was auditing.

The attempt of physicians at the recent convention held at Fresno to raise their fees for workmen's compensation service was tabled by a decisive vote.

—After watching the actions of a man who discovered a "fresh paint" sign on a fence the other day, we were able to better understand the Kaiser's curiosity as to that "strict accountability" thing. The man wanted to be sure the paint was fresh. It was.—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

On the Los Angeles beaches, last season, most of the women bathers used one-piece suits. This year the ministers met and protested that not less than two-piece suits should be used. They carried their point with the authorities. In protest, the women bathers and their friends got up a monster parade to burlesque the ideas of the ministers as to the kind of apparel a woman should wear under the new order. The above photograph presents six of their ideas.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

NEW IDEA ANIMATING WOMEN OF FRANCE.

French journals are beginning to comment generally on the extraordinary movement of the women there in developing new organizations, social and educational, in order to prepare themselves for wider spheres of influence. The object is a more intelligent and productive effort for their collective welfare. The economic needs of the moment is the spur actuating them, and this is expressing itself freely in the many new educational institutions which are springing up in Paris and other large cities. Leaders in the French Academy have taken note of this movement and are endeavoring to analyze its true character and what it means in the new France which will arise from the tribulations of the present war. Publicists realize that after the war living will be on an altogether different basis than that which has prevailed, and that those in possession of incomes will find them diminished by about forty per cent. Obviously, this means a return to a life more simply lived. Philosophers argue that this will contribute a higher idea of the dignity of life. The women of France foresee this; hence the new spirit animating them in seeking simpler ways to meet the economies of life. By the time the war closes they will have gained the necessary experience to meet the new situation. English women are said to be going through a somewhat similar educational and economic experience.

FLIM-FLAMMING THE HIGH COST OF LIVING.

The present high cost of living in this country, where abundance prevails in almost every line of produce, seems to be running a neck and neck race with the prices of foodstuffs and commodities abroad, where the dearth of such products prevail. An expert genius in census digging may be able to figure out this situation, but not the grubbing citizen who figures closely to provide for his family. Rising prices on commodities, rising profits and higher wages may be a good thing for such sections of the community, but it proves a grinding experience for the ordinary consumer outside the gold gathering belt. Money continues to pour into this country via the Atlantic seaboard by millions of dollars weekly in payment for munitions of war and food products, but only scant drippings have reached the Western States. Perhaps any loose dollar is suspicious that it will be sandbagged in this reckless area. It will. The workingmen of the country seem to be holding the sack these days. Last week it was estimated that the wage increase aggregated some $64,426,464 annually, and affected some 700,000 workingmen. Raises in wages were partly voluntary and partly the result of strikes. Wages in certain coal industries were advanced $20,000,000 a year, all of which comes out of the pockets of the public using coal in that belt. The enormous gain in wages means, of course, a wider circulation of money, but in that circulation some one or several handlers in the circle are getting an unusual rake-off. If the ordinary citizen could put his hand on the rake-off expert he would feel that he knew a little of where the profits go in this strap-game of life.

REGARDING THE DUBLIN EXECUTIONS.

This oscillating old world just now is dotted with groups of mental alienations which contribute freely to the general unrest occasioned by the big war. One of the most regrettable is the recent useless revolt in Dublin; the undertaking of a comparatively small number of hot-headed and sadly misguided nationalists, representing old-time conditions in Ireland, and backed with funds and advice by trouble hatching compatriots in this country and the secret agents of Germany as shown in the despatches. The folly and uselessness of the uprising was expressed by a small band of conspirators in one small area of the city, their flaming minds foreseeing a general uprising of the Irish people. Only temporary madness and the wild promises of outsiders could have blinded them to the fact that over 160,000 of their fellow countrymen were at that very moment cheerfully and loyally laying down their lives in the trenches of France to defend the honor and integrity of the United Kingdom. Such loyal men proclaim the attitude of a country, and not the misled band of conspirators. The Home Rule party still stands by England in Parliament. Because the Sinn Fein members were allowed to parade freely and to openly talk treason, the same freedom that was allowed the "army" of Sir Edward Carson, they mistook the government's liberality for fear; so their daring grew with the days. When they went from threats to firing on public buildings, the situation was transformed, and the government's hand promptly and decisively closed on the rebels. Irish history is full of precedents, and the leaders knew what failure meant. The circumstances, with the hand of Germany so openly shown, left no alternative but prompt executions. England's new spirit in her relations with Ireland during recent years savors strongly of the square deal, and a guarantee of eventual home rule. The New Ireland, with its home rule hopes, is rapidly crowding Sinn Fein movements from the map, and the day is soon coming when Ireland will take her associate place in the United Kingdom.

HIS FIRST BATTLE
From the State Journal (Columbus, O.)

"WETS" vs. "DRYS."

Very little is being said in the California press regarding the big contest on the liquor question which is scheduled to be threshed out at the polls next November. Owners of newspapers realize that unless they have the courage of their convictions they are monkeying with a buzz-saw that will gouge into their advertising receipts, as Editor Hearst discovered not long ago. "Sidetrack all copy on the liquor question" is therefore the standing order in practically every editorial room in the State. California presents an unusual knotty problem in this world wide drastic contest that is sweeping over the world, because of its immense viticultural interests. The annual products from that source in wine and brandy is valued at over $15,000,000 per year, and growing. The position of this industry, backed by many homes and an industrial folk that are of the substantial foundation of the commonwealth, is unquestionably a stickler with many conscientious voters. Other interests outside the saloon proper feel compelled by force of circumstances to join the latter to protect their own bailiwicks. The hotel interests, for instance, organized this month to defend their $200,000,000 investments. The big cities and towns of the State are admittedly the citadels and Verduns of the "wets," while the country is apparently criss-crossed with the main trenches of the "drys." Old California residents familiar with the days of general freedom of a few decades ago, attribute in a large measure the force of the present "dry" movement in this State to the many settlers who have come from the Middle West to make homes here. The West is still the freest section of the continent, politically and mentally, and the spirit that animated the '49ers still pervades the descendents of Californians, and that is the less laws the better for a people who know how to take care of themselves and respect the rights of others.

—Now that appendicitis has lost its popularity and attendant emoluments for the medical profession, a genius in his line has discovered another promising malady that shows signs of being developed into a capital substitute for keeping the blood and the fees of patients moving. "Angina of effort" is its name, and its territory of debauch is naturally the home of those burdened with the mazuma, multi-millionaires, centipedes, jitney drivers, motor maniacs, editors, Bryanites, war munition manufacturers, radical suffragettes, Roosevelts at their wildest, bank presidents and hook-worms. The field covers a wide range, but the doctor who invented this new malady was determined that the present war should not cut into his field of emolument. This new disease, "angina of effort," under a proficient expert, expresses itself with shooting pains in the chest and the patient's bank account. Angina weakness is said to be developed inordinately by the modern rush of life. Doctors chasing down cases should take warning accordingly.

—Brains win, as usual, and San Quentin has come into its own, at last, as an agency to provide specialists in gray matter. San Francisco has furnished that institution some of the shrewdest caputs, but they were considered then as being somewhat declassé in the fact that they were convicted. A fig for such consideration in these thrifty days in chasing the Almighty Dollar. So the "brains" of the recent interstate arson gang, that made oodles of money before it was caught, has been offered a position of $6,000 a year the moment his sentence expires. It computed that one-third of the fires in this country are the work of arsonists. Burright is a genius in this line. He will detect and explain to the insurance company the tricks played by artist arsonists in collecting insurance. By a little ingenious reorganization of its inmates, football games, rowing regattas and dramatic performances, there is no reason why San Quentin may not rival the State University in turning out brainy builders of the commonwealth.

—Those cheerful humorists of the city treasury, the board of supervisors, have decided that it is absolutely necessary for the city to have a paint inspector, one of the breed that Ruef described as being amply competent to lick the paint off a house. There seems to be something in the taste and the pay that these cheerful contributors to political buffoonery thoroughly enjoy. The University of California is making tests of paint by competent experts right along, but apparently the board of supervisors want a man who is a specialist in smelling and tasting paint exclusively within the city limits of San Francisco. Why go to Berkeley to have paint tested, when the time might be better employed in painting the political machine in the red-light district? However, the appointment of a paint inspector sounds reasonable politically, for it naturally paves the way of the appointment of a paint eradicator with a salary of $200 per.

—"Rev. Madison Slaughter laughed in his most attractive manner, as Constable Rugh threw open the door of the felon's cell and the prisoner passed in." That is the way in which this ex-reverend gentleman expressed his easy-going conscience after conviction, according to a reporter. Perhaps the recommendation of mercy on the part of the jury lightened his heart and cheered his hopes. Could anything more blasting than this attitude and frame of mind show the folly of his claim of innocence against the charges brought by the fifteen year old girl? A rather slippery cel of the cloth is such a fellow that can salve his conscience so easily and complacently.

—Jules famous restaurant, south side of Market street, just below Third, is now offering a remarkably attractive 40 cent luncheon as an attractive feature. Though the price is less than formerly, the luncheon is of the usual high quality of this widely known establishment. Dancing, the best of music, cabaret entertainment, is provided during dinner in the evening. $1 with wine.

MRS. PATTEN SCORES A TRIUMPH.

Society people turned out in large numbers to the dramatic recital of Louise Anderson Patten held at the Hotel Shattuck, Berkeley, on the afternoon of May 10th. Mrs. Patten, a cousin of Thomas Nelson Page, by the way, is a graduate of the Emerson College, Boston, and has had professional training on the stage. She is well known in the Bay cities for her fine and conscientious work, but on this occasion she reached the high-water mark in her presentation of Hermann Hagedorn's miracle play, "The Triumph of Love."

The author belongs to that notable class of young dramatists trained by Professor Baker of Harvard. He recently wrote a Shakespearean masque for William Winter, which created a furore in New York. But his miracle play should bring him a wider fame. He is fortunate in having such an interpreter as Mrs. Patten, who seems to have been born for the part. Mr. Hagedorn has granted her the use of all his published works, and she is introducing them in the West. It remained for the miracle play to grip the audience, a play in which a mother holds back death from her sick child by the white flame of an absolutely selfless love, till, shorn of his strength, Death falls away and makes room for Life.

Nothing so powerful has been presented since Nazimova was here in "War Brides," but the marvel of this presentation is the fact that Mrs. Patten, without any stage accessories, roused her auditors to such a height of exaltation that they left the hall as though they had seen a vision. It was the perfection of artistry.

HOW THE WAR STARTED.

The "British-American" has the following story regarding how the war started:

The Crown Prince was having a nice little chat with his father and apropos of nothing said: "Father, who started this war?"

"I know," said his father, playfully, "but I won't tell."

"Did Cousin George start it?" persisted the youth.

"No," said father.

"Did Cousin Nicholas?"

"No," said papa.

"Did Francis Joseph?"

"No," said the old man.

"Well, who did, then?"

"I'll tell you, son. You remember Teddy Roosevelt came out of Central Africa and called on us several years ago, and I showed him our magnificent army; I showed him our great and glorious navy; I showed him the Zeps and the submarines and the gas bags; and Teddy, greatly impressed, slapped me on the back and said: 'Bill, my boy, you can lick the world.' And like a damned fool I believed him."

—"When you didn't have your fare, did the conductor make you get off and walk?" "Only get off. He didn't care whether I walked or sat down"—Topeka Journal.

Allen's Foot-Ease for the Troops.

Many war zone hospitals have ordered Allen's Foot-Ease, the antiseptic powder, for use among the troops. Shaken into the shoes and used in the foot-bath. Allen's Foot-Ease gives rest and comfort, takes the friction from the shoe, and prevents the feet getting tired or foot-sore. Drug and Department Stores everywhere sell it, 25c. Don't accept any substitute. Try it to-day.

Bereavements of Scotts.

Rejoicing in the Scott family over the advent of a son into the home of the Harry Scotts, was soon turned into gloom, for the little boy's brief span on earth was artificially lengthened into three days, and then even the oxygen failed to keep the breath of life in the little body.

This was the first grandson in the Scott family, the Walter Martins having two little girls, and there was much jubilation over the fact that there was a new offshoot on the family tree—but the winds of destiny snapped the tender little twig.

One of the sad features of the affair was that the news of the arrival of the baby was sent to the Jackling yacht by wireless, and Mrs. Walter Martin was thus apprised of the welcome tidings. The yacht could not be picked up by wireless when the baby breathed its last, and so at this writing Mrs. Martin is still rejoicing in the birth of a son to her brother.

For a day or two the young mother was in a precarious condition, but her magnificent vitality pulled her over the hard places, and there is no need now for anxiety over her condition.

Reputations Go up in Smoke

Country cousins continue to be shocked at the presence of My Lady Nicotine. On Monday of this week there were the usual luncheon parties at the St. Francis Hotel. Mrs. Fred Kohl parted a shopping tour in the middle, with an early luncheon lightly veiled in pale gray smoke, for Mrs. Kohl allows herself only two cigarettes at the noon hour.

A few tables away the Templeton Crockers were entertaining Miss Marion Newhall and a party of friends, and before long their table was enveloped in an impenetrable haze of fog.

Mrs. Talbot Walker and her party of girl friends blew dainty puffs with the accustomed ease of those who have learned the etiquette of the cigarette at finishing school.

Mrs. Robert Hayes Smith and Miss Leslie Miller lunched together before going to the skating rink and Mrs. Smith enjoyed a cigarette between courses as is her wont—Miss Miller is one of the few girls who cuts Lady Nicotine dead—at least in public.

But the fact that there were several others who did not add their quota to the columns and spirals of smoke that hung in the air like clouds gone astray, did not serve to assuage the outraged feelings of a severe looking couple. In the midst of their luncheon, with most of their food untouched, the man ordered the waiter to bring the check, hustled his wife into her coat and prepared to leave the dining doom. The waiter asked whether anything was wrong with the food, and in stentorian tones that must have registered on most of the eardrums in the room, he announced that decent, God-fearing people where he came from didn't countenance women who flouted their viciousness, and they hadn't come to the city to have their standards corrupted!

One of the society women who overheard him remarked that the "old boy ought to stick around until he became used to the life," and the irate couple left the dining room with this advice affronting their ears. I discovered afterwards that they are wealthy people from Wisconsin on the lap of their wander-year. Evidently the "best set" in their home town has remained pure and undefiled, and it would be safest for them to stay hermetically sealed there, for they are bound to succumb to apoplexy before they ever enter the second lap of their journey.

Mixed Drinks

The skating fad has not only given a crisp tang to the diversions of the younger set, but it has provided the clubmen with a new afternoon diversion. Ned Greenway "broke the ice" (appropriate figure of speech) and now a number of his clubmates have followed his example of dropping in there for an hour to watch the gyrations of the beginners and the grace of the professionals.

The genial Ned also set the example of inviting the more charming of the professionals to drop into his box for refreshments, and now it is not an unusual sight to see society sipping its beverages with one of the performers. The other afternoon Greenway had a loge party, which included the Misses Anna Peters, Leslie Miller and Mrs. Robert Hayes Smith, and as all three of these young women are on the floor constantly, he would have been left pretty much to his own devices had it not been for the Queen of the Ice, who "sat out" the between-whiles with him.

Miss Edith Chesebrough, whose brilliant playing won the Northern California Golf Championship for 1916 at Burlingame by defeating Mrs. C. F. Ford, last year's champion, by a score of 5 up and 4 to play.

Romantic Youth

The other day I heard two devoted and cautious mothers discussing the propriety of letting their debutante daughters spend so much time at the ice rink. Said one: "I don't exactly like the idea of daughter skating around with that good looking, graceful young man that she has engaged as teacher, but what can I do about it?"

Thus spoke up the equally watchful mother: "Oh, we needn't worry about it—our girls are not the kind that elope with chauffeurs, skating instructors, and such. Why, only the other day a group of girls were at the house, and I overheard them agreeing that one of the reasons all the girls are so anxious to become proficient on the ice is that Corbet Moody spends so much of his time there, and is such a beautiful skater that the girl who can qualify on the ice will have a great advantage over the others."

Corbet Moody is one of the very wealthy and very eligible young men, and as that list is never a long one, he naturally does not pass unnoticed by matchmaking mothers and appraising daughters. Young Moody is interested in forming hockey teams to battle on the ice, and he is trying to train some of the young Blingum polo players to form. Moody played hockey with the Harvard team while he was at Cambridge.

which the guests fold away in their memory boxes, designed for orange scented affairs. The bride's gown was a wonderful filmy combination of tulle cloth of silver and real lace, a gown that had all the fluffy float away effect of the season, the real lace and silver cloth seeming to just hold it down to earth. The attendant, Mrs. Paul Ford and the Misses Marie Louise Harrington, Florence von Lemann, Pauline Woodson and Helen Hooper, wore gowns that made the bride's gown look like a French corsage bouquet. There were very interesting details, blue, green and lavender. Miss Helen Hooper gave a gift at the end of the rainbow and the blue rose wore by Miss Wheeler at the other. Miss Helen Hooper came from New York to officiate at the wedding, and an avid tennis enthusiast by that set now that the wedding preparations and arrangements are over.

The girls down the peninsula way who are talking of spending part of the summer in domestic and sick room lore include the Misses Elena Eyre, Arabella Schwerin, Gertrude Hopkins and a number of others. But so far their plans are nebulous.

Mrs. C. Hortington Mitchell of Nome, Alaska, who is staying at the Hotel Oakland, gave a very pretty luncheon Monday, May 15th. Her guests were Mesdames U. S. Webb, S. V. Wilson, L. A. Burrell, Carl Brown, Halstead, Bert Brown, Aurnee Goodwin. Among the prominent arrivals at the Hotel Oakland are Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Mrs. Jno. F. Finn of San Francisco has taken apartments at the Hotel Oakland.

The tea and supper crowds that throng the St. Francis days have as their dominant interest the new sport of skating, and keen partisanship is taken by the element that favors the American and the following that swears by the fancier European style. The headquarters of the Happyland Ice Carnival in the St. Francis are filled with smart devotees of the latest fad, and tables in the big hotel are filled with animated votaries of the Ice Palace, who expound their theories of correct form with fervid emphasis.

PERSONAL ADVENTURES IN A WHIRL OF TALCUM

BY HENRY McDONALD SPENCER

*Wilt thou yet take all Galilean? But these thou shalt not take,
The laurel, the palms and the pæan; the breast of the nymphs in the brake.*

The Talcumed Show at the Columbia

This may be said for musical comedy: There is no sham or hypocrisy about it, nothing esoteric or concealed—not even the fair forms of the young lady assistants. At least we hear no pedantic piffle about the "Art" of the mummer (or "artistry" in the case of a she-mummer), no, indeed, what are there is in the performance is credited to where it belongs: The authors—if there are any—and the stage director.

The eupeptic young ladies who form the chief attraction in this form of entertainment are hired frankly and solely for their pulchritude, and provided they know their right hand from their hind foot, they do well enough; for, as Oscar Wilde pointed out, "being" is an art in itself. For the rest, the leading lady does not have to sing very well if she is good looking enough—the better looking, the less she has to sing, e. g., Lilian Russell—and the comedians would disdain such an emasculated view of their work as to call it "art."

Therefore, the best test of m. c. is: Do you like it? It is provided for entertainment purposes pure and simple; there is no lesson, no Uplift, no Improvement. And what better function can the stage fulfill than that of entertainment? Put it to the question: Of all the plays that have been written did one of them ever make a dreadful dawn any less dreadful? But if you are carried for a moment out of the dull gray world into a region of Romance and color, in which the women are transformed into beings beautiful as Thetis, graceful as Iris and enchanting as Circe, then you have had something much more worth while than preachments, clinical lectures, sex-hygiene lessons, white slave expositions, or the other didactice drool of our Puritanical stage.

*Thou hast conquered, O pale Galilean; the world has grown gray

Therefore, musical comedy comes mighty near to being art after all; in any event, it is the most Greek thing that is produced beyond our footlights.

Now, having this out of my system, what was I going to talk about? Oh, yes! "The Midnight Girl" at the Columbia, which is a perfect illustration of what I mean. There is a plot, I suppose, and if Watson had not mislaid the needle, I might be able to unravel it, but then the beauty of the Midnight Girl is that she needs no plot, she is quite alright by herself, thank you. Speaking generally, the stage is bright and is kept constantly festooned with shapely and husky young women in all stages of undress; the music is tuneful, if reminiscent; the jokes old favorites; the singing agreeable, and the leading voices sufficiently pleasing without inviting comparisons with this or that grand opera star. What more could you ask? The leading lady—or prima donna, I beg her pardon—Miss Eleanor Henry, has quite the kind of voice I have just described; she is good looking and, what is more to the point, has a personality. For one thing at least I take off my hat to her: She is not afraid of comparisons with her chorus, for in the last act when Miss Henry "and ensemble" appeared for the finale, she was attired in the very frankest kind of a beach promenade suit, and believe me, she would go in the front row anywhere, even if she never sang another note.

It would have been agreeable to have had a solo or two from our old favorite, Arthur Cunningham, but on Monday night, at least, he stuck to the original text, and I suppose that we should be thankful that we were spared some flag waving or sob songs, many of which are more distinguished by their sentiment than beauty. The leading male singer, Madison Smith, was a well nourished gentleman with an excellent voice, and without the slightest trace of animation in his face or manner. Evidently he was chosen for his voice. Dorothy Webb jollied the conductor in true Broadway style, and was a pronounced hit with the audience. There was none of the principals, however, who was given a heartier reception and more applause than Maude Beatty, who played here in the Gaiety, I believe; she looked very handsome in her last act costume, and sang truly in the grand manner and with much vigor and expression.

It would be unfair not to mention Edwin T. Emery and William Lorraine, for following the intimation conveyed in the foregoing, if there is any conscious "artistry" on the stage, it is the production, aside from the authors, of the directors. Much credit must be given them for the pictures, groupings, coloring, training, and the fact that not once did the performance sag. I know what that means.

And now, the bon bouche: The ladies of the chorus show a distinct tendency to get away from the anaemic or tubercular type of flapper, which appears everywhere just now both on the stage and in life; they were robust—you know, the robustness in the right spots—and I, for one, am not sorry.

My judgment? The third from the end, stage right, in the cabaret chorus before the curtain at the close of the second act; also the fourth from the left in the opening nurses' chorus in the first act. "You know me, Al."

P. S.—This is the only musical comedy review which contains no reference to the "tired business man."

A Well-Acted Preachment at Pantages

How far the stage may be used to advantage to convey preachments either for or against Puritanism, is a question, but there is no question as to whether "The New Chief of Police" at Pantages this week is well done or not. Certainly it is a most excellent performance on the part of Landers Stevens, Georgia Cooper and company; the characterization is uniformly true. The preachment in this case is in favor of redlight segregation and against the alleged sins and shortcomings of "society." When you have a goodlooking and magnetic actor uttering platitudes, the house, i. e., the average man, is sure to be with him; but when in addition he takes a fling at those constituting that mysterious secret order called "Society," which, according to the stage, is undermining the foundations of the republic, then the protagonist of the play is bound to carry the audience off its feet. And for the simple reason that not over one-tenth of one per cent of the population may fairly be included in that mystic band. However, plays are not built to express ultimate logic, but to fill the theatre, so there you are.

Redington and Knight, tramp clowns and acrobats, gave a novel and highly entertaining act which especially pleased all the children—myself included. This is what I call a vaudeville act. Every one envied the male member of the team of Archer and Carr when he held his partner's hand so long, at least I did, although for such a goodlooking girl he might have had some brighter patter. Mrs. Bob Fitzsimmons must have had a hard life with Bob, for she always looks so sad. She conveyed the impression that the ship had just been submarined, and therefore did not do herself justice. Why doesn't some one stand in the wings and tell her to "smile a little"; even a canned smile is better than gloom. The young ladies who constituted the Musical Six all worked hard. By the way, the harpist is a peach. In direct contrast to their predecessor, they appeared to be having a lot of fun themselves, and although I don't know that they fiddled and played any better than the orchestra, they certainly went well.

At the Orpheum this Week

A unique sketch—or as some of my contemporaries say—a most unique—(as if there could be degrees of "unique") was presented by Helen Lackaye and Co. called "Overtones." The setting betrays the new influence, and was a remarkable arrangement of yellows, the most futurist scene that we have had on our local stage. It also showed that a talking play can go and that the old theory that you must have action is now outmoded. However, both Wilde and Shaw proved that years ago. The performance was very pleasing and reflects great credit on the author, players and producer.

Without wishing to make any invidious comparisons (what hypocrisy, as if that is not just what I am going to do) I think that Lydia Barry has it on Stella Mayhew, who was a headliner last week and received much favorable mention. She is funnier, not so obvious and more magnetic. Aveling and Lloyd also really are funny, I have to hand it to them; therefore it is a pity they don't have some of their patter rewritten. We all know that ladies drink and sometimes are in liquor; but in some way, perhaps foolishly, we don't like to hear it made a subject of third party jest. I am decidedly anti-Puritan and in favor of the greatest freedom for the individual—also my reason tells me that patriotism is only sublimated parochialism—nevertheless there are some feelings stronger, apparently, than reason.

Dear, delightful Fritzi Scheff was there again this week with her saucy little fling of the skirt, so that I almost forgive her for being a Teuton. The Luxanne Dancers showed nothing more than what one can see in any well regulated dancing school, and otherwise the bill contained the usual fillers.

Advance Notices

Orpheum—Marie Cahill, one of the most delightful comediennes on the American stage, will next week head one of the best bills ever offered at the Orpheum. Miss Cahill, by force of her personality and art, has become pre-eminent in her profession, and has triumphed both in musical comedy and in vaudeville. Dorothy Toye, the girl with two grand opera voices, soprano and tenor, will be heard in popular and important numbers. Jim Cook and Jack Lorenz will appear in the comedy skit, "The Millionaires," in which these satirical humorists portray a couple of knights of the ties. Sven-gali, a dog whose mentality has been the cause of many lectures and clinic examinations, will give a performance that borders on the miraculous. The De Leon Sisters, two pretty girls, will sing a number of songs with elaborate costumes and stage settings. Willing, Bentley and Willing, who are two comedians, one in black face and one in white, will present a little darktown travesty they have called "Scrappy Coons." Manuel Quiroga, the young Spanish violinist, in compliance with a numerously expressed wish, will play a return engagement which will be limited to next week only. The Orpheum Travelogue will consist of Indoor Chinese Types and Scenes in Old Beskra (Algeria) and Roucn (Normandy). Next week will positively be the last of the charming Watson Sisters, and also of Helene Lackey in the much discussed and highly original and successful play, "Overtones."

People's Philharmonic Orchestra at Pavilion Rink—A musical novelty of great importance and of great beauty is promised at the next People's Philharmonic Orchestra concert, at Pavilion Rink, Thursday evening, May 25th, when a large choral organization from the Pacific Musical Society, augmented by some of the best professional talent in San Francisco will appear in Debussy's exquisite work, "The Blessed Damosel," supported by the sixty-five instrumentalists of the symphonic orchestra under the direction of Nikolai Sokoloff. This will be the first local presentation of the work as it was written, and it follows a production given by the choral section of the Pacific Musical Society under Albert Elkus' direction, with a piano arrangement of the rich orchestra score. "The Blessed Damosel" is an adaptation by Frank Damosch of the poem by Dante Gabriel Rossetti, and set to music by the master musical colorist of modern music.

The work calls for two solo roles, and they will be sung by Miss Myrtle Claire Donnelly and Mrs. M. E. Blanchard, in the roles of the "Blessed Damosel" and the "Narrator," respectively.

In addition to the presentation of the Debussy work, the program will offer a schedule of splendid orchestral numbers. Haydn's D major symphony; Von Weber's overture to "Oberon," one of the most melodious and popular works ever penned, and two selections, "In the Aul" and "March Sardar," from the "Caucasian Sketches" of Ippolitow-Ivanow, will be the orchestras offerings.

General admission is 25 cents and reserved seats 50 cents. Tickets may be secured at Sherman, Clay & Company's and at Kohler & Chase's, or, on the night of the concert, at Pavilion Rink, corner Sutter and Pierce streets.

New Program at Pantages.—Lew Williams and his "South American beauties," will star on the new eight act program which opens at the Pantages on Sunday afternoon. Of course, the girls are not natives of the far-away republic, but the plot is built on the travesty lines of a make-believe State that rises in revolt of the prevalence of dancing—hence the title, "A Tangoland Revolution." There are three brothers, the Hickeys, on the bill, who have been scoring a knockout success along the circuit, with their acrobatic fun. Hyman Adler, the character actor, will be seen again in his playlet of the Ghetto, "Solomon's Bargain." Jennie Middlevitch, who was "discovered" by Mrs. Alexander Pantages while working in a millinery store in Seattle, has proved a real find. The girl plays the violin with the touch of a genuine master. There are others, including Sprague and McNeece, entertaining skaters; Harry Gilbert, a Yiddish lad who warbles operatic arias; the Field Sisters, Grecian dancers, and the newest chapters of the serial, "The Iron Claw."

To Celebrate Shakespeare's Tercentenary.—To-day is the day, this Saturday, when every loyal San Franciscan who admires the greatest of dramatists will wend his or her way to Sutro Forest, near Forest Hill, southeast corner Sloat Boulevard and Nineteenth avenue, at 2:30 p. m., to witness the beautiful celebration given there of the famous "garden scenes" from Shakespeare's plays. A wealth of excellent talent has volunteered to take part in the acts, scenes, folk dances, choruses, etc., many of the effects being represented as in the poet's time.

The programme opens with the overture of Mendelssohn's Midsummer Night's Dream. Part I furnishes a village green of the time of Shakespeare, with a cast of village characters and several dozen young girls of well known local families who divide the parts of straw gatherers and fuel gatherers for the purpose of portraying life at the time Shakespeare lived on the banks of the Avon. Part II presents a German phantasy of The Midsummer Night, with Shakespeare, Titania, Oberon and Puck in the cast, and a swarm of dancing fairies and gnomes, followed by a duet, "I Know a Bank Whereon the Wild Thyme Blows," by Miss Ruth Gibbs, soprano, and Miss Bessie Margaret Murray, mezzo-soprano. Part III introduces scenes from The Tempest, with songs, dancing and music, followed by Charminade scarf dance by Misses Sara Jackson, Estelle McGuire and Peggy Parrish. Part IV is a scene from "As You Like It," with the hunter's song, "What Shall He Have That Killed the Deer?" Part V closes the programme with a dance of the hours, the dawn, morning, noon, afternoon, evening, night. All the dances, except those in the Tempest, will be directed by Miss Helen Adler. Admission, adults, 50 cents; children under 12, 25 cents. Take Haight street cars, No. 17; Mission cars, No. 12; or the fire road for automobiles on 19th avenue.

LIBRARY TABLE

"Great Spiritual Writers of America."

According to the introduction of the author, George Hamlin Fitch, this little book "is intended to round out and complete the studies in literature already issued in 'Comfort Found in Good Old Books' and 'Modern English Books of Power.'" In this third book the author has selected representative American authors who in his judgment best represent the national genius. The limits of the book make it imperative to include only a few of the greatest authors. Among his selections are Emerson, Walt Whitman, Irving, Poe, Hawthorne, Cooper, Longfellow, Lowell, Holmes, Whittier, Howells, Mark Twain and Bret Harte. The aim of the author is to arouse interest in these great American authors, and to indicate their best works. Tons of alleged literature floods the reading public monthly, and only by fine discrimination and some knowledge of the field can the ordinary mortal reach the great spiritual writers whose works are lasting and stimulating. The representative writers selected by the author have made American literature known to the world—and every American reader should know them familiarly and what they stand for.

"The Case of the Filipinos."

This is the first book on the Philippine question by a Filipino of the younger generation educated in American schools. It voices a generation of Filipinos that has grown to maturity during the period of American sovereignty over the Islands. Maximo Kalaw, the author, presents the different stages through which American public opinion with regard to the Philippines has passed. He makes it clear that the American educational policy of emphasizing the advantages of American occupation, and suppressing the desire for independence, has failed. He shows that the Filipino youth is even stronger in its aspiration for independence than the generation that is passing by, and that the desire for national independence cannot be eradicated from the hearts of the Filipino people. He argues from this fact, as well as from the American principle that "just governments derive their powers from the consent of the governed," that the only wise course for our government to pursue is to grant the Filipinos a speedy independence. The most important fact brought out in this book is that the Filipinos are a distinct political entity, bound together by a highly developed sense of nationality, and that thus the real issue is not the success or failure of American experiments in the Islands, or the fitness or unfitness of the Filipinos to establish American institutions, but the relation that should exist between the American people and the Filipino people.

"Rajani, Songs of the Night."

In the introduction to this little volume, David Starr Jordan has set forth succinctly and sympathetically the effort of a young Hindu scholar to express in English "free verse," something of the dream-poetry of his native Bengal. The little poems are not translations, nor imitations. They are the fancies of the night, "Rajani," suggestions and hints of the emotions which darkness awakens in the mind of a mystical scholar. In the first of the series, "Bhikshu" (mendicant), the poet, feels himself awakening as a suppliant for reality in the light of Oriental thought. With the dawn, he hails the Lotus as the symbol of the source hence flows the "nectar of sustenance," the life impulse which vivifies all living creatures. "Rajani," the world of baffling dreams, showers down its strange sensations, but with all there goes the hidden sense of lack of reality. The author, Dhan Gopal Mukerji, is 26 years old, and has graduated from universities in Calcutta, Tokio, University of California, and Stanford.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL ITEMS

ENGAGEMENTS.

DE FORREST-EDWARDS.—The engagement of Miss Clara-Marie de Forrest, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. T. de Forrest of Palo Alto, to Alfred Rice Edwards of San Francisco, was announced at a tea at the De Forrest home on Monday.

DE MOTTE-GREENE.—Announcement is made of the engagement of Miss Catharine De Motte and Ambrose Evarts Greene, both of Corning. The announcement was made by Mr. and Mrs. Marshall De Mott at their country home recently.

FOULKE-CATES.—From Chicago comes word of the engagement of Miss Gwendolyn Foulke, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Dudley Foulke, of Washington and Richmond, Ind., and Dudley Cates of this city. Dudley Cates is the son of George Cates of Richmond, Ind. He has lived for some years in California, and took his college course at the University of California. He left for the East about ten days ago, planning to be away for several weeks. The date for the wedding is not set.

WEDDING ANNOUNCEMENTS.

KENDRICK-PELL.—Miss Helen Kendrick and Rodman C. Pell, Jr., will be married on June 30th at Grace Episcopal Cathedral. After the ceremony there will be a reception at the Rodney Kendrick home on Clay street. Mrs. Rodney Kendrick, Jr., will be the bride's only attendant and Clifford A. Smith will be best man. The ushers will be Messrs. Paige Montague, Russell Medcraft and Rodney Kendrick, Jr.

KINKAID-CURTIS.—June is to be unusually replete with festal wedding parties in lovely garden surroundings. One of the largest of these will be the wedding of Miss Dorothy Kinkaid and Carleton Curtis, who are to be married at the Hacienda of Mrs. Phoebe Hearst near Pleasanton. It will take place on Saturday, June 3d, and Bishop William Ford Nichols will officiate, his health permitting.

SULLIVAN-BARR.—Miss Muriel Albertine Sullivan will become the bride of John Barr at noon on Saturday, June 24th, at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Sullivan, in San Rafael.

WEDDINGS.

FLETCHER-COYKENDALL.—Miss Hannah Wells Fletcher became the wife of Horatio F. Coykendall Sunday evening at a pretty wedding in Trinity Church, San Jose. The bride is the daughter of the late Frank Fletcher. Horatio F. Coykendall is the son of Horatio G. Coykendall, the capitalist, who is known as the "peach king." Mr. and Mrs. Horatio F. Coykendall will make their home in Cupertino on their return from their honeymoon in Southern California.

JOHNS-HUNT.—Lovely hues of summer were blended to make a pictorial scene for the marriage of Miss Lucille Johns and Charles Warren Hunt, Jr., at St. Luke's Church Tuesday night. Henry Van Dyke Johns gave his daughter away, and the Reverend Edward Morgan read the ritual. Following the church service, there was a reception and wedding supper at Sorosis Club, with dancing continuing the festivity for several hours. Mr. and Mrs. Hunt will live for a few weeks at Stanford Court, when they return from their honeymoon, until they complete their own home plans.

DINNERS.

BLACK.—Miss Marie Louise Black was hostess Tuesday evening at a dinner at her home, followed by a dancing party at the St. Francis. The affair was in honor of her house guest, Miss Josephine Marshall of Virginia.

BOYSEN.—Mrs. Francis Carolan was the guest of honor at a dinner which Mr. and Mrs. Hjalmer B. Boyesen gave in New York a few days ago.

BRIDGES.—Captain Charles H. Bridges, U. S. A., and Mrs. Bridges gave a dinner Friday night before the hop at Fort Scott.

CRELLIN.—Mr. and Mrs. E. William Crellin were hosts at dinner Wednesday evening at their residence on Van Ness avenue. Afterwards the party went to the theatre.

CRIMMINS.—The skating fad was responsible for the enjoyable party at which Mrs. Martin Crimmins was hostess last Thursday evening. Her guests assembled for dinner in her attractive home at the Presidio and afterward went to the Techau Ice Palace for an hour or two of the sport, concluding the evening with supper at the St. Francis.

DE GUIGNE.—Mr. and Mrs. Christian De Guigne entertained some friends at a dinner party Sunday night in honor of Mrs. Harold Dillingham, who left on Wednesday for Honolulu.

GREENWOOD.—Mrs. George D. Greenwood and Miss Suzette Greenwood will give a large tea on May 26th at their residence in Oakland.

LEE.—The younger set was entertained at a dinner Wednesday evening by Mr. and Mrs. Cuyler Lee. It was given in the Rose Room of the Palace Hotel, and afterward the party attended the theatre.

MULLER.—Lieutenant LeR. Hollis Muller and Miss Muller gave a dinner party Monday evening, in compliment to Colonel and Mrs. Alfred Hunter and Captain and Mrs. George T. Perkins, who sail on June 5th for Honolulu.

POPE.—Lieutenant-Commander and Mrs. Ralph E. Pope presided at a dinner recently at their home in Mare Island, entertaining their guests before the hop.

SCOTT.—Mr. and Mrs. Henry T. Scott gave an elaborate dinner recently at their home in Burlingame in compliment to Mrs. Whitelaw Reid, who left this week for her home in New York.

LILIENTHAL.—Mr. and Mrs. Tesse Lilienthal will take the John S. Hendricks house in San Mateo for the summer, and the latter will go to Berkeley, occupying the Bruce Cornwall residence.

MAGEE.—Miss Katherine Magee, the daughter of the late Thomas Magee, Sr., will spend part of the summer as the guest of Mrs. Harold Mortenson of Klamath Falls.

MILLER.—Miss Flora Miller will accompany her father, H. M. A. Miller, on an extended trip East as soon as her term at school is over for this year. They will go South, visiting at San Diego, then to the Grand Canyon for a few days, and East by way of New Orleans.

NASH.—Mrs. George L. Nash, of St. Louis, is the guest of her daughter, Mrs. Augustus Costigan, at Redwood City.

NIXON.—Mrs. Nixon, the wife of the late Senator Nixon of Nevada, has come to California to spend several months, and has rented Mr. Robert Coleman's house in Burlingame for the summer.

POETT.—Mr. and Mrs. Harry Poett and their children, who left last Saturday for New York, have decided to spend several months in the East, and with Mrs. Poett's brother-in-law and sister Mr. and Mrs. Timlow, have taken a house on Long Island for the summer.

TOLIN.—Mr. and Mrs. Clement Tolin have taken possession of the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene de Sable in San Mateo, where they will remain until work is completed on their own handsome home, which is undergoing extensive renovations.

WILSON.—Mr. and Mrs. Edgar N. Wilson and their son Forbes Wilson have closed their home on Walnut street and have moved to Berkeley for the summer.

WOODY.—Mr. and Mrs. Baldwin Wood plan to visit the Harold E. Graham family in Honolulu this summer. The exact date of their departure is not decided.

WOODS.—Mr. and Mrs. Robert J. Woods have returned to their home on Clay street after a visit of several days in San Mateo, where they were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Harker.

HOW SOME RECRUITS DODGE THE WAR.

Here are some of the "queer" excuses given the recruiting board in London by those called by the government for military service:

A theatrical manager received three months' grace when he explained that it there were no amusements "the people would have nowhere to go."

A cartoonist thought himself indispensable because his drawings amused the soldiers at the front.

"The champion clog dancer of the world" thought his supremacy in that art should not be endangered.

"The best violin-maker in England" felt he was needed at home.

A popular "Nut" of the music halls felt that London's indispensable reviews would be failures without him.

A buyer of silks, an "expert sausage cutter," a warehouse "Samson" with remarkable lifting ability, and a Bible-packer all made pleas, but obtained exemptions for brief periods only.

One employer appealed for the exemption of an "artistic sign painter."

"In such a time of stress as this, I think the country can get along with inartistic signs," ruled the chairman.

At Liverpool an undertaker asserted he was truly indispensable. The tribunal told him to "R. I. P." for six months. After that he must join the army, where there is much work to be done by those skilled in the burial of the dead.

—"Isn't your wife, sir, a little addicted to loquacity?" "Of course not, doctor! My wife never touches a drop of anything strong."—Baltimore American.

EXHIBITION OF FRENCH WAR POSTERS

The Harvard Club of Paris has collected a remarkable collection of posters, lithographs of war subjects, and subjects gathered by contemporary artists, for exhibition in New York, Chicago, New Orleans, and this city, under the auspices of the Harvard Clubs of the cities named. Among the artists represented are Alfred-Philippe Roll, Jean Louis Forain, Lucien Simon, Jules Adler, Francois Flameng, Adolphe Willette, Hansi, Lemaire, Lepere, Charles Lucien Leandre, Charles Duvent, Meudin, Roulbot and Steinlen. According to J. Nilsen Laurvik, a critic of international reputation, these drawings are of high interest as works of art, as well as reflections of war conditions in France. The Harvard Club expects to put them on exhibition in about two weeks. Afterward they are to be presented either to the University of California or Stanford.

RECOVERING VITALITY.

The dismal plight of large numbers of weak-willed men and women who are the slaves of drugs or liquor are a severe tax and handicap, economically and morally, upon the human race. The prisons, hospitals, relief homes are filled with them, and under our present system and methods, practically nothing is done to eradicate their slavish desires and rebuild them mentally, morally and physically. The desire continues with them, the disease is established and the victim pursues his drug or liquor, as the case may be, as soon as he regains his freedom.

The desire must be eliminated. It can be absolutely wiped out of the victim in a short period of time. The application of scientific treatment and higher thoughts established and the real self brought into existence, these men and women can be made new in body and mind.

The Lincoln Institute, Bush and Octavia streets, is prepared to assist the local officials in such cases as they may assign to the care of the institute. Under its charge, the parole prisoner will be cleansed morally, mentally and physically, and the liquor and drug desires eliminated in a short time. When cured, the patient is provided with a position where he or she may earn an honest living. The only obligation is a monthly return of the amount incurred by the institute from the patient.

—In striking contrast to the prevailing "songs of hate" is a march song from the pen of Walter Wolff, titled "Wave On, Wave On in Peace, Star Spangled Banner." A plea is here set forth that the United States keep out of the European embroglio. Mr. Wolff shows his versatility in departing from his usual waltz compositions, and writing a march, in the interwinding of the melody of which are unexpected departures from the straight path. Harmony is not sacrificed for effect, as is the case with so many marches. The first public rendition of the piece was given on Sunday, May 14th, by the Park band, and was received most favorably.

987 MILES SEALED IN HIGH GEAR
LOS ANGELES TO SAN FRANCISCO AND RETURN

New High Gear Record By

Eight Cylinder

KING

Greatest demonstration of motor flexibility ever accomplished. Locked in high gear, with shifting lever removed and transmission and differential case sealed, KING EIGHT covered the distance from Los Angeles to San Francisco, via Coast Route, and returned to Los Angeles, via Valley and Ridge Route, still locked in high gear. Traveled as high as 68 miles per hour, and at times throttled down to two miles an hour.

For flexibility and efficiency of operation, this performance in a strictly stock car establishes A NEW RECORD in motor car history.

OPEN SUNDAYS

The whole country is doing an extraordinary business, in spite of the uncertainties in the European situation and the difficulties encountered in Mexico, according to the outlook of Wells Fargo Nevada National Bank. Among the reassuring developments affecting industrial affairs during the last month, we have: the continued prosperity of the railroads; unprecedented activity in steel, based largely on heavy railroad buying and a broad demand for American steel products in Europe; a phenomenal foreign demand for American copper, which accounts for the high prices prevailing for the metal, and the giving out of the largest single orders ever known in the industry; pig iron production on May 1st at the rate of 109,072 tons a day as against 108,509 tons at the beginning of April; and the heavy bank clearings, showing that prosperity is general throughout the United States and not confined to those sections that have benefited chiefly through the release of war orders. Pacific Coast movement of business activity is indicated by a comparison of the bank clearings with 1915: The first four months of 1916 shows an increase of 17.8 per cent; April an increase of 20.5 per cent, and the last week of April 28.01 per cent.

An increase during April of 498,560 tons of unfilled orders on the books of the United States Steel Corporation brings that tonnage to the unprecedented total of 9,892,551 tons. This offers further evidence of the remarkable conditions prevailing in the steel industry.

The shortage in unskilled labor results chiefly from the stoppage of immigration, at a time when the services of such helpers are badly needed. It is probably true that wages as a whole, taking in the entire country, are to-day at record level. It is evident that after the war ends, both employers and employees will have to give earnest thought to the problem of getting back to a normal basis again.

—The price of bar silver has reached 77 1/4 cents, the highest figure since 1893, and shows signs of further advance. There is a wide demand for the metal from many of the nations for use in small currency. Much of it is being used in paying troops. Egypt has just made the silver rupee legal tender. The Indian government is also reported to be acquiring large quantities. All these demands have stimulated production in this country and Canada. Old-time silver mines on the Pacific Coast are now being cleared out and worked for profit. Mexico, rich in its great silver lodes, is out of the market, as practically all its mines are closed down. Bradstreet forecasts that the price of the metal will go higher.

—The Southern Pacific Company has just issued an unusually attractive and comprehensive illustrated folder furnishing tourists and travelers detailed information regarding the "Four Big Routes" across America, "Sunset," "Ogden," "Shasta" and the "El Paso Route," with the best dining service on the continent. Prominent local attractions of all four routes are judiciously illustrated from San Francisco Bay and Berkeley, the Missions, big trees, Los Angeles territory, Mardi Gras in New Orleans, the great Salt Lake Cut-off, the Mormon Temple, the Yellowstone Park, Shasta, the great Green River Country to the skyscrapers of New York, Philadelphia and the splendid views of Washington. The booklet is a digest of these famous routes which the traveler cannot afford to miss. Write for one.

Winning Fernando Nelson Perpetual Challenge Trophy

The car used was a valve-in-head 6 D 45 touring car, selling in San Francisco for $1170. It carried four passengers and every piece of factory equipment excepting the top, and was the same car that lowered the Los-Angeles-to-San Francisco Valley Route record on April 25th.

FASTEST TRAIN TIME 14 HOURS

The Coast road is the more difficult of the two intercity pathways, because of the long and heavy mountain grades, the rough sandy roads and the dense ocean fogs that make driving difficult and dangerous and put the car to the severest possible tests.

Buick Power, Speed and Dependability are proven by the fact that despite the continued heavy hammering over these grades and rough roads at high speed, not once was the Buick compelled to stop. Not a fault developed in any part of the car, and the Motor, Body and Chassis were in the same perfect condition at the finish as at the start.

A Wonderful Demonstration by a Wonderful Car

The Buick time is official. The car was checked out and in by accredited newspaper men and Western Union officials.

Buick Car Makes Another Record

If the Buick continues to smash San Francisco-Los Angeles records, the Cafeteria City soon will be a suburb of the Golden Gate. Another road record, the second within three weeks, has been established by the Buick, and now all existing speed marks between the two leading cities in California are held in the Buick camp by a good margin.

The latest triumph for the Buick was recorded last Tuesday, when a regulation stock touring car, fully equipped and carrying four passengers, smashed the best previous intercity mark over the Coast route by some two hours, and in so doing captured the much-coveted Fernando Nelson perpetual challenge trophy.

The Buick's time for the 464 mile trip was 12 hours 47 minutes and 50 seconds, which is an exceptionally splendid performance, considering the numerous grades and rough roads that are encountered along the route at the present time, and the frequent detours made necessary because of highway construction. The car was driven most of the way by Joe Nikrent, his brother, Fred, acting as relief driver, while George Danielson and G. L. Hadley were the official observers.

One of the interesting features of the record-breaking performance is the fact that the Buick used is the same car that three weeks ago established the record for the valley route between Los Angeles and San Francisco at 10 hours and 47 minutes.

The car was equipped with the same set of Goodyear cord tires that brought it successfully here without a puncture, and the trip south was also made without a single tire mishap, and the casings showed little effect of rough usage.

Senate Passed Bankhead Bill. Federal Roads Bill Up to Conferees.

Federal roads legislation in the present Congress now rests with the conferees of the Senate and the House of Representatives, with indications that an agreement is practically assured.

The Senate has just passed the Bankhead bill, named after the chairman of the committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, while the House previously had accepted the Shackelford bill of its Committee on Roads.

Both measures had their basis in a draft prepared by the American Association of State Highway Officials, which had the endorsement of the American Automobile Association and other organizations interested in highway improvement.

The House bill omitted some things which the Senate committee considered should be included, and one of these was area as one of the three factors in the distribution of the Federal money appropriated, population and post road mileage being the other items. The answer of the Senate committee was a substitute measure which did not suffer much revision under discussion, except that a rider was tacked on by the insistence of the Western Senators providing for a million dollars annually for the purpose of constructing roads and trails in the national forest reserves, such money, however, to be paid back to the Federal Treasury from the revenues derived from the forests, at the rate of ten per cent a year.

During the discussion in the Senate, it was quite thoroughly emphasized that the adoption of the proposed legislation meant the return of the National government to a form of internal improvement which had been discontinued since the building of the old Cumberland road. Furthermore, if the co-operation between the National government and the several States proved as advantageous as was contended, it was set forth there would follow an increased quantity of this aid to the States.

The Senate bill provides for a first year appropriation of $5,000,000, and an increase each year of that amount until $25,000,000 is reached, or a grand total of $75,000,000. The States contribute a like amount, and this $150,000,000 is expended in the several States on whatever roads a State highway department and the Secretary of Agriculture mutually agree. The House bill called for an annual appropriation which should not exceed $25,000,000. It was generally admitted that any appropriation should start with a comparatively small amount, and then gradually expand as the efficacy of the arrangement was demonstrated.

Eastern Millionaires Order Scripps-Booths

"A day or two ago," said General Sales Manager Wm. B. Stout, of the Scripps-Booth Company, "we received a letter from the Isotta Fraschini Motor Company, our distributors in New York City, announcing four sales on a recent Saturday that indicate convincingly the class of purchasers who appreciate these luxurious light cars.

"The letter stated that Lawrence Waterbury, the world famed sportsman, particularly known as the bulwark of our national polo team, bought his third Scripps-Booth roadster; that Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr., had ordered a Scripps-Booth coupe, and that George J. Gould had taken a Scripps-Booth roadster.

"Another interesting sale on this same day was made to John McCormack, the highest-paid singer of ballads in the world. Mr. McCormack said that the Scripps-Booth not only appealed to his aesthetic sense by its artistic lines, but also caught his practical side by its efficient and economical performance, as well as its handiness for transportation en tour."

There are many garages in town, and the motorist is often in a quandary as to where to go, especially for permanent service. There are very few who give you the QUALITY of service of Dow & Green, in Taylor street, between O'Farrell and Geary. Here your car will receive something more than the "once over," and the prices are moderate.

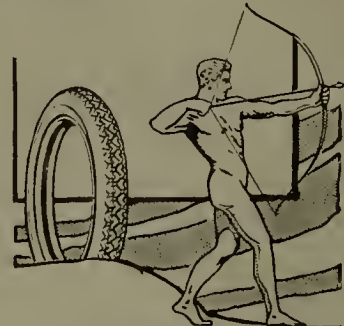

Soldiers, white, black or red, find tobacco a comfort in the field. The picture shows President H. B. Joy, of the Packard Motor Car Company, presenting an Indian scout with smoking tobacco and cigarette papers in front of the Quartermaster's Depot in Columbus, New Mexico.

FASHION'S FADS AND FRILLS

There is something particularly appealing to the dainty, well-groomed woman, about ribbon-trimmed, be-frilled petticoats; they cannot be banished for long from the wardrobe. This season the petticoat has returned in all its old-time fluffiness, to keep our airy, bouffant frocks in countenance.

Paris sends us, of course, the daintiest possible of linen, hand-embroidered, lace-trimmed, ribbon-banded novelties, many of them so extremely fascinating that one is tempted to wear the a sport garment. A charming little cap of net and ribbon completes the set most attractively. Many of these sets are developed in plain materials, voile, wash satin, lawn and the like, and are trimmed with bands, collars, cuffs, and pockets of the charmingly colored cretonne. A cap banded in cretonne is practical and becoming.

Novel Ideas in Negligees.

Negligees and petticoats for the June bride are dainty and fascinating to a degree. The negligees are simple and most becoming. Chiffon or crepe Georgette are the materials most favored for their airy garments, destined for the bride or the woman who has time to luxuriate in their charm. Pale blue, with touches of gold or yellow; rose pink, with a touch of orchid at girdle or throat; white, with pale green, and similar combinations, selected to harmonize with eyes and hair. It is not unusual to find the negligee of chiffon, belted with a crush girdle of roses, or other artificial flowers; it is an attractive and artistic notion. The combining of several tones in the girdle, which is usually of net or chiffon, is another pretty way of introducing interesting combinations; for instance, a pale pink negligee is girdled with a wide sash, having long ends of several folds of vari-colored net or maline, in pink, blue, orchid and similar French colorings.

Bayadere Striped Skirt.

For sports and morning wear, the awning striped materials, linens, ducks, and canvas weaves are particularly well liked. The stripes may run up and down, or around the figure, as shown here. This skirt is fashioned of linen, combining several of the vivid colors now modish, and is worn with a shirt blouse of voile with vest of the linen. The square neck is a becoming feature.

Among the simple waist models of the summer are many with the outside peplum. These are of voile, organdy or Georgette, in pink, blue, pale green and similar shades, intended for wear with skirts of black taffeta or with white and colored wash skirts. Pongee is also favored for these outside blouses. Tiny buttons, steel, gilt or gunmetal, and a belt of black or colored ribbon are about the only trimming for these unless it be a second collar of a contrasting shade.

Collars and cuffs are interesting details of blouses; the cuffs usually fit tightly about the wrist, flaring becomingly over the hands. The open throat is of course the modish arrangement for summer, although most of the shirtwaists and other blouses are made with the adjustable collar which may be worn high or low, as fancied.

Dr. Byron Haines, Dentist, has resumed practice at his office in Gunst Building, S. W. corner Geary and Powell streets.

Breakfast Set Coat and Petticoat

Awning Stripes in a Morning Dress

sheerest of organdy, chiffon or Georgette frocks in order that their beauty may be shown. Many of these petticoats are boned, corded or wired, in order that the frocks, under which they are worn, may have the proper swing. For the dance there are net and taffeta creations, made with petal upon petal, in rose like formation, the edges of the petaled ruffles pinked or picoted. For the organdy afternoon frock, the slip is favored, of net and organdy, lace and ribbon trimmed. The bodice of the slip is usually a straight, wide band of ribbon, lace, or a dainty embroidery flouncing, held in place with shoulder straps of ribbon or lace. It is not unusual to see a frilly petticoat of dark blue or red taffeta, the ruffles pinked and finished with an inset or edge of white Valenciennes, or similar lace edge.

The Underbodice.

The underbodice, to keep pace with the petticoat, must be very dainty indeed. In a dark blue taffeta petticoat, the skirt portion is attached at the normal waist line to a pale pink moire bodice. The bodice is merely a straight band of moire ribbon held over the shoulders by narrow pink ribbons. The upper edge of the bodice is effectively trimmed with small silk rosebuds.

Breakfast Coat and Petticoat.

One of the novelties of the season is the breakfast set, consisting of coat, petticoat and boudoir cap. The coat and skirt illustrated here show a particularly good combination; the coat is developed in pongee, and the skirt is of taffeta, banded in the same taffeta, the bands edged with narrow Valenciennes lace. The deep strap pockets on the coat give it the appearance of

The negotiations that have been pending between Pacific Board authorities, the Continental and the Fidelity-Phenix, are involved in deepest mystery. Osborn smiles blandly and says he is quite unaware of anything he might say that would be of interest, and the Continental people are conducting themselves with the same reserve. From an authoritative source, however, it is learned that all parties concerned are agreed upon terms which would enable the Henry Evans companies to become members of the Board, with the exception of a single particular pronounced to be of so grave a nature as to jeopardize the life of the Board. This is hinted to be the question of separation. President Evans is now at Paso Robles, en route home. Mr. Tuttle returned to Chicago Saturday.

Chairman Joseph Mulvihill, of the public welfare committee, of the San Francisco Supervisors, called a meeting for last Thursday afternoon to discuss the proposed reduction of fire insurance rates at which there were present representatives of the fire department and of the Fire Underwriters Association of the Pacific. It was shown by the fire underwriters that not only had faith been kept with the city in the matter of reduced rates, but that this had been accomplished in the face of the fact that the city had failed to live up to its part of the agreement to improve fire fighting facilities.

For placing compensation policies on more than thirty wood and fuel yards at less than manual rates, the California general agency of the Ocean Accident and Guaranty and the San Francisco brokerage firm of Spengler & Fraser have been ordered by Commissioner Phelps to refrain from writing workmen's compensation policies covering this class of business for a period of two years. In addition, Spengler & Fraser have had their license to write workmen's compensation business suspended from May 1st to June 15th.

It is conservatively estimated that the total expended for building operations carried on in San Francisco since the conflagration of 1906 is not less than $358,000,000. This does not include operations carried on by the State of California, the United States Government, the Panama-Pacific Exposition, or the municipal government, prior to December 31, 1912. There have been 63,164 building permits issued since the big fire.

The San Francisco Insurance Brokers Exchange is including in its list of improper practices the covering of risks on cover notes the time on which is not accounted for owing to the issuance of policies at the expiration of the cover notes. Considerable of this form of placing business on buildings in the course of construction has been going on in San Francisco and the bay counties, and the practices are in violation of the rules of the Pacific Board and the Brokers' Exchange.

—Thieves stole a pump from a dairy in the outskirts of town the other day. It is well that they didn't take the well too.

—Here comes a woman poet who says she can "smell the stars." Hope they do not smell as bad as her variety of poetry does.

—Slaughter sent in his resignation as pastor before being taken to San Quentin. Resigned to his congregation, but not to his fate.

—The Progressives, lacking, as all reformers do, a sense of humor, are taking their Chicago convention with perfect seriousness.

—The automobile thieves who whizzed past the police at seventy-five miles an hour showed discrimination in their choice of machines.

—The big laundries want the license raised from $40 to $1,000 a year, and the little fellows say the big ones are trying to do them dirt.

—The Presbyterians have put the ban on Sunday golf, baseball, automobiling, newspapers and cards. The world do move—backwards.

—Hughes, declining to be a candidate, seems to be getting as far as Roosevelt, who is nearly breaking his neck in his scramble for the place.

—Caught in the act of ducking another student, fourteen high school pupils have been suspended. They should have ducked before being caught.

—Some candy dealers in dry Berkeley have been caught selling confections with rum and brandy in them. Sugar pigs instead of blind pigs.

—Conference at Petaluma is discussing the diseases of chickens. The chief ailment of the Powell street variety is dry throat, inducing excessive thirst.

—The Authors' League talks of affiliating with the American Federation of Labor. Would be a good thing if it limited the output of some of the best sellers.

—Aviator flies four hundred miles in four hours. It would not be right to say he's a bird—the birds hide their heads under their leaden wings in shame at that speed.

—While the enemies of the administration criticise the inefficiency of our navy, the gunners thereof just go right ahead busting up world records at target practice.

—The Holiness Christian Church, in session at Elwood, Indiana, has denounced men's "sport" shirts as immoral. Catalogue of that sort need to have their minds disinfected.

—Thieves have stolen several feet of lead pipe from the base of the McKinley statue in Golden Gate Park. Lead-pipe hold-up men getting ready for a dark night campaign.

—It's odd that one seldom hears a San Franciscan say, "I am going to Oakland to-day," or "I want to go to Oakland to-day." He always says: "I have to go to Oakland to-day."

—It has been decided by the officials of Nevada City that the town's new water collector, a woman, will not be compelled to visit the saloons. That sort of changes a wet job into a dry one.

—Forty-five Ohio convicts were given an "honor" day off that they might play baseball away from prison with United States soldiers. One cannot help admiring the courage of the umpire.

—Rockefeller has new striped pants and a new blue necktie, and he gave one of his little grandsons a nickel. Our deductive instinct leads us to exclaim in hissing tones: "Ah! Gasoline!"

—The Ford Peace Expedition has adopted a new name. It is now the Neutral Conference for Continuous Mediation. One of the qualifications for membership is to be able to say it without stuttering.

—Slaughter, in prison, thinking of those who were as guilty as he, but go unpunished will have time to reflect that a profession of Godliness makes the penalty the heavier when one is found out.

—The women have been driven out of the red light district by the purists who sponsored the abatement law. Fine! Now nearly every residence block in town will have a little red light district of its own.

—Taxpayers have appeared before the supervisors with the complaint that there is no balance sheet to show just how the public money is spent. Which is just what the officials want to conceal from the public.

—Now is the time when the suburban real estate man sings his merry lay and induces the dweller in the city to buy a place that is half a mile from the station, and will seem three miles in next winter's wind and mud and rain.

—Tacoma man has been sentenced to six months in jail for saying that George Washington was a drunkard and a blasphemous. Having no desire to meet the same fate, we will refrain from saying what we think about the judge.

—The Grand Jury, in declaring the fitneys to be a menace to life and limb did not spring any news on the public, who, painfully aware of the fact that the "Tie Lizzies" are a poison, are looking to the authorities to find some way to suppress them.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

SURELY HE SHOULD REMEMBER THAT GOOD OLD RULE.

—Bradley in the Chicago Daily News.

TEDDY AS A CANDIDATE. The News Letter has persistently stuck to its first declaration that Roosevelt would be the logical candidate of the illogical Republican party for the reason that he cannot win against Wilson. That party is still suffering from the blow he gave it four years ago. Hughes is the only outside man to conjure with, and the circumstances disclose that Hughes will not accept the nomination unless there is a landslide for him. Such an accident in a convention filled with delegates elected at national primaries is the last thing on the cards to eventualize, unless handled by such an adept politician as Roosevelt. The unusual conditions attending this convention were evidently prepared by a kindly Providence for the exclusive use of the abiding Teddy. With Wall street behind him, the battle cry of "Go the limit in Preparedness," "Peace in Mexico if we have to conquer that country," and "Europe must respect us, even if we have to fight her," Teddy's candidacy ought to appeal to voters of misunderstanding. Teddy in his time, through Congress, wrote some excellent laws into the national statutes of this country. But his seven years' job affected his imagination with the idea that he is the one man to save this country from shipwreck, that he is destined to be the George Washington of 1916, and direct the events of this country in its relation to the great European war. Teddy is our leading authority as a political letter writer, but when it comes to putting him in the presidential chair for the purpose of furnishing "movies" in the nation's history, there is only one thing to do—side-track Teddy.

STILL STIRRING TROUBLE IN MEXICO.

The yellow newspapers of the country continue their efforts to stir up all the trouble possible between this country and Mexico in order to help the elements on both sides of the border in their machinations to crush Carranza and to discredit President Wilson in his efforts to bring peace to that distracted land. Villa is the cat's-paw in the hands of these several parties, the largest in Mexico being the científicos, the old conservatives that formed the backbone of the former Diaz party. They have provided Villa with money at times to create revolutions, and to make sensational raids, the most sensational being that at Columbus, a raid that almost created the invasion of Mexico, as was hoped by the conspirators. Many of the yellow press periodicals of this country have been suborned by these same conspirators to laud Villa to the skies as the greatest military General developed by Mexico. Among his countrymen he is known as a "farm" bandit, which means that they recognize him as the lowest kind of cut-throat, a notation that matches his exploits exactly. Despite the explosive and mad rantings of these yellow sheets the pacification of Mexico is going along as satisfactorily as could be expected of a country rent by five years of internecine and banditta warfare.

PEACE AND ITS PRICE.

When the war broke out, Kitchener was asked how long it would last. "Three years," he said. His judgment seems to be somewhere near the mark. Many optimists feel confident that it will not last till Christmas. Germany, stalled and still holding the large slice of European territory she has captured from her opponents, is naturally eager to consider peace proposals at once. France, England and Russia, having fought her to a standstill, see the day ahead when they will be able to wear her down as Grant did Lee in the battle of the wilderness. Aside from this they have swept the seas of German shipping and have captured practically all of Germany's rich territorial possessions and broken her power and influence in Asia. Accordingly they are in a position to make some sort of a trade in a peace conference. But the object of this war will never end, in the judgment of the entente, till the imperialism of Prussia, as expressed by its Emperor, is crushed. From their point of view, to allow Prussia to remain in the imperial saddle would mean that the Emperor would bide his time, and when the auspicious moment arrived he would spring on his enemies and break through their ring more successfully than he did in his attempt on Belgium. Under these conditions peace therefore will not likely appear in sight until the entente have worn down the German regiments to such degree as will oblige the leaders to listen to peace proposals offered by England, France and Russia.

—The extraordinary increase in the number of automobiles throughout this country is reflected here in California in the motor vehicle tax gathered at Sacramento, which amounts this year to $1,903,701, on 177,185 motors of various kinds. It is forecasted that 200,000 motor cars will be owned in this State by the close of the year. This condition reflects prosperity and business acumen. This year California has registered, so far a higher number of cars than any other State except New York. Considering population, this is a fine showing for us.

—A prominent physician has so many patients accumulating on his list through nervous break-down due directly to reading the war news as conceived and provided daily by the local newspapers that he has issued an omnibus prescription for their relief. In part, it runs as follows: When Emperor William and Czar Nicholas rings you up over the longest leased wire in the world, and insists on telling you all their troubles, and beseech you to sympathize with them, write a note to the editor, thanking him for introducing you so intimately to the crowned heads of Europe. Then take a cold bath and kick yourself for wasting your time on such rubbish. The exercise will strengthen your nerve and decrease your discomfort. To quiet the pulse, after swallowing figures published of the slain, take an up-to-date pruning fork and carefully snip off all the ciphers, as every yellow paper provides a red rubber stamp covered with a long row of ciphers, which the writer uses to save time in rolling up the records of the dead. Take the remaining figures and divide them carefully, parboil, and if any remain, throw them away, as they are useless in furnishing any exact information. Pay no attention to headings that are dated Berlin, Paris, Petrograd, Milpitas, etc.; they are all written in the city where the paper containing them is published.

—What bilious misogynist would suspect that classic Berkeley "is not always what it seems." Now comes the director of the State Food and Drug Laboratory there and declares that much of the innocent looking candy in the shops there is loaded with various forms of seductive alcoholic concoctions. No wonder that the candy stores of Berkeley are leading the State in the sale of confectionery. No wonder that the "chocolate cherries" that ripen in the candy pots there have leaped to "war" prices and crowded buttermilk off the map at the Faculty Club. There's a kick in every candy and a marathon exhilaration for the eager wight who nicks his teeth into a "chocolate cherry." The seventy candy dealers who have been summoned to make explanation have declared that there is something in the ozone or the gasoline in Berkeley that eats into the pure candy and lays some kind of an alcoholic egg, as it were, and creates a deleterious substance which only the brainy tribunal at the Hague can explain. A syndicate representing $10,000,000 organized this week in Berkeley to invest that sum in raising chocolate cherries on the fences of that town if the State goes dry, this November.

—At last it has come, a dansant tea at the meeting of the board of supervisors. It was only a question of time when that formality so tenderly engendered and so enthusiastically incubated at the recent Exposition should be transferred to the new Civic Center and put on exhibition with a bronze plaque. Some heavy-weight wit has dubbed the stuff "tiffin" because of the Indians that will gather. There will be coffee and dough-boys for those "as likes 'em," and a drap of the stuff for those that knows the pass-word at the right door. Gee! but how the Exposition has educated us since we used to lick the paint off the supervisorial rooms, antichambers and cuspidors. And there's talk of putting Ed. Greenway on the payroll at $5,000 per to act as umpire of good form.

—Mayor Rolph must still be swapping rhymes in poetry with Virgil Ovid, the Sweet Singer of Michigan, Narcissus and the ghost of "Sconchin Maloney," for there is a beautiful woman heavily veiled who shadows his steps whenever the gasoline of his motor and his rhymes give out. Every evening she recklessly leaves a bouquet on Jim's homestep, and Jim takes it in-doors, out of the evening fog, because there is never a bill attached to it. Some florists are so thoughtful. As for Mrs. Rolph, she is taking life easy in several smart new summer frocks. She caught a glimpse of the woman's face one day as a gust of wind lifted the veil. Heaven help Jim and his rhymes if a gust of wind lifts the veil for Jim.

FASHION'S FADS AND FRILLS

From Fashion's New York court comes the word that summer furs will be more modish this year even than they were last. The huge boa of white fox held the favorite place last summer, but this season the shops are offering a variety of furs for summer wear. In spite of the apparent absurdity, a wide soft stole of mole, mink, seal or ermine often proves a very grateful addition to the sheer summer dance frock on seaside porch or board walk. While the round, soft fox boa will in all probability continue to be popular with tailored suits and dresses, the long, wide stole will be more used for evening. A particularly interesting stole of tailless ermine, shown in one of the large fur shops, is lined with a startling black and white striped taffeta, while one of moleskin has a vivid orange lining. Here again is offered an effective way to introduce the bright bit of color so necessary to the summer costume.

The Spanish Flounce Dress

The Popularity of Voile

Plain, striped, checked, dotted and patterned voiles, in all colors and combinations, are in demand for the corded, ruffled, fluffy lingerie frock. Of course there are voiles and voiles; the true voile wears and washes well, is sheer and dainty, quite as attractive as the more expensive cottons. There is a hint here and there of the return of hand painted muslins for blouses and dresses. Probably the stenciled hat suggested the idea, which is quaint and pretty, if not exactly practical. All sorts of clever notions might be worked out by the woman with ingenious brain and fingers, but if the material were to be purchased or ordered, the fad might prove rather expensive. Sashes and scarfs, however, will carry out the notion with voile and organdy frocks very effectively.

Summer Frock of Taffeta

Flower-Trimmed Hats.

Summer would not be summer without the flower-decked hat, but the notion rarely lasts longer than Easter, except on the large picture hat of Leghorn, crin or hemp, which completes the June bridesmaid's costume, or the summer beauty's dainty frock. This season, however, there is a strong indication that flowers will play more than their ordinary role in summer millinery. The medium brimmed, rather stiff tailored hat, with its upstanding bouquet of vari-colored blossoms, so popular some years back, is being noticed here and there; one sees, also, a number of flower turbans; flower crowns are favored with certain costumes and wreaths are quite popular. The flower-stenciled hats are very well liked indeed. Ribbon, too, is smart for trimming, and ostrich, in the form of fringe and fancies, is a popular trimming.

The Return of Ostrich Boas.

The Easter parade, both on the board walk at Atlantic City, and Fifth avenue, New York, was marked by the colored ostrich feather boas which completed so effectively the dark tailored suits, donned in accordance with the weather. Marabou is also quite modish for neck pieces. The revival of the feather boa will be welcomed by many, as it lends a soft, becoming touch to suit or gown, and in its new shade, a welcome bit of contrast. These boas, as a rule, are short, finished at the ends with tassels of chenille or silk, and close up closely about the throat.

Maline ruches, and smart little fancies of pleated or pinked ribbon, are also modish for the tailored suit or one-piece street frock. Quaint buckles are often used effectively for closing them.

The quaint little capes, pelerines and similar fancies of taffeta, faille or satin now being offered for summer wear, are other attractive additions to the summer frock; in all probability these will be quite as popular as the fur stole, or the feather boa, or even a little more favored. They are becoming, quite in keeping with the dresses of the moment, may easily be fashioned at home, and are of course much less expensive than fur. Ruffles, cordings and conventionalized trimmings, quilled, pleated, pinked or shirred, are used to finish these capes, lending still another old-fashioned touch. An organdy or voile frock will receive an added daintiness in one of these taffeta capes, of a shade corresponding to or harmoniously contrasting with the dominant color of the dress.

CELEBRATED TRICENTENARY OF SHAKESPEARE.

Perhaps the best outdoor scenic production to celebrate the tricentenary of Shakespeare was given this week by the pupils and friends of the Hamlin School in the beautiful Sutro Forest, near Forest Hill. The pageant itself was marked by rare good judgment, and in its development portrayed most of the interesting outdoor features of life in Shakespeare's time. It proved an unusual treat to the large and interested audience.

Scores of pretty girls in multi-colored costumes formed an attractive background for the presentation of forest scenes from the bard's plays. Music and song entertained the big assemblage, seated beneath the trees, between the showing of the various plays by the young actors and actresses.

The first scene was of a village green of the time of Shakespeare, with the children representing fuel and straw gatherers, and the towns-people. Followed "The Midsummer Night," and then scenes from "The Tempest." Then Miss Merle Epstein rendered a song, "Nymphs and Fauns," during which two score of pretty girls danced as "Nymphs and Reapers." After more music and song and a scarf dance by the Misses Sara Jackson, Estelle McGuire and Peggy Parrish, scenes from "As You Like It" were given. The program concluded with the "Dance of the Hours."

Among the large number of pupils from the school who took part in the various scenes were:

Misses Desiree Marriott, Virginia Powell, Louise Fisher, Grace Webb, Jean Frickelton, Viola Buck, Mary Bennett, Lucille Nathan, Margaret Barrette, Martha Doak, Adele Vance, Nance Obeare, Beatrice Baronidis, Ruth Bert, Bessie Margaret Murray, Sara Jackson, Katherine Parker, Aida Moran, Lydia Weeden, Marion Johnson, Blanche Morase, Grace Jerome, Florence Trask, Margaret Wallace, Estelle McGuire, Liona Welbanks, Ethel Hilmer, Margaret Farrish, Muriel Bowler, Carmen Sprague, Ruth Seeley, Marguerite Moran, Barbara Payne and Georgia Schafer.

Most of the dances on the program were staged under the direction of Miss Helen Adair.

THE FOREIGN LEGION.

There are about 600 Americans in the foreign legion of the French army; so many of them have petitioned to join the flying corps that a squadilla of Americans is being formed. These Americans, however, are only a handful of the actual number of foreigners who have joined the foreign legion, the first marching regiment of which is probably the most picturesque in the French army.

It is an inspiring sight to see a regiment of the legion on the march; negroes and blonde Swedes go side by side with swarthy Italians. Men who have dined with kings and dwelt in marble halls sink their identity under a borrowed name and march with a Polish tailor or a cowboy from the wild West. All sorts of famous men have fallen on the field of battle while fighting with the legion. Binet Valmer, from the Argentine; the Luxembourg writer, Sosthene Kurth, the son of Maxim Gorky, Camilio Ramirez, from Venezuela, a Colombian poet, Fernandez de Bengoela, another from Ecuador, Rodolfo Seminario, the novelist Sanchez Carrero, all fell for France on the battlefields of Artois and Champagne.

The poet Ismail Urdometa was killed in the Dardanelles while rushing a Turkish trench at the point of the bayonet, and the son of the Russian ambassador at Paris, M. Isvolsky, was severely wounded while fighting beside Lieutenant Alexis Comnene, the great-grandson of the Emperor of Trebizond. Bob Scanlon, the Negro boxer, is with the legion, and Francois Faber from Luxembourg, the professional cyclist, fell in action. So did Alex Carter, the famous steeple-chase jockey. Winnie O'Connor, one of the best jockeys that ever crossed the Atlantic, and widely known in the United States, joined the legion.

Fifteen young students from the Beaux Arts in Paris joined in a body. Not only all classes, but all races, are blended together in the first marching regiment. When Italy went to war the Italians were transferred to their own army, but previously they fought heroically, and two grandsons of Garibaldi lost their lives in France.

The nucleus of the second regiment was formed on the evening of July 31, 1914, in a Parisian cafe. Some young Italians issued an appeal, and as a result, about 3,000 English, Belgians, Italians and Slavs attended the meeting to consider how they could best aid the country of their adoption. Later on, when British and American residents in Paris tried to form regiments of their own, the authorities informed them of their inability to accept the offer, so it was decided that the volunteers should be drafted into the foreign legion. The pay of the men of the legion is the same as that of the other soldiers of France—five cents a day and an allowance of tobacco and wine.

The total membership of the legion is said to be 35,400, made up as follows:

500 Britons, 500 Luxembourgers, 600 Americans, 1,000 Spaniards, 1,500 Greeks, 1,500 Belgians, 1,600 Czechs and Galicians, 1,700 Poles and Danes, 2,000 Swiss, 3,500 Russians, 5,000 Italians, 10,000 Alsatians, 6,000 other nationalities.

THE DONKEY

When fishes flew and forests walked,
And figs grew upon thorn,
Some moment when the moon was blood,
Then surely I was born;

With monstrous head and sickening cry,
And ears like errant wings,
The devil's walking parody
On all four-footed things.

The tattered outlaw of the earth,
Of ancient, crooked will;
Starve, scourge, deride me; I am dumb,
I keep my secret still.

Fools! For I also had my hour;
One far fierce hour and sweet:
There was a shout about my ears,
And palms before my feet.

HOCKEY SEASON OPENS AT ICE PALACE.

The Techau Tavern will swing into the full tide of success this week with a gala attraction, the opening of the promised hockey season, Friday night. Society has seized this unusually attractive event, and has prevailed on the management to allow the occasion to be used for the purpose of giving a benefit for "Happyland" and raising a fund to provide summer outings for poor children. The day will be divided into three periods, morning, afternoon and evening. There will be general skating in all three periods. In the afternoon and evening there will be numbers of attractive events, the crowning events being of course in the evening. The program is so unusually attractive that practically all the boxes and most of the seats on the ground floor have already been sold. The event of the evening will be the opening of the hockey season in a thrilling contest between the skillful players of the Polo Club and the San Francisco Hockey Club, the first contest of its kind to be played in the West and the first of the star features of a number of surprises of like character which the management has up its sleeve to make the Ice Palace the magnet of such amusements on the Pacific Coast. Famous expert skaters brought from the East by the management will illustrate numbers of thrilling and skillful feats on the ice. Preliminary to the exciting hockey game there will be a hockey dinner and gymkana at Techau Tavern. During the supper at the Ice Palace general dancing will prevail, punctuated with numbers of delightful novelties furnished by the resourceful and versatile management. Among the patronesses of the event are: Mrs. William H. Crocker, Mrs. James L. Flood, Mrs. Jesse W. Lilienthal, Mrs. Fred W. McNear, Mrs. M. J. Brandenstein, Mrs. C. O. G. Miller, Mrs. W. S. EMMELINE PANKHURST TO SPEAK.

Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst spoke to a crowded banquet room Thursday when the San Francisco Center entertained her at a luncheon at the Palace Hotel. Society women came up to town from all sections of the Peninsula to get a glimpse of this British celebrity. She did not disappoint when she spoke of the "Effects of the War on the Women of England," but showed that she has never faltered in her hope that in the end the women of her country will be treated as the equal of men. Monday night she talks for the benefit of the widows and orphans of the destitute Serbians, to whom she is devoting all of her energies, and all of the funds accrued from her lecture on that evening will be given to the destitute families of the Allies. The lecture will be held in the Pavilion on Sutter and Steiner streets at 8:15 o'clock. Besides Mrs. Pankhurst's talk there will be Slavonic songs by Mme. Felicia Romabowska and Mme. Rudick Godfrey. Members of the local Serbian colony will appear on the platform dressed in native costume. There are 15,000 seats for the meeting on sale for $1 a seat, and 15,000 for 75 cents. The rest of the house will go for 50 cents general admission.

GRANDSON OF BRET HARTE LOCATES HERE.

In the June issue of Overland Monthly, Richard Bret Harte, grandson of the founder of Overland Monthly, recounts his impressions of life in New York, with cartoon illustrations. This is the introductory chapter to a series of articles of his experiences in several of the big cities of the country where he stopped over, in his trip westward, to become acquainted with his fellow Americans. He was born in England, was educated there, and on the Continent, and this is his first visit to California. Its attractions have proven so great that he has decided to make his home here permanently.

Eleonora Sears a "Poor Relation."

A friend in Boston serves some very choice tidbits in between the personal courses of her letter, and I cannot refrain from passing them around in this column. She writes that she saw Eleonora Sears at a tea the other day, and "Bobby" was boasting for California in hyperbole that could not be surpassed in the literature sent out by a Tourish Agency. Incidentally, that athletic young lady is not gung it so hard these days, for she has again 'knocked out her knee skating, and has been ordered to rest it up. Last winter she skated a great deal, and her knee behaved so peculiarly that she had to have it looked after by a bone specialist, who pronounced it water on the knee.

The gossips are once more speculating about Miss Sears' matrimonial intentions. She is giving a good deal of her time to a very eligible New York youth with a bank roll large enough to iron out all cares about the necessities of life, although he is not in the multi class.

Her cousin, Miss Phyllis Sears, who has just announced her engagement to Bayard Tuckerman of New York, and she is the motif of all the post-season entertaining. The branch of the Sears family to which the famous Eleonora belongs is not so wealthy as the other side of the Sears family. Phyllis Sears and her sister, Mrs. Bayard Warren, divided the enormous fortune of their mother, who was the only heir of the late Francis Bartlett. My friend writes that it is too bad that San Francisco has not a Francis Bartlett—it was he who, with a scratch of his pen, gave two million dollars to the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, and one of his large business deals was a real estate venture in Chicago for which he paid eleven million dollars cash.

So you see that "relatively" Bobby Sears is a "poor relation" of her cousin, Phyllis Sears.

The Cluff Re-unioning.

The intimate friends of Mrs. Miles (Mabel Wilson) have had only a glimpse of her, as she has spent all her time since her arrival quietly visiting her mother, Mrs. Cluff, and her sisters at the Cluff country home down the peninsula. But she plans to remain out here all summer, and as soon as the family reunioning is over, there will be a great deal of entertaining in her honor, for she is one of the genuinely beloved young women, and has been much missed since she married the Easterner.

As Mabel Cluff she was one of the most popular of a group of girls who made their debut in the "open season" for beautiful debutantes, as it was called, for there were so many very attractive girls in that group, and Mabel Cluff was by many considered the most beautiful of them all. Edith Huntington (now Mrs. Frank Wakefield), Helen de Young (Mrs. George Cameron), and Georgie Hopkins (Mrs. Fred McNear), were just a few of those that lent a special sparkle to that season.

Miss Cluff announced her engagement to Jack Wilson at an impromptu tea at the De Young home, where a number of young people were rehearsing private theatricals. For a long time the Wilson home, with its happy complement of three children, was considered an ideal one, but for two or three years before his death, Jack Wilson barely kept his frail craft afloat in the financial breakers that were pounding bigger men to pieces.

Six months after his death his wife went to New York to visit friends, and there met and married her present husband, who is interested in copper mines in Canada, where they spend much of their time, running down to New York for diversion. Mr. Miles will join his wife here, probably some time in August, if his business affairs permit.

Herrin Averts Martin Law Suit.

From New York I hear that if the rumor that Mrs. Peter Martin is in a precarious condition be true, she is certainly a radiant contradiction, for she never looked in better health or spirits. However, those "in the know" maintain that the doctors are not very cheerful about her health, and have warned her that she must put on the breaks and live the simple life—which is not the line of least resistance for the daring Lily.

She is now in a comfortable financial position—which I am told is due to the sagacity of William F. Herrin, who represented her as counsel in the conferences with the Martin family over her share of their estate as Peter's widow. The story goes that Mrs. Eleanor Martin and Walter Martin wanted to give her an allowance, to which she would not agree, and for a long time it looked as though there would be a lawsuit. Which explains why Mrs. Peter Martin spent so many months out here after her husband's death, instead of going to her own family in New York.

I am told that in the end she not only got what she wanted, but achieved it without alienating the friendship of her mother-in-law, Mrs. Eleanor Martin, who has stood by her through all the vagaries that have alienated most of her San Francisco friends. Mrs. Downey Harvey is the only other member of the clan who has not bracketed friendship with the past. The Walter Martins and Lily Oelrichs Martin no longer keep up any pretense of friendship.

Cupid on Skates.

Mrs. Mary Belle Gwin Follis is the latest recruit to the skating fad, and is fast becoming proficient on the ice. Mrs. Follis is one of the most beautiful young matrons in San Francisco, and is by many considered the handsomest of all. She has, of course, not been permitted to have a widowhood unpunctuated by proposals, but in spite of her many admirers and suitors she has failed to respond to the appeals of the wooing tribes. However, those who cast an appraising eye upon such matters are wondering if the suit of a certain swain is not meeting with more than her usual indifferent response, and it would not particularly surprise them if Mrs. Follis succumbed to the importunities of this very eligible gentleman.

Andrew Welch War Baby.

Mrs. Andrew Welch is one of the most indefatigable of the skating devotees, and spends every afternoon with the special instructor who is guiding her to proficiency. The magnificent new home which the Welchs are building in town will rival the Jackling home, and is in that neighborhood. Mrs. Welch is taking a great interest in the house, and gives much of her time to the supervision of details. The house is to have a beautiful ballroom, and will be opened next season with a magnificent function to which society is looking forward, for the Welchs entertain on the scale magnificent, which thrills the most jaded of the society rounders.

Mrs. Welch is one of the fortunate who found herself with a safe deposit box full of "war babies." Hidden away in a box with a lot of stock that was inventoried as "worthless" was a big block of stock in a powder factory. Her father, Mr. De Laveaga, had bought it years ago, and as it had never paid dividends, it was regarded as so much waste paper by the family.

At a dinner party one night, some one remarked that certain powder stock would probably climb into the millions for the big shareholders, and the name struck a respondent note in Mrs. Welch's memory. She told her husband that she thought that she had a block of that very stock, but she couldn't be sure, for it was so long since she had heard it mentioned by her father. They immediately verified the name by taking a little trip to the vaults, and then as the months passed and the war sent certain stocks soaring, they sat themselves down to the pleasant business of watching their shares climb.

Rumor has it that Mrs. Welch sold out for nearly a million dollars, which added to her already large fortune and her husband's big interests places them among the very wealthy people of the peninsula set. Far more important than the acquisition of this fortune is the fact that Mrs. Welch, after several years of semi-invalidism, is entirely restored to health, and can engage in all the pleasurable of the hour, including such a strenuous pastime as skating.

Ranch-itis.

To own a country home down the peninsula way is not enough now for those who really go in for country life. The estates down there are growing more magnificent every day, but they no longer serve to put one in the class of those who go in for country life. By one of those curious mental processes which involve group thinking, society now regards that neck of the woods as a thing set apart, but in nowise indicative of life in the open. One must own a ranch as well as a country home near Blingum in order to qualify as a real out-of-towner, and every one is very busy these days acquiring something that can be spoken of as a ranch. Even the young girls are going in for that sort of thing, the latest recruit being Miss Leslie Miller, who is looking over the family holdings with an idea of having a neat little ranch which she can call her very own, where she can take her friends for week-end "roughing" trips.

A New Star in the Musical Firmament.

The annual breakfast of the Pacific Coast Women's Press Association took place at the Hotel St. Francis, May 20th, when Miss Ina Coolbrith, poet laureate of California, after two brilliant years as president, formally installed her successor, Mrs. Ellen D. Donovan. Mrs. Marian Taylor was toast-mistress. The speakers were Mesdames North-Whitcomb, W. C. Morrow, Jeanne E. Francoeur, Florence Richmond, Ella Sterling Mighels, Augusta Boele, Mary E. Hart and Messrs. R. E. White, Zoeth Eldredge and Doctor Edward Robeson Taylor. Mrs. W. H. Alison read a sketch of the "Golden Gate Trinity," Bret Harte, Charles Warren Stoddard and Ina Coolbrith, written by Mr. Nathan Newmark, followed by recitations from their poems; adding, by request, "The Laurel Wreath," written in honor of Miss Coolbrith by Mrs. E. A. Tompkins of the San Francisco "Star."

The musical program, under the direction of Mrs. Charles H. Smith, included vocal numbers most excellently rendered by Mrs. Vincent Walsh and Mr. Garwood Simons; also a masterly 'cello solo by Mr. Arthur Weiss, accompanied by the gifted Spanish pianiste, Miss Maria Maytorena. Special interest centered in the initial appearance on this coast of Mr. Gregor Gregorieuff, a Russian baritone, who has appeared with great success both abroad and in the East.

Commander Thornwell Mullally of the San Francisco Cavalry Troop, has issued Orders (No. 2) covering the camp of instructions which will be held on the Hale properties, between Hillsborough and the D. O. Mills estate, from May 26-30. The troop will assemble at the Riding Academy, May 26th, at 7:30 a. m., and march at 8:30 a. m.; returning by marching, Tuesday, May 30th. Details are furnished of individual clothing and equipment.

Miss Iva E. Krause, secretary-treasurer of the Bethlehem Foundry and Machine Company, a St. Francis guest, enjoys the distinction of being the most noted young business woman in America, rivaling in scope of commercial operations C. J. Whitley, of the American Smelting and Refining Company, which, with fifteen smelting plants, ninety-one furnaces and a capacity of 5,000,000 tons a year, is now doing the greatest business in its history. Whitley is also at the St. Francis. Recent accessions to the service act there are Captain J. D. Pickering of the Sixteenth Infantry, U. S. A., and Lieutenant A. H. Douglas, U. S. N.

The next lecture recital by Ashley Pettis in the Paul Elder Gallery will be given on Wednesday, May 31st, at 3 o'clock.

The faculty and students of the Dominican College have issued invitations to the annual commencement exercises at 3:30 p. m. Tuesday, May 30th, at San Rafael. A very attractive program has been prepared. The graduating class is represented by the following members: Nancy Esther Cardwell, Irene Cathryn Corcoran, Grace Marie Cummiskev, Mary Catharine Dooly, Nadine Guerne Donovan, Marie Louise Freitas, Marjorie Rachel Gossage, Mona Malvina Kewin, Genevieve Caroline Martinelli, Elgie Elspeth Miller, Elsie Harriet Moise, Rose Augusta Poundstone, Ruth Lloa Schmidt, Marion Sarah Small, Josephine Gertrude Wall, and the School of Music, Emily Anne Deubery.

PLEASURE'S WAND

"Obey no wand but Pleasure's."—Tom Moore.

PERSONAL ADVENTURES IN THE PAINTED WORLD

BY HENRY McDONALD SPENCER

"The Outcast" at the Alcazar

What George Eliot called the taint of commonness, and which, like the odor of onions is easy to perceive but difficult to define, marks or mars much of the work of contemporaneous English playwrights, just as the native drama is cursed with the puritan cant or slobbered with syrupy sweetness. I presume that one explanation of the plight of the transatlantic play lies in the fact that many of the authors are not literary men, and do not possess the literary faculty of envisioning unfamiliar conditions, nor on the other hand are they born in the purple, so to speak. Example: At the close of the "Outcast," now at the Alcazar, Geoffrey (Forrest Stanley), a man obviously of the gentleman caste, offers marriage to his mistress, Miriam (Mary Boland) as a reparation, or sop to his conscience, very much as one would tip a porter, and about in these words: "Business calls me to South America, where I shall live in future so now you can marry me if you like." Now this form of proposal would be bad enough if the gentleman were addressing one of his own class—although perhaps sanctioned by the new manner of brusqueness, if not downright rudeness, which is the cachet of the smart set the world over—but how worse than bad form to one who was not a social equal in the first instance and had further forfeited by her loose living a right to demand courtesy—one is only rude to an equal, never to a servant, for instance. I am sure that regardless of what Mr. Hubert Henry Davies, the author, might think of it, Geoffrey would have been on his knees to the lady telling her that he loved her, that he could not live without her and beseeching her as a favor to him to marry him, even if he didn't mean it. Of course as a matter of fact Geoffrey, once he was over the jag brought on by disappointment in love, would not have dreamed of marrying the trull, who was to all appearances merely a common street walker; in whom no romance could center except when visualized by a poet as in the case of Richard Le Gallienne and his Golden Girl.

Leaving aside then these two points—and in regard to the second, Mary Boley is so beautiful and attractive that I am sure every one in the audience wanted Geoffrey to marry her in the end—the play is well enough; at least we are not having some eternal lesson about the wages of sin rammed into us, in fact the sinners—all of the principal people in the play were sinners—did quite well. The Picadilly trollop married her nice young gentleman and went off to live where she was not known; the wife, who had deserted her husband and was the philandering gentleman's first love, and had come to her intended lover's rooms "to give everything to him," to use the lady's own words, was struck by the wretched plight of the deserted Miriam, seized with Remorse, and returns to the husband who probably never knew how near he came to being adorned with a full set of horns.

And now to the players: I have indicated to a certain extent what I think of Mary Boley, for she attracts me very strongly, and being a man first and a critic afterwards, (no man under eighty should be employed to criticize actresses) I suppose I am afflicted or rather affected by personal bias, nevertheless, I feel safe in asserting that she is as capable and clever as she is charming and magnetic. Her voice is most excellent and well cultivated, i. e., has quite the cultivated air, and for one thing I want to take my hat off to her: Although she was playing somewhat of a sob part, at no time did she drop the play into the cellar, so to speak, but played up quite frankly and freely like a human being, indeed the hetairae are nothing if not light in the emotions; and what genius of a stage manager conceived the idea of her simply handing back the consolatory cheque, neatly folded, instead of tearing it to pieces, which would have been the banal thing to do. I missed the original play, so I do not know whether this was new business or not. Whenever I see one of these anti-balanities I shall note it in this column as a reward of merit for the responsible party.

Forrest Stanley, too, deserves his bit when praise is being handed around. He has the double advantage of being a good actor without looking actory, but really human, just like the men we know, and he did not even dress with that absurd and obvious attention to every detail of the latest style. But he has one of the defects of his qualities: He, too, has an excellent voice, some told him so or he found it out in another way, and he will persist in using its lowest or deepest tones on all occasion, even in asking for a drink, which I admit is at times a very solemn occasion, but then we should carry it off lightly. Our old friend, Jimmy Gleason, was there, the Jimmy of "Bought and Paid For," but he was hampered by a single glass and a tight-fitting morning coat; still, the true Jimmy stuck out at times; you can't keep a good man down, and I am sure that Jimmy wanted to kick over a chair, or ask Geoffrey the cost of his cigarette case, or some other delightful piece of vulgarity. I would like to see a play around Jimmy.

The play as a whole was very creditably presented, and reflects great credit on the management; and it is just as well done as anything is being done in the country to-day, and if it were in Broadway you would be well content to give up two seeds to see it. Take my advice and "See it now."

At the Orpheum

Among the newcomers at the Orpheum this week, Marie Cahill saves the bill from being entirely mediocre, although doubtless many would think the presence of Manuel Quiroga, the Spanish violinist, is enough to redeem the week's offering. The latter, however, although technically a newcomer, is really a return after a week's absence. Like many of the well nourished lady performers, Miss Cahill owes a good deal of her vis comica to nature, but in addition she is an adept at the trick of the suspended speech, where more is implied than said, and the auditor is flattered by having something left to the imagination—as much as to say that you are clever enough to supply the rest. But in spite of this, I would sooner see little Mary in a sketch instead of the same old piano and the willing and appreciative pianist to be jollied.

So far as Svengali, the human canine, is concerned, the remark of old Doctor Johnson—although to us he seems somewhat of a bromide—still holds good; speaking of a dog walking on its hind legs, he said, in effect: "The wonder is not that it does it well, but that it does it at all." Anyway, 20 minutes is rather long to watch a dog painfully count up to ten, even with variations. Quiroga and his good-looking young lady accompanist are there, and he plays well enough so that he doesn't have to blush when he sees the fiddler in the orchestra. Helen

Do You Wear Two Pairs of Glasses?

Most people who have reached the age of forty, some younger, require two pairs of glasses of different focus—one for reading and one for distance use. With the invention of the new "Caltex" One-piece Bifocals two pairs of glasses are no longer necessary as they do the work of two. The "Caltex" One-piece double vision glasses are ground from one piece of clear optical glass—reading and distance glasses are combined in one lens. When worn they have the appearance of regular glasses. You will have real eyeglass comfort if you wear these wonderful new double vision lenses. Remember the name "Caltex."

French and Spanish songs. Miss Zdenka Buben, a student of Professor Beringer, will be the assisting pianist, and will also accompany Miss Holtmberg's interesting program of songs. As soloist, Miss Buben will be heard in selections by Chopin and Liszt.

Pantages—What is promised to be the best all-around bill that has been offered here in months is scheduled for its opening at the Pantages Sunday with "The Junior Revue of 1915" as the topping attraction. There are twenty-four talented young stars with the act, and each one has a specialty backed by an array of lithe dancing girls. The production was gathered by the Woods Enterprise of New York City, under the personal direction of Alexander Pantages, and is the most expensive act that has ever been booked over the circuit. Last season one of the big laughing hits was an eccentric twain of funmakers named Clayton and Lennie, who are returning with a new edition of their ludicrous skit. Howard, the inimitable Scotch ventriloquist, will offer his delightful character study, entitled "At the Dentist's Office." The rest of the show will number Claire and Atwood, eccentric acrobats; Earl Taylor and Ethel Arnold in "Song Conceptions;" Bert Ford, novelty dancer, and the eleventh episode of "The Iron Claw."

DO WE REMEMBER ?

Memorial Day 1916

Full fifty years have passed away,
Yea, fifty years have day by day
Fulfilled the laws of destiny
And passed into eternity.
Hear you the drums throughout the land?
Old drums—which know the master hand,
Whose fervent practice for this day,
Has swept the fifty years away?—
These souls—whose darkened chambers keep,
The key where memories lie deep;
Are breaking all the bounds this day,
To LIVE this thirtieth of May.

With tattered flags and dream-fired gait;
(Impatient if the line should wait),
Come men who fifty years ago,
Were flushed with manhood's healthy glow.
Not less to-day; but fifty years,
Have brought conditions fraught with tears,
For some are poor and all are old;
But hearts as true, as brave, as bold,
Beat underneath those coats of blue,
As when in youth they dared to do
The bidding of their souls—for right,
How bravely now they face the night.

Do we remember why they fought?
Have we from them their vision caught?
Does LIBERTY, stand out as clear?
Is FREEDOM to our hearts as dear?
If not, this thinning line of blue,
Proclaims us to our trust untrue,
If we forget their sacrifice;
We stand disgraced before their eyes.
Let FREEDOM true, our land embrace,
That we, like them, the grave may face;
In conscious pride of work well done,
To keep OLD GLORY in the sun.

WILLIAM NAUNS RICKS.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL ITEMS

ENGAGEMENTS.

DAILY-WESTERFELD.—The engagement has been announced of Miss Genevieve Daily, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Daily, and Jos. Westerfeld. The marriage is to take place on the evening of June 2d at St. Peter's Church, on Alabama street, near Twenty-fourth. Later there will be a reception at the residence of the bride.

DENHAM-RANDALL.—The engagement of Miss Lillian Denham, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Denham of Prince street, Berkeley, and Merle Randall, a member of the faculty of the University of California, was announced recently at a pretty reception given by Miss Rhoda McRae at her home on Virginia street, Berkeley. Plans are being made for a June wedding and a honeymoon trip to the home of Randall's parents in Poplar Bluffs, Missouri. The young people will make their home in North Berkeley.

HATHAWAY-WHITE.—Mr. and Mrs. Frederick M. Hathaway announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Helen Hathaway, to Carleton White, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles L. White of San Rafael.

PERL-SILVERSTEIN.—Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Perl announce the betrothal of their daughter, Miss Rose Perl, to Philip Silverstein of this city. The wedding will take place in the latter part of June.

PISCHEL-EVERS.—A card tied to the bouquet carried by Miss Inez Pischel when she became Mrs. Harold Augustus Fletcher at noon Saturday in Ross, conveyed the news of the betrothal of Miss Sepha Pischel and Albert John Evers. Miss Sepha Pischel was her sister's maid of honor, while her fiance filed the post of best man. Miss Sepha Pischel is the second daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Kaspar Pischel, and is the granddaughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Dohrmann. Albert John Evers is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Evers of Colorado Springs. The wedding will not take place before next spring.

WOLF-FOORMAN.—Mr. and Mrs. Edward Wolf announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Rose Eleanor Wolf, to Carl T. Foorman of this city.

WEDDING ANNOUNCEMENTS.

BRYANT-FOERSTER.—Invitations have been issued for the marriage of Miss Marie Louise Bryant and Roland C. Foerster, which will be solemnized on the evening of June 8th at St. Luke's Church. The marriage service will be read by Rev. Edward Morgan in the presence of a large number of friends of the bride and bridegroom. A reception for members of the bridal party and relatives will be held afterward at Miss Bryant's home on Broderick street. On their return from their honeymoon, Roland C. Foerster and his bride will make their home on Lake street, where they have taken an attractive home.

KINCAID-CURTIS.—Miss Dorothy Kincaid and Carleton Curtis will be married on June 3d at the Hacienda, the handsome country home of Mrs. Phoebe Hearst. It will be a noon day wedding, out of doors. A special train leaves town at 10 o'clock to convey the guests. Miss Kincaid is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George F. Kincaid of Berkeley. Mr. Curtis is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Allen Curtis of San Rafael. Mr. Curtis will take his bride to Fort Bragg for the summer.

WEDDINGS.

JOHNSON-SAXE.—Pink and white were the colors of the decorations and gowns at the wedding Saturday night of Miss Helen Gibbs Johnson and Arthur C. Saxe at the home of the bride's parents, Dr. and Mrs. James W. Ward, 2551 Buchanan street. The ceremony took place at nine o'clock, in the presence of about one hundred and forty relatives and closest friends. Rev. Edward Morgan officiated. A wedding supper was served after the ceremony, and expressions of felicitations. The young couple will live in Burlingame, where an attractive home awaits them on their return from their honeymoon trip.

PISCHEL-FLETCHER.—The marriage of Miss Inez Pischel and Dr. Harold Fletcher, which took place Saturday noon, was a very pretty affair. It was held out of doors in the garden of the Pischel home, in Ross, where a floral bower was formed of masses of sweet peas in tones of lavender, pink and white, combined with hollyhock, stock and other old-fashioned flowers. Rev. Caleb S. S. Dutton read the marriage service. The wedding breakfast was served on the veranda.

SAHLEIN-MEYER.—One of the prettiest weddings of the spring season was celebrated Wednesday night at the Jackson street home of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Sahlein, when their daughter, Miss Marlan Sahlein, became the bride of Alfred F. Meyer. Dr. Martin A. Meyer read the marriage service. The young couple will make their home in San Mateo.

SQUIRE-ABBEY.—A beautiful wedding was celebrated at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John A. Squire in Palo Alto Thursday evening, May 18th, when their daughter, Miss Caroline Elizabeth Squire, became the bride of Franklin Humphrey Abbey of Boston, Mass. One hundred and sixty invited guests from the peninsula and San Francisco witnessed the ceremony. The Rev. Walter Hayes of the Presbyterian Church performed the ceremony. They will make their future home in Boston, where Abbey is connected with the steel manufacturing business.

DINNERS.

CROCKER.—William H. Crocker was the guest of honor at an elaborate dinner given Wednesday evening by a group of his friends at the Pacific Union Club.

HOWARD.—Mrs. George Howard entertained informally at a dinner at her home at San Mateo recently.

NEWHALL.—Mr. and Mrs. George Almer Newhall entertained at an elaborate dinner Saturday evening at their home at Burlingame. Covers were arranged for twenty, and later bridge was enjoyed.

SWAYNE.—Mr. and Mrs. Robert Swayne presided at an informal dinner at the Cliff Hotel recently.

LUNCHEONS.

HIRSCH.—Mrs. Harry Hirsch has issued invitations for a luncheon to be given this afternoon at her quarters at the Presidio. Mrs. Lee Holeombe will be the inspiration for the affair.

KIDD.—Mrs. H. Kidd gave a very pretty luncheon and card party at the Hotel Oakland last Tuesday. The table decorations were violets, and cards were played in the attractive tapestry room. Her guests were Messrs. James R. F. Lewis, B. A. Stewart, A. Riddell, D. L. Riddell, D. L. Burnell, Le Noir, J. E. Little, Geo. S. Beadle, J. P. Potter, A. W. Poshay, Milton Hamilton.

MARTIN.—Mrs. Eleanor Martin was hostess at a delightful luncheon Sunday at the Burlingame Country Club. The table was decorated with roses and lace ferns.

MILES.—Mrs. Arthur Miles, who is visiting in California from her home in New York, was complimented at a luncheon given Wednesday by Mrs. Frederick Hussey at her residence in San Mateo.

TEAS.

DE CIGNE.—Mr. and Mrs. Harry Hastings, Misses Ysabel Chase and Sophie Beylard and George Howard, Jr., were guests of Mr. and Mrs. Christian de Cigne at an informal tea Sunday afternoon at the San Mateo Polo Club.

GHIRARDELLI.—Mrs. Louis Ghirardelli and the Misses Elva and Juanita Ghirardelli were hostesses at a large bridge tea at their home in Oakland Tuesday, the affair being their first opportunity to greet their friends since their return from the South.

GRANT.—Mrs. Jesse R. Grant was hostess at an informal tea Tuesday afternoon at her home on Washington street, assembling a few close friends to meet Miss Alice J. Marris of India, who is in San Francisco on route to London.

GEORGE.—The Town and Country Club was the scene of a pretty tea Monday afternoon, with Mrs. Julia George as hostess.

LONGABAUGH.—Mrs. R. I. Longabaugh, wife of Surgeon Longabaugh, has issued invitations for a tea to be held at her home in Vallejo on May 27th.

McKENZIE.—Miss Mary Hohart Suydam, whose engagement to Harold Earl Barker of New York was announced a few weeks ago, will be the guest of honor at a tea to be given to-day by Miss Jessie Claire McKenzie.

DINNER DANCES.

HALE.—Miss Clarissa Hale was hostess at a dinner dance recently at the Palace Hotel. Her mother, Mrs. Oliver Amrose Hale, chaperoned the party.

DANCES.

LAW.—In compliment to Lieutenant-Commander and Mrs. Wallace Bertholf, Mr. and Mrs. Harold Ward Law will preside at a dancing party on the evening of June 1st, in their attractive home in Presidio Terrace.

WEEK END PARTIES.

BLACK.—In compliment to her house guest, Miss Josephine Marshall, Miss Mary Louise Black will entertain at a week-end party at Miramonte, a group of her friends going up to-day and returning to town Monday.

SCHWERIN.—Miss Arabella Schwerin, who recently returned from a winter in the East and South, gathered a group of her close friends over the week-end at her home in San Mateo.

TEVLS.—Dr. Harry Tevls entertained a week-end party at his country place near Los Gatos, his guests being Mrs. Frederick Sharon, Mrs. George B. Kelham, Mrs. Frank Johnson, Robert Coleman and a number of others.

VAN SICKLEN.—Miss Josephine Marshall, the Virginia guest of Miss Marie Louise Black, was the inspiration for a week-end party given by Fred Van Sicklen in Alameda.

OUR FOREIGN TRADE AT HIGH FIGURES.

Although there has been some falling off of late in the foreign buying of army supplies, Europe is still making record purchases in the United States. The government returns lately published, covering our foreign trade for March, show total exports valued at $410,000,000. This total was $113,000,000 greater than the total of the previous month, nearly double the March average for the previous five years and the largest export movement for any month in the country's history. As indicating how phenomenal this movement is, it may be said that in the nine months ending with March, total exports aggregated nearly $3,000,000,000, thus exceeding by nearly $1,000,000,000 the record of the corresponding period in any fiscal year.

—Official report of values in the Comstock Union, made by Superintendent Whitman Symmes, and announced by President H. L. Slosson, were made known this week, indicating that extraction for last week was the larger during 30 years and that assays showed 12 feet of $60 ore on the south breast of No. 5 stope, 2,400 level, with similar values on the roof of the same stope. At the north end of No. 6 stope there is 12 feet of $30 ore and six feet of $100 ore in the north breast of the same stope.

—Directors of Hutchinson Sugar Plantation Company and Paauhau Sugar Plantation Company met this week and declared, in behalf of both companies, the regular monthly dividends of 20 cents, both payable June 5th to stock of record May 31st. This is the second extra dividend declared by both plantations this year.

—Atlas Power Company has declared the regular quarterly dividend of 2 per cent and an extra dividend of 3 per cent on the common stock. With the extra, which has become a regular quarterly disbursement, Atlas is paying 20 per cent per annum.

—Earnings of steam railroads with gross above $1,000,000 annually show railway operating income $83,101,002, against $56,581,122 in 1915.

—Benjamin G. L. Lathrop, known to everybody in the local financial district, has been admitted as a full partner in the firm of Raymond, Pynchon & Co., international bankers, and will henceforth have charge of their London office at 1 Drapers' Gardens, E. C. His club friends received recently neatly engraved cards embodying this information.

—Tonopah Extension has declared a quarterly dividend of 15 per cent, payable July 1st, on stock of record, June 10th. The last quarterly dividend was 10 per cent.

All the Tonopah producers are enjoying an unusually prosperous period of large profits because of the present high price of silver.

Northwestern Pacific Railroad

INSURANCE

On his return from a month's visit to the East made for the purpose of eliminating the jurisdictional dispute between the Federal authorities and those States having compensation laws applicable to railroad employees, Chairman Pillsbury of the State Industrial Accident Commission, announces that in Washington he enlisted the aid of representatives of railroad men's organizations, and that both the New York and Pennsylvania railroads have entered upon a "gentlemen's agreement" with their employees which allows the latter to come under the employers' liability laws in States having such laws. Under the Federal law compensation cannot be awarded unless negligence on the part of the employer can be shown.

Commissioner of Finance W. H. Clay, who has sought to force the Washington State Surveying and Rating Bureau to reduce rates at Everett, Wash., says the case is now up to local agents, as he has gone as far as possible in an attempt to compel the Bureau to live up to its earlier agreements. Lee McKenzie, of the Bureau, shifts responsibility upon the town, alleging failure to provide improvements.

At the International Association of Accident Boards and Commissioners' Conference, Chairman Pillsbury's resolution asking Congress to amend the Employers' Liability Act so as to exempt railroad employees from its operations in those States having adequate compensation laws, was passed with but one dissenting vote.

State Insurance Commissioner J. E. Phelps has been commanded by the District Court of Appeals to "desist from interfering in the activities" of insurance brokers Lloyd & Fraser, whose license was recently suspended in the contention over the industrial insurance rate for retail coal dealers. A writ of mandate was issued by the court, instructing Phelps to either immediately revoke his suspension order, or to show cause on May 22d why he should not do so.

Insurance Commissioner J. E. Phelps has gracefully retired from his position in assuming the right to penalize the brokerage firm of Spengler & Fraser for writing workmen's compensation insurance at a rate held to be lower than the legal minimum. Rather than contest the writ secured from the Court of Appeals, he has withdrawn his order of suspension.

One of the most important actions taken by California Bankers' Association at the annual session at Fresno, Cal., on Friday last, was the announcement approving the report of Dr. C. L. Tisdale, authorizing the establishment of an insurance department, the object of which will be to provide burglary, robbery, indemnity and hold-up insurance to the member banks. Anticipated opposition from bankers who are insurance agents failed to materialize.

The offices of A. T. Bailey (New Hampshire and County Fire), and J. F. D. Curtis (Providence Washington, Boston and Old Colony) will be amalgamated on June 1st under the firm name of Curtis & Bailey.

Charging that casualty insurance companies in bonding local bus owners do not conform with existing ordinances, Attorney I. I. Brown, who is seeking to recover damages from the California Casualty Company for damages received by a client, has asked the supervisors to revoke all bonds furnished by jitney operators.

At the annual meeting of the Burglary Underwriters' Association of California, held at San Francisco, F. M. Cotter was elected president, H. E. Carlton of the Hartford Accident and Indemnity vice-president, and H. L. Hoyt secretary-treasurer. The annual luncheon of the association was held May 19th.

Clarence F. Briggs, after an illness of several months, has so far recovered as to be able to resume his duties as Pacific Coast manager of the Standard Accident, a position which he has ably held for nearly a quarter of a century.

SHAM BATTLE IN MARIN COUNTY

Auto Trailer Takes Distinguished Part

As part of the general plan of preparedness measures, which our National Guard is pursuing so industriously, a fierce battle on the Santa Venetia marsh took place last Sunday. The companies of the Fifth Regiment, N. G. C., reinforced by the San Francisco machine gun company, stood off twice their number of Oakland, Berkeley and Alameda soldiers, and held their trenches against the drive of the transbay forces.

A flanking party thrown out by Major L. C. Francis, in command of the attacking forces, was completely annihilated, at least according to the referee, Colonel E. G. Hunt, and the frontal assault of the Alameda County companies was halted before the trenches with terrible losses.

Colonel Hunt rendered no formal decision, but after the powder burning was over admitted that the defending forces had successfully held its ground against superior numbers.

The sham battle at Santa Venetia was the closing event in the Marin Flower Pageant, which has occupied the people of the northern peninsula for the last three days. The Fifth Regiment furnished all the soldiers engaged.

The attacking force in the battle was composed of Companies A and F of Oakland, under Captain S. H. Hanson and Lieutenant E. E. Hinchman; Company C, of Berkeley, Lieutenant D. A. Daly; and Company G of Alameda, Captain C. S. Magagnos. Major L. C. Francis commanded. The defenders in the trenches were Company D of San Rafael, Captain W. A. Deubery, and Company K of Petaluma, Captain J. B. Dickson. Captain L. J. Nissen was in command.

Colonel E. G. Hunt, attended by Lieutenant W. K. Carswell as regimental aid, and Lieutenant J. M. Scammell, battalion commissary quartermaster, commanded the Fifth Regiment in the parade, and refereed the battle. The regiment of the League of the Cross Cadets and another of the Woodmen of the World marched in the parade.

One of the most striking features of the military maneuvers was the operation of the Gardiner High Speed Auto Trailer, which was attached to a Chalmers roadster driven by Captain Marriott of the Machine Gun Co. The Trailer was loaded with ammunition and supplies, as well as the guns, and was taken over the road at a rate of 35 to 40 miles per hour; on arrival at the field of battle it was unhooked and easily lifted over fences and dragged up hills wherever men could go themselves. Army men were interested in observing the trailer in action, and predict that it will supercede the mule in the Machine Gun Service. The local distributor, W. T. McCaffrey, of 180 Golden Gate avenue, says that he will guarantee that auto trailer which is primarily for commercial use, will stand up under the roughest usage, besides possessing the mobility of the fastest passenger motor car.

The first day of the fishing season. Kissel-Kar party enjoying "good luck" near La Honda

MOTORING MAGAZINE SECTION

For the Motorist Fisherman Review of Northern Trout Streams

While the season's opening of trout fishing came a month later than in previous years, the exodus of fishermen from this city to the available trout streams broke all previous records on the opening date, May 1st. The departure of the anglers in reality took place one and two days before the first, as the opening date occurred on Monday, and the devotees of the rod, fly and line left in plenty of time to be on hand at the earliest possible hour on that day.

Northern California, it is predicted, will be a veritable trout paradise during the present season, despite the fact that the season opened considerably late.

The La Honda country, which in the past has always held itself in much popularity with motorist-anglers, this year bids fair to out rival itself. This is just at the present time rather difficult of approach, but within another week or so, the Board of Supervisors of San Mateo County has promised the new road to La Honda will be thrown open to the public.

At the present time motorists desiring to reach the streams of the La Honda country should take the State Highway (El Camino Real) south to Redwood City, thence turn to the right and follow the Woodside road to Woodside, turning to the left at the latter mentioned place and following the old road over the summit to La Honda. Just beyond La Honda one may select between taking the road to the left which leads to the Pescadero Creek, or the road to the right which leads to the San Gregorio Creek.

Both streams and others in this vicinity were visited by a scouting party in a KisselKar, and were found to be exceedingly promising for anglers. In many places fishermen were already encamped waiting for the hour when the law would lift the bars. Since then, excellent reports have been made of catches in that vicinity.

Another stream in the La Honda district is the Tunitas Creek. This may be found by continuing north from San Gregorio and taking the first main road to the right. A return trip to San Francisco via this road is also enjoyable from its scenic standpoint, as the road over the King's Mountain is typical of the Santa Cruz mountain country, and the latter mentioned route offers vistas which many others cannot give the motorist.

Between the San Gregorio and Pescadero streams is another stream, Pom-pino Creek, which may be reached by a detour of the main coast road. In very few instances can the motor car be driven directly up to the stream, but one's car may in every place that has been mentioned be left within convenient reach. A return journey to San Francisco via the new Half-Moon Bay route over Montana Mountain will finish a week-end fishing expedition off in a delightful fashion.

Reports by a KisselKar Scouting Expedition from the Mount Hamilton country previous to the opening of the trout season indicate that the sport in that vicinity this year likewise would probably be much better than in preceding years, and later reports from fishermen confirm the early predictions.

Smiths Creek, on the Mount Hamilton road, is particularly alluring to the angler this year. And one may fish in either direction with assurances of good sport.

Stevens Creek, if one will try it early this season, will furnish good fishing. This stream comes out just above Cupertino on the Sunnyvale-Los Gatos road in the western hills. In addition to this, the region through which one must tour to reach it is particularly attractive from the scenic standpoint, and presents in many other ways attractions to the motorist.

As in previous years, there is splendid fishing this year in the Uvas River above the New Almaden mines, reached via San Jose. The same is true of the streams east of Madrone and Morgan Hill. The best fishing thereabouts is to be found at Glen Ellis, which may be reached by a good country road which veers directly to the east at Madrone. But for the fisherman who cannot get out at present, and who must pursue his pleasure later in the season, the streams above Los Gatos and Saratoga will furnish him good sport.

Beyond the Mount Hamilton country, particularly in Monterey County, the fishing this year is especially good. The inland streams, the Nacimeanto, Jolon and Arroya Seca Rivers, all of which empty into the Salinas River, are good. The coast, or ocean streams, namely: the Carmel River, the Big and Little San Rivers, with their north and south forks in deep redwood canyons, furnish good sport.

Col. Roosevelt Man of Hour, Says Chalmers

Only Leader of Either Party to State Issues Clearly

Detroit, Mich., May 25—Roosevelt and a return to aggressive Americanism" is the verdict on Pacific Coast political sentiment brought back by Hugh Chalmers, prominent Detroit automobile maker, after a three months' residence in California.

"More than ever, the West has come to realize the need for a man of Roosevelt's character, experience and breadth of view," said Mr. Chalmers last week. "While on the Coast, I attended many great gatherings of civic leaders including men of every political faith. The return to favor of Colonel Roosevelt is undisputed. As far as the West is concerned, he can hold down his old job for four years more.

"Personally, after a review of world affairs of the past two years, I believe that a failure to nominate Mr. Roosevelt at the June convention of the Republican party would amount to a national misfortune.

"I find myself in an identical position with thousands of other American voters. Four years ago I was against Col. Roosevelt's election. But the issues of four years back were petty and trifling compared with those of the present day. Today, for good and sufficient reasons, I have swung back to his standard.

"This country is at present in the position of a great corporation drifting along without a capable executive at its head. It is up to the board of directors to select a general manager.

"Would that board of directors consider placing a man of unknown policies and doubtful experience in a responsible position? Without question, they would seek the man who had demonstrated beyond doubt his fitness for the most important post in the business. We have that serious problem before us to-day in the selection of the highest executive in the land. And of all the mass of presidential possibilities, Theodore Roosevelt stands out as the single logical choice.

"On my recent trip west I found that the breach in politics caused by the formation of the Bull Moose party four years ago has almost totally disappeared in the rapidly crystallizing sentiment for the Colonel. Westerners realize, to a greater degree perhaps than many of us, the amazing versatility displayed by Colonel Roosevelt while chief executive at Washington. They appreciate him because he has touched more phases of American life than any president since Lincoln, and they are doing all possible toward eliminating party lines in his behalf.

"From my point of view, the strongest plank in Col. Roosevelt's platform will be that of Preparedness. This country is practically a unit on that subject, but it will take a Roosevelt to carry out the program effectively.

"While other men have been talking about 'Preparedness' and the need for adequate defense, yet not one of them has had the foresight or the ability to put this in the simple language of the Colonel. He has the happy faculty of putting his finger on the center of things and shows greater foresight than any political leader we have had in many years. He has demonstrated his ability to pick the right man for the right office in the cabinets of his two administrations. We remember and concede his boast of 'not a single American killed by a representative of a foreign government' during his occupation of the president's chair. And I believe that the country at large has that heroic spirit which the former president has declared is necessary before he can again take up the reins of public office.

"Some men say that Roosevelt has made too many enemies to be a popular candidate for the presidency. This is nonsense. It is true he has made some political enemies, but I never saw a man in my life who ever accomplished anything of worth who did not have to tread on the toes of a good many people. He is the only leader of either party who has had the courage of his convictions in calling a spade a spade, and in refusing to 'pussy-foot' around situations.

"I consider that Roosevelt has done more in the past eighteen months, single-handed and alone, against great opposition, to point the way to this country's future than any other American citizen.

"We need above everything else at the present time the real, true Americanism of Mr. Roosevelt. We need the 'punch' which he puts into everything that he does and says. I believe that another Roosevelt administration will bring the rightfu' respect to the American people from other nations that we boasted of during his previous administration.

"I am for the Colonel, and I am for him in his slogan, 'America, First, Last and All the Time.'"

Mack armored car, equipped with automatic machine guns. Used by the National Guard of New York

New York Buys Forty Armored Trucks as Preparedness Measure

The Atlantic seaboard, as well as the Pacific, is becoming alive to the possibilities of the motor as means of preparedness, and New York City received a hint of its real meaning a few days ago, when a high-powered armored auto truck, with ominous looking machine guns and loopholes for seven rifles, dashed through the streets to the armory of the First Armored Motor Battery, National Guard of New York. The new machine is said to be the most formidable land craft in existence, not excepting the trucks used by the various European armies. This is the first installment of forty armored cars presented to the National Guard of New York by Judge E. H. Gary, H. C. Frick, D. Olcott, R. M. Thompson, G. N. Wallace and Captain H. A. Montgomery, public spirited citizens of New York, for the defense of the city. These trucks cost $10,000 each, which makes the outlay for New York $400,000.

The armored truck, which looks more like a miniature battleship on wheels than anything else, is the product of the International Motor Company of New York, builders of the Mack and Saurer trucks. The armor plate was made by the Carnegie Steel Company, and will successfully resist the fire of steel capped bullets from regulation army rifles at fifty yards range. In a recent test it was proven proof against such attack, as the bullets succeeded in only scratching the surface. Captain H. G. Montgomery, commander of the battery, with armory at One Hundred and Sixty-Eighth street;

John F. O'Ryan, commander of the New York militia, and Major Frederick M. Waterburyn, chief of ordnance, were enthusiastic over the appearance of the war vehicle.

Every vulnerable part of the machine is covered with armor plate; even the bolts and nuts used in the construction are hardened. The truck is equipped with electric lights and starter, the ignition system being entirely separate and in duplicate. There is a powerful searchlight, which can be folded inside when in action. The truck is equipped with two barbettes carrying machine guns, swiveling in all directions and capable of firing from 400 to 600 shots per minute.

There are seven slits or peepholes for observation purposes and the firing of rifles without dangerous exposure. Single block tires are used, making punctures impossible, and the wheels are encased in armor plate.

ENTHUSIASTIC MEETING IN SUPPORT OF LINCOLN HIGHWAY'S PACIFIC CONNECTION

At an enthusiastic meeting held in the assembly room of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce Wednesday week, the question of the Lincoln Highway and its direct relation to San Francisco was taken up and thoroughly discussed by a large number of San Francisco's leading representative business men, and it was the sense of the meeting that San Francisco arouse interest locally and assist the National Association in the completion of this great road by raising a certain sum of money and work with the Lincoln Highway Association in completing the road across Nevada and thereby making it possible for the thousands of transcontinental tourists to come direct to San Francisco over a good surfaced road, and in perfect ease and comfort, instead of leaving this great highway as they did last year, and will do so continually until the Nevada roads are improved, and go south over the famous well marked beautiful Midland Trail, arriving in Los Angeles.

Joseph E. Caine, State Consul of the Lincoln Highway Association, was named and empowered to select a committee of ten representative men of San Francisco to lay out a plan of campaign and devise ways and means of raising money in San Francisco to undertake to do California's share in completing this great transcontinental road which has San Francisco as its western terminus, as the city of San Francisco will benefit more from this highway than any other city on its route

How to Visit Yosemite By Motor

(See Maps)

The manifold beauties of Yosemite Valley are too well known to need description here. It may be taken for granted that every one who can make the Yosemite tour will wish to do so. There are now open three main roads to Yosemite, the Coulterville, Big Oak Flat and Wawona, by any one of which automobiles are admitted.

The Wawona road, by reason of its easy gradients and its impressive views of the Valley, is recommended for the trip in and the Big Oak Flat road for the return trip, as far as Crane Flat.

From Oakland go via the Foothill Boulevard, Dublin Canyon and Livermore to Tracy. From Tracy turn north on the State Highway to Lathrop; then south via Modesto and Merced to Madera, whence it is 66 miles by way of Raymond, Grub Gulch, Poison Switch, Ahwahnee and Fish Camp to Wawona. If you have a day to spare, it is but a short run over good roads to the Mariposa Grove of Big Trees, one of the wonders of the world. From Wawona into the Yosemite proper is a run of 26 miles, through deep gorges and shadowy canyons, in the midst of a country teeming with game.

To avoid bad grades on the Coulterville road, leave the valley via Big Oak Flat toll road to Crane Flat, thence left and south to Hazel Green. Here you may take the Coulterville road to Dudley's, and there turn north to the Big Oak Flat road at Smith's Ranch and out to Stockton; or, continue on the Coulterville road to Merced and thence north on the State Highway.

You may also leave the valley via El Portal, and thence north over a private road via Foresta to the Coulterville road at Big Meadows.

Regulations Governing Auto Traffic in the Park

The following special rules have been issued by the Department of the Interior governing the operation of automobiles on the roads in the Yosemite during the 1916 season:

Entrances—Automobiles may enter and leave the park by any of the entrances, viz., Tioga Pass, Aspen Valley, Crane Flat, Merced Grove, El Portal, Wawona and Mariposa Grove.

Roads—The Tioga road is open from July 15th to September 30th.

The Big Oak Flat road is open from May 15th to November 1st.

The El Portal and Valley roads are open all the year, except occasionally during the winter, when there may be some snow on the floor of the Valley for a short period.

Direction of Travel—Automobiles may go only over named roads, and only in the direction the arrows point on the automobile guide map of Yosemite Valley.

Driving—Careful driving is demanded by all persons using the roads. The government is in no way responsible for any kind of accident, and cautions all persons against using, except during hours of daylight, the Big Oak Flat road between Stations No. 1 and No. 2, and the Wawona Road between Stations No. 3 and No. 4.

Fines—On the El Portal Road, the Big Oak Flat Road between Gentry and Floor of Valley, and on the Wawona Road between Fort Monroe and Floor of Valley, a fine or ejection from the park, or both, will be imposed, in the discretion of the supervisor of the park, for being earlier or later than the specified time limits indicated below.

Big Oak Flat and Wawona Roads—On the Big Oak Flat Road between Gentry (Station No. 2) and Floor of Valley (Station No. 1) 4½ miles, and on the Wawona Road between Fort Monroe (Station No. 3) and Floor of Valley (Station No. 4) 3 miles, automobiles may go east, down grade, only on the odd hours, speed not to exceed 8 miles per hour, and may go west, up grade, only on even hours, speed not to exceed 12 miles per hour. They must travel between the stations within the hour, but shall not pass between Stations No. 1 and No. 2 on Big Oak Flat Road, and between Stations No. 3 and No. 4 on Wawona Road, in less than 30 minutes.

Accidents—If, however, because of accident or stop for any reason, automobiles do not reach the next station within the hour, they shall be parked off the road, and when that is impossible, on the outer edge of the road, and wait there for the next hour schedule going in their direction.

El Portal Road—Between El Portal and Pohono Bridge, go in either direction.

Bridalveil Road—Go in either direction when going over Wawona Road; otherwise go east, or up-stream only.

Cathedral Rocks, Pohono and Happy Isle Road—Go east or up-stream only.

El Capitan, Royal Arch and Black Spring Roads—Go west, or down-stream only.

Sentinel, Ahwahnee and Lost Arrow Roads—Go in either direction.

Le Conte Road—Go north only across Merced River from Happy Isle Road to Royal Arch Road.

Mirror Lake Road—Go north only from Happy Isle Bridge to Royal Arch Road.

Stops on Floor of Valley—If for any reason the automobile is stopped, it shall be parked off on left-hand edge of road.

Speed—Automobiles shall not exceed 15 miles per hour on the El Portal Road or any roads on the floor of Yosemite Valley east of Pohono Bridge; and when passing any group of people, or through the village, and crossing bridges the speed shall be reduced to not more than eight miles per hour.

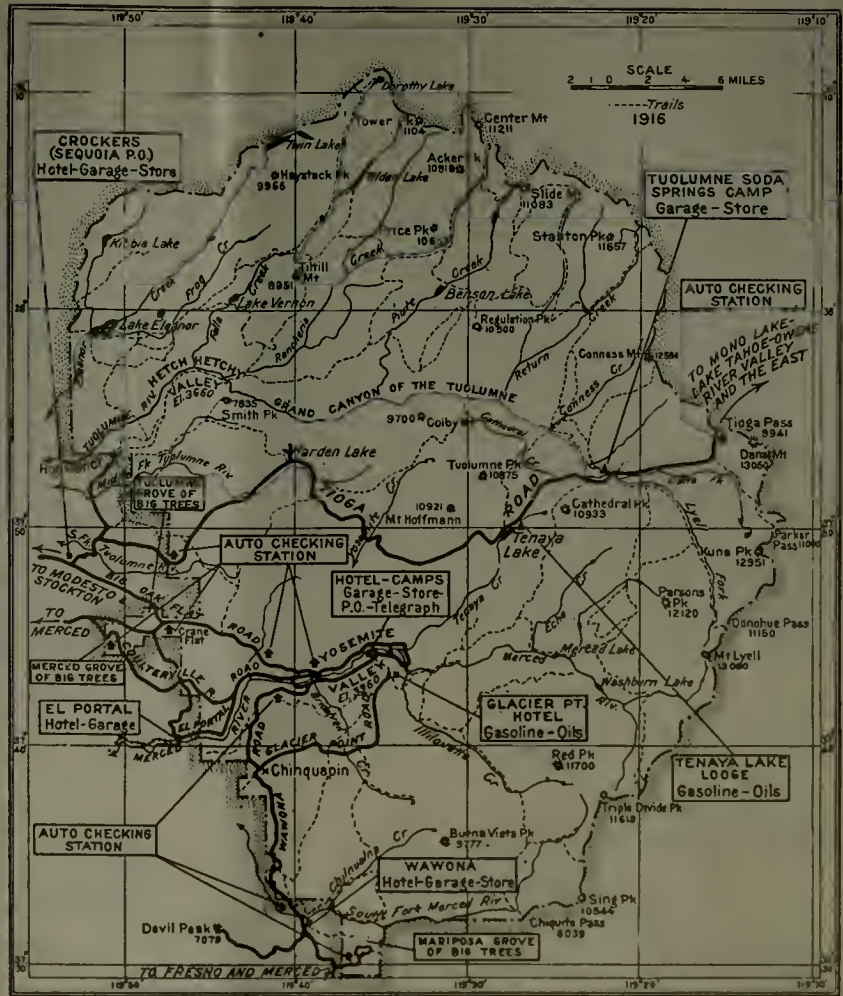

Penalties—Violation of any of the foregoing regulations for government of the park will cause revocation of automobile permit, will subject the owner of the automobile to immediate ejection from the park, and be cause for refusal to issue new automobile permit to the owner without prior sanction in writing from the Secretary of the Interior.

Damages—The owners of automobiles will be responsible for any damages caused by accident or otherwise.

EVENLITE FOR FORD USERS

The Evenlite special headlight for Fords equalizes the flow of current to the lamps, regardless of engine speed, and so corrects the tendency of the lights to burn dim when turning corners at slow speed or when the engine is running slowly. This is a product of the St. Louis Electrical Works, St. Louis, Mo. Two types of Evenlite systems are offered; one the post type, which attaches to the steering post and a second, the hood type, which attaches to the dash beneath the hood alongside the lighting switch. Lamps are packed with every outfit and they are not sold without lamps. The post type has two coils; the hood type has one coil. In the former the two lights are independent of each other and should one burn out the other will not be affected. With the hood type, if one lamp burns out the other receives the full current of the two lamps. The post type is fitted with a switch which will turn the lights on, dim them or cut them out. If it is desired, the button for the electric horn may be placed in the top of the control. The post type sells for $6; the hood type for $4.

A Place for Dry Cells

At each end of the gasoline tank in late model Fords there is a space that will hold three dry cells. By packing them so that they will not rattle, and running a cross wire so as to connect the entire six up in series, you will get a very good place to carry the battery.

Just as Carl Lemberg, who was leading in the Metropolitan race, Sheepshead Bay, New York, turned into the stretch to finish his thirtieth mile at the terrific speed of 104 miles per hour, the rear axle of his Delage car broke, and the machine crashed into the guard rail and turned a complete somersault across the track. The fuel tank caught fire, and after a loud explosion, the car was wrapped in flames. Lemberg and Pallotti were killed.

The Los Angeles-San Francisco champion, T. J. Beaudet

Cadillac Smashes All Records Los Angeles-San Francisco

Again has the running time between Los Angeles and San Francisco, its chief northern suburbs, been reduced. Nine hours and thirty-seven minutes is the new record by way of the valley route.

The above mark was set last Thursday week when T. J. Beaudet, who has established more road records in California than any other driver, piloted his eight-cylinder Cadillac into this city, and clipped one hour and ten minutes from the time established some three weeks ago over the same course by another make of car and reduced his own mark made last year by over two hours and a half.

Beaudet drove the car the entire distance, 461 miles, according to his speedometer, and believes that he could have made the run in nine hours flat had he not encountered rain on the last leg of the journey, that forced him to cut down his pace materially in order to prevent disaster. For 125 miles from the town of Manteca in the San Joaquin Valley, Beaudet drove his car through a soft, misty rain that made the highway as slippery as a greased pole and required extreme skill and caution on the part of the driver to keep his car rolling at a record breaking clip.

The Cadillac "eight" with Beaudet at the wheel, Dick McConnors as his side partner, and Jess Kent and H. J. Brittan in the tonneau, was checked out of Los Angeles from Mission Park at exactly 9 o'clock Wednesday evening. It was 6.37 the following morning when the car with the occupants in the same position as when they left the south was checked in at Market and Guerrero streets in this city.

When the car pulled in at the finishing point it looked none the worse from the gruelling test to which it had been subjected, save for a coating of mud and the hundreds of insects that were caught against the front and radiator in the mad flight against time. The slickers of the members of the record breaking party were dripping wet and furnished conclusive evidence of the bad weather encountered during the last part of the journey.

The path taken by Beaudet followed the Ridge route from Los Angeles to Bakersfield, the regular highway to Fresno, and from the raisin center the State road was taken over the Altamount pass to Livermore, to Mission San Jose and Alviso, across to Mountain View, and then down the peninsula.

Fresno, 241 miles from the start, was reached in 5 hours and 10 minutes, and the remaining 220 miles to this city took 4 hours and 27 minutes to cover. The average speed for the entire 461 miles was close to 47½ miles an hour. This naturally means that on some of the stretches a speed of close to eighty miles an hour was reached, a remarkable demonstration for a stock touring car.

For the first time in the history road record-breaking on the coast, the Cadillac car was equipped with Houck wire wheels—and this equipment gave perfect service throughout the long grind, notwithstanding the severe strain they were put to in making the sharp turns and in covering the rough going at an unusually fast clip.

Beaudet selected Goodrich Silvertown Cords as his tire equipment, and the fact that he reached the city with the same four tires on the wheels, proved his good judgment. The casing, new at the start, showed little wear, notwithstanding the fact that in many cases Beaudet sacrificed his tires so as to reduce his running time.

—There is only one word that describes the Oakland political situation—nasty.

—The Reverend Richard Fysh has pleaded guilty to land frauds. Fysh fishing for suckers.

—In the United States a president runs for office. In Santo Domingo and Haiti he runs for his life.

—The thunder of the guns in Europe is soon to be matched by the thunder of the orators in Chicago.

—The squabbles of the Supervisors over the budget are a greater tax on public patience than the taxes themselves.

—Fellow that cut off another chap's ear got two years in San Quentin. Too much. Should have been a year for an ear.

—Forty-four cousins of the late Amos Keith of Fresno are suing for a share of his estate. Comes near being fifty-seven varieties.

—Cook on a coasting steamer quarreled with a waiter the other day and hurled him into a pot of boiling grease. Think of fried waiter!

—The size of the discarded budget may be realized when one reflects that it was so large that the supervisors themselves became frightened at it.

—Summer resorts are beginning to do a big business, and the demand for cold storage eggs and canned vegetables is accordingly on the increase.

—Five billion dollars' worth of interests were represented at a steel men's banquet held in New York. War isn't such a bad thing from a financial standpoint.

—The conviction of Waite, the poisoner, gives hope that murder is becoming unpopular in the East, even if it does continue to hold its place here as a leading diversion.

—Burglar who had a record of seven arrests was refused probation by a San Francisco judge. It is consoling and encouraging to find out that there is really a limit on leniency.

—Stockton woman who soothed her husband to sleep, then summoned her lover, who beat the husband to death, gets a life sentence, as does the murderer. What shall we do to be hanged?

—The Women's Federation, in session in New York, has adopted resolutions declaring for a standardized street dress for women. Which shows that women do not know their own sex.

—Mexican was found all slashed up with sabers and nailed to a tree. There be people who look on such acts with equanimity, but we insist that it was a brutal way to act, to say the least.

—This constant shifting of police chiefs in Oakland must be a nuisance to the criminal classes, who no sooner become accustomed to one percentage schedule than they have to learn another.

—David Lamar, the "wolf of Wall Street," has been sent to prison for impersonating a Congressman. A man who has no more shame than to pretend to be a Congressman should not mind prison.

—San Francisco has a street-cleaning fund of nearly $1,000 a day. It would be interesting, but no doubt expensive, to experiment, and find how much it would cost to keep the streets really clean.

—Kansas City man, here last week, carried with him a box of bees. Afflicted with rheumatism, he found an occasional bee sting kept the twinges subdued. That's cheaper than being stung by the doctors.

—William J. Burns, detective, is accused of installing dictaphones and prying open desks in New York to get information for his clients. He gave himself a liberal education in that sort of work during the graft trials in this city.

—Oklahoma has a youth in his early twenties who is in jail charged with bigamy, grand larceny, highway robbery, assault with intent to kill, and violating the speed laws. What a delectable case for the Association of Sob-sisters!

—Negroes in Cuba attempted to lynch an American auto racer who ran into and killed a negro racer. The superiority of the whites over the blacks is demonstrated by the fact that whenever a lot of Americans start out to lynch a nigger they succeed.

—The railroad crossings continue to take their toll of automobile drivers who try to beat the train, which doesn't matter much; but unfortunately they also snuff out the lives of people who have trusted themselves to reckless or inexperienced drivers.

—The policemen are going around whining that they cannot get evidence against gambling places because the proprietors of the dens slam the doors in their faces. There have been cases of policemen smashing doors—but that was when they really wanted to get evidence.

—Denver has dropped the commission form of government, having found that commissioners gouge the public as enthusiastically as do officials of the ordinary variety. It will be discovered some time that the form of city government is of less importance than the character of the men who are picked to administer affairs.

GETTING DOWN TO A TRIAL BASIS.

movement to capture the rich trade of South America. At that time there was more sentiment than sense in the wild claims made of the prospective easy capture ahead. Berlin and London merchants must have smiled sardonically over the slush of words written by tyros describing the trade raids proposed at that time. Throughout the country there were less than a score of big concerns that had an adequate idea of the immense scope and detail of the problem. Among these organizations, the National City Bank of New York was one of the strongest and best equipped to pioneer the way. Its first step was to organize branch banks in three of the principal cities of that continent, absolutely necessary for the purpose of handling international exchange for the benefit of American traders, and knit the South Americans closer to this country.

Since then the ordinary American shipper to foreign parts has discovered what a rubble and long road it is to the Tipperary of trade in South American marts. He has caught his second wind and is getting down to brass tacks. No commercial country on earth can capture South America with a rush. It is a long, trying and arduous pursuit. The chief obstacle that formerly handicapped this country was the poisonous suspicion that Uncle Sam was bent on eventually gobbling up Mexico and the smaller republics, an Iago hint that was carefully instilled into the minds of the leading representatives of those republics by certain agents of several leading commercial countries of Europe determined to monopolize the South American trade. Fortunately for the United States of America, this poisonous idea, decades old, has at last been eradicated by President Wilson through the Pan-American congress held at Washington, a gathering that has done more to unite the two American continents, commercially, politically and in a more fraternal spirit, than any other like event in American history.

MUSIC AND THE MASSES.

No one can question the high intent of those who form organizations for the purpose of educating the masses to a taste for good music. On the music map generally, plans usually fail to reap the benefits expected, but here in California, success just now is more apparent than in other fields throughout the country. This is no doubt justly due to the extraordinary all-round offerings in music, popular, church and classical, which was furnished us by the management of the recent Exposition. Success is attained in devious quantities according to localities and the character of those participating. The first intent of those behind the enterprise is usually to give grand opera because of the added picturesque appeal to the eye in scenic effects and costumes, but unless the production is given on an excellent scale, which few such organizations can afford, the result is sure to prove disastrous and a set-back to the movement. For that reason, most of the organizations find more assured success in civic orchestras, the success of which was demonstrated here in the season recently closed. It will be remembered that during the last two years that the several local opera companies organized for "education in music" dried up for lack of sustenance, due primarily because the productions were inadequate through lack of funds.

AS TO THE PRICE OF GASOLINE.

Though the recent protest of autoists and automobile organizations throughout the country against the sharp raise in the price of gasoline seems to have melted into thin air, according to the manipulated daily papers, there is still abroad in the minds of ordinary citizens the fact that the so-called dissolution decision regarding trusts by the U. S. Supreme Court has brought no relief to the public in the matter of escaping the "understanding" of monopolies, and that the Sherman law has failed to prevent monopoly on the part of oil companies. In other words, Vanderbilt's classic retort still prevails. "The public be damned" Talk, talk, talk on the subject still prevails as heretofore, but the representatives of certain monopolies, in Congress, help as far as possible to switch the debate in the direction of the pigeon hole. Monopoly is entrenched there, and proper changes will never be made till voters pry these representatives of monopolies from their jobs, and thus cut short this brazen defiance of legislation designed to smother the wishes of the people. There is a law against the arbitrary advance in prices made by combinations. A just interpretation of the law has been made by the Supreme Court of the country, yet representatives of the people in Congress are unable, through the opposing machinations of monopoly, to obtain the results due them through the law. This contest between monopoly and the people is as old as the human race, and only when the people organize will they be able to obtain what they seek.

—The high cost of living on the roadway of life is again exemplified by a statement issued this week from the capital at Sacramento that the $18,000,000 in bonds voted by the people of the State to build highways, running north and south through California, are practically all spent, and the highway is far from being completed. A ghostly whisper accompanies this official announcement with the explanation that some one has blundered. Fancy any one blundering with $18,000,000 to spend. Several million dollars is said to have disappeared through a hole in the cement. Those in authority that blundered now ask for $15,000,000 more to complete their work, and they ought to get it to show that we like to see them blunder. At this rate of advancing the work, and with an estimate that $18,000,000 will furnish $3,000,000 of expected completed work, the next call from the State taxpayers will be for something like $12,500,000. Envious contractors may figure out how much over $50,000,000 the contract will cost before the highway is completed. However, this is a very old and successful method of making the taxpayer fork his assessment through the nose. Suckers may squeal, but they always come through.

—According to local scientists, Old Sol is in excessive fury, threatened with apoplectic distemper, in a wildly sputtering solar rage. His condition is quite natural when one considers that his shining phiz looks down daily on this terrestrial sphere and sees nothing but War! War! War! punctuated with suffragists beating tom-toms, local taxes boosted to the ingrowing 2.34 rate; two national conventions in sight; a new volume of poems by Mayor Rolph forthcoming; the revelations of a survey now being made by Eastern experts to show how extravagantly this city is being conducted; the Seals slipping from the first division; Roosevelt shying all his old hats into the ring; the high cost of living still climbing; the jitney contest getting wilder on Market street; the picnic season in full swing; Villa threatening to jig into the limelight again; the "wets" and "drys" lining up for a no-limit contest; Bryan sitting on Preparedness and Gunpowder; and a call from local ministers for Billy Sunday to meet Satan here in a revival bout without gloves. No wonder Old Sol is sputtering in cholera.

—Casual financiers of Plimsol line depth are expected naturally to hew down any insistent lusty swellings that develop on the annual budget of San Francisco. A glance at the list of names of the finance committee of the board of supervisors pictures a bunch of hardy financiers capable of grappling lustily with any prospective balance in the treasury and preventing any expected rise in the tax levy of the ensuing fiscal year. What an inspiring sight it was to see them, the other night, barricading themselves behind closed doors, to prevent a lot of cackling protesting taxpayers from interfering with their clean-cut and effective measures for financial "Preparedness." Hats off to them. Thanks to a wise electorate, we have a bunch of financiers in office that have sufficient political acumen and resourcefulness to fill the treasury no matter how many times it is emptied during the year. As long as the taxpayers have anything in sight, the Civic Center should worry.

—Mrs. Ruth Levy, who is chirping so delightedly in the local press that she has discovered the best insurance for marital happiness in an annual separation of several months from hubby, has rendered an old idea in new shape. Husband and wife declare such a vacation is a panacea for long and devoted marital content. Since Adam and Eve, married couples, by and large, have taken their "vacation" in various forms and in allopathic or homeopathic doses according to their temperament. For instance, there is a prominent man in this town who divorces his wife semi-occasionally, and remarries her every time the alimony due her reaches threatening proportions, and the limit of the court's leniency, and a wife who for three years has divorced her husband and remarried him four times within that period.

AN ODE TO SPRING.

The bloomin' buds are bustin' on all the bally trees,
And the robins come a wheezin' and a snortin' down the breeze.
The donkeys are a brayin' and the jays begin to sing
'Cause they know without our tellin' 'em
It's Spring—sweet Spring.

The fishes in the ocean are a jumpin' and a splashin',
And the water bugs are actin' in a most peculiar fashion;
The cats are yowlin' choruses a sittin' in a ring,
'Cause they know without our tellin' 'em
It's Spring—sweet Spring.

The mushrooms in the cellar'll be blooming pretty soon,
And the neighbor's puppies whinin' and a yapping at the moon.
'The April skies are leakin' and a wettin' everything,
So come on and join the chorus—Here's to Spring—Sweet Spring.

—Tom Sleeper.

PIONEER DAUGHTER PENNILESS.

(Communicated)

Stockton, May 26, 1916.

Mrs. Lillian Marshall, daughter of an old pioneer, Wm. Taaffe, a millionaire in early days, of the old firm of Taaffe & McCahill Co., was burned out some time ago and lost everything she had and was left penniless. Her father, Wm. Taaffe, came to San Francisco in '45, opened the first dry goods store in San Francisco in early days, and at his death his store was No. 9, under the Lick House on Montgomery street. His wholesale store in early days was at Front and Sacramento street. His store was across from where the Vigilantes were at the time James King of William was killed, and James King of William lived next door to the Taaffes at North Beach. Mr. Taaffe was widely known all over the State. He was one of the most charitable men in San Francisco, gave thousands to the churches and charities. A person never left his store destitute; his hand was ever ready to help the poor and needy. Wm. Taaffe founded Eugene Kelly's bank in early days, and was interested in the California Bank with the late Wm. Ralston. At the time Wm. Ralston died he was associated with Flood and O'Brien, Mackay, Fair, Senator Hearst, Murphy Grant, Dunphys, Crockers, Sutro, James Lick, and all the leading millionaires, were his friends. He started many men in business in early days, and helped them to start in business.

Where are the ones who will now help his penniless daughter in distress? Mrs. Marshall was educated in the Convent of Notre Dame, San Jose, and was raised in wealth and luxury, and she had everything money could buy. The Taaffe owned valuable lands in Palo Alto, also valuable property opposite the States Capital; also was interested in Spring Valley Water Works, and owned property in South San Francisco, and stock in railroads. Her brother married Martin J. Murphy's daughter of Mountain View. She was the sister of the late Bernard D. Murphy of San Jose and late of San Francisco.

Mrs. Marshall owes for back rent and is destitute of everything, and hopes some kind hearts will give her a helping hand, as hers is indeed a worthy cause of need. She is a widow and getting on in years. She can't leave Stockton until she has clothes and pays her rent. Anything will be gratefully received. She is a native daughter, and was born in San Francisco.

Her address is 520 Channel street, Stockton, California

A Bachelor Entertainment.

The San Francisco bachelor has been scored to a crisp for his remissness in the matter of social obligations, but all the toasting in the world does not seem to fire him with a desire to "do things up brown." To be sure, here and there one finds in the wandering tribe of bachelors a "throw back," a strange creature with an atavistic sense of social responsibility, an inheritance from some grandfather who loved the role of entertainer more than that of entertainee.

But one finds this so infrequently that when it does occur, all the smart world sits up and wonders whether the bachelor world is going through some catylismic change that will alter the entire scheme of things social. Futile speculation, for down deep every one of us knows that because an occasional bachelor plays the role of host does not signify that the whole tribe is going to harken to the call and hunt in a pack for the trophies of hostship.

For example, this Saturday night Louis Welch is giving a dinner dance at the Burlingame Club, to which he has invited some two hundred guests. So infrequently does a bachelor in these parts do that sort of thing that society was thrilled to its toes by the invitations, and one hears on all sides how ripping it is of Welch to give this dinner dance, and the more optimistic of the belles wonder whether it will not stimulate other men to social responsibility. The answer is, "it will not!"

The San Francisco breed of bachelors does not depart very far from the type in other cities, for all over the land the bachelor has been de-energized into a state of mind which reverses the adage about its being better to give than receive. The average unmarried man believes that he is doing enough for a girl when he accepts her invitations, and the old-fashioned reciprocity treaties he regards as mere "scraps of paper," from the diaries of the beaux of the past.

When now and then a bachelor does make social exertions, he creates a stir out of all proportion to his endeavors. For example, during a season Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Welch entertain at a dozen big affairs and innumerable small ones, and society accepts with a take-it-for-grantedness. But along comes Andrew's bachelor brother, Louis, and decides to give a dinner dance, and every one thinks that it's just too wonderful, particularly his fellow bachelors, who can't imagine why he should bother when no one expects a man to go to that sort of fuss.

Greenway's Invisible Successor.

Since Ned Greenway refused the title of Bachelor Emeritus Entertainer of San Francisco, the tribe has been practically unrepresented. For years it was Greenway's pleasure as well as his business to put a bead on the bumper of gayety. The social history of San Francisco could not be written without the Greenway balls and the Greenway dinners in headlines.

The only pity of it is that the iron has entered the soul of Ned's geniality. Greenway retired from business with very little money, as wealth goes, and the reason of it, I am told, is that he put up for years a great deal of his own money for the lavish entertaining which so many people imagined were charged on the books of his firm.

After his retirement, he gave his annual birthday dinner for a season or two, until he realized that many were accepting it in the same spirit that they had always accepted his hospitality—as a matter of course, and with an idea that the birthday dinner was all a part of the pensioning arrangement. So Greenway retired absolutely and without equivocation from the field of entertaining, leaving it entirely open to any bachelor who cared to come along and throw his hat into the ring. But up to date, all the bachelors are hanging their hats on the accustomed pegs—and the only hats in the ring are the cocked hats into which such ideas have been knocked.

If Greenway has a successor in society, he is an invisible agent of the forces that make for pleasure, and even those with seven times a seventh sense do not recognize him. There may be some bachelor hunting for the permanent job of host, but he is evidently praying not to find it, and his prayers are answered.

Mrs. Hotaling G. A. R.'s.

In the elder days of San Francisco, the smart set was always represented at the memorial services on Decoration Day, and the other afternoon I listened to one of the old veterans tell reminiscences of the grande dames of the yesteryears who never failed to drive out in their carriages to place flowers on the graves of the dead heroes while their living comrades commemorated the valorous days of the war. Mrs. Hotaling is one of the few among the women who still never fails to come to the G. A. R. exercises on Decoration Day, and as the veteran watched her automobile honk-honk away, he said: "Well, there is one lady who holds on to fine old traditions even if she is up to date enough to prefer the automobile to the horse."

Mrs. Hotaling always goes out to the exercises at the Relief Home in the afternoon of the day when the soldiers are memorialized and the old people delight in her presence.

Mrs. Wheeler and Mrs. Pankhurst.

Mrs. Benjamin Ide Wheeler, wife of the President of the University of California, is not in sympathy with the woman struggle for equal opportunities, and she has always expressed herself in no uncertain terms even in the days when her husband somewhat clouded his beliefs in the impenetrable haze of academic diction.

However, Mrs. Wheeler must have a sense of humor, and therefore she should enjoy as much as any one the fact that she had a double in town the other day, and that this double arrived at the Palace Hotel coincident with Mrs. Pankhurst's entrance into our midst, and that for three days Mrs. Wheeler's double was singled out as Mrs. Pankhurst.

Mrs. Pankhurst, in spite of her brick and bomb throwing past, is the epitome of all that is dainty and feminine—she is soft spoken, with a face that has a kind of spiritual grace in addition to beauty of feature. During her stay here, she was put up by a member at one of the fashionable woman's clubs, but somehow the rumor ran that she was staying at the Palace, and the guests there all had a certain woman placarded as Mrs. Pankhurst. Said woman was so much like Mrs. Benjamin Ide Wheeler that she might have been her twin sister, and evidently she has been mistaken for Mrs. Wheeler, for I heard the following conversation from my vantage point at a nearby table.

A very pleasant looking young woman approached the stranger, and in a hearty voice said: "I've always understood and had sympathy with the militant movement, and I want to introduce myself to you, dear Mrs. Pankhurst—"

"Pankhurst!" exclaimed the lady in horrified accents. "Don't tell me that I look like Mrs. Pankhurst. Ever since I came to San Francisco I've been taken for Mrs. Benjamin Ide Wheeler, and I don't believe in co-education, and I understand her husband is the president of that kind of an institution—but that's not so bad as looking like Mrs. Pankhurst. Oh, dear, do I really?"

Whereupon the young lady consoled her with the fact that she had never seen Mrs. Pankhurst, and didn't really know whether there was any resemblance.

"Then what made you think that I was Mrs. Pankhurst?" questioned the lady.

"Why, every one in the room thinks that you are," answered the young woman. "I don't know why, unless it is that you are the most militant looking person here!"

The Skating Fad.

The skating fad has necessitated a new arrangement of partners, for a number of the dancing men have not yet become proficient on the ice, and therefore some of them are in grave danger of losing out with the ladies of their hearts. For example, a very dashing young matron has danced conspicuously through several seasons with a gentleman whose steps match hers much better than her own husband's, and friend husband has had to take much chaffing about his wife's dancing partner.

But now enters the field an Eastern chap who was born and raised on the ice, and the dashing matron, who is in her first skating season, much prefers this Eastern adept to her dancing partner or her husband, who are both novices on the ice. The result is a very amusing, though rather obvious comedy for the onlookers—husband is very happy, evidently regarding any change a change for the better; the Eastern youth is very flattered at being selected as the skating affinity of a married woman; the ex-suitor finds the skating rink a very draughty place, and doesn't understand why any one should be crazy about cooling his heels on the ice.

Music and Flowers for Miss Coolbrith.

May 20th witnessed a Coolbrith celebration at the Franklin Grammar School, Oakland, when Mrs. Frank R. Thompson, president of the Parent-Teachers' Association, unveiled a picture of the Poet Laureate, to be hung in its Hall of Fame, already adorned by those of the late Joaquin Miller, Edwin Markham, Luther Burbank. Mrs. Phoebe Hearst and Jack London. Those who participated in the exercises were Miss Coolbrith, Principal Edgar, Mr. R. E. White and Mesdames Gertrude Alison and Marian Taylor, vice-presidents of the Pacific Coast Women's Press Association, the former lady reading with fine effect Miss Coolbrith's poem, "The Day of the Lord." Miss Meta Rose, soloist of the Church of the Advent, sang the Needham setting of "Blossom Time" in splendid style, and, responding to an encore, gave the familiar melody, "Long, Long Ago," with a sweetness that brought tears to many eyes. Miss Ruth Julien accompanied her very sympathetically.

Last Sunday night the Dansant Club held one of the gayest and prettiest dinner dances the writer has enjoyed the good fortune to attend. The dinner itself, at $1.50 a cover, was admirable, while the dance music and entertainment was of the Techau standard. Hurry-Up-Lunch at noon still attracts the business man, and the dining hour of the early evening is given over to the superb dinner and Techau cordial service, a standard of its kind. After visiting the glorious skating at the Ice Palace, a block or so away, or after the fall of the theatre curtain, the satisfying caper is to "drop-in" on the Tavern for a light supper bite and the attractive show, a bevy of pretty girls and excellent artistes. At Techau Tavern one meets the local smart world at pleasure and in joyous humor.

A delightfully Japanesque character was given the party in the Hotel St. Francis Kindergarten in honor of little Mary Louise Boos, just before her departure for Los Angeles. The color scheme and decoration were Nipponese throughout, and the favors were ingenious individual umbrellas and dolls. Everything that is done in this school for "poor little rich" girls and boys is a picture. The children entered the kindergarten dancing to music of the old-fashioned minuet. The program, which consisted of a series of folk, fancy and solo dances, and graceful gymnastic exhibitions, carried out the distinctive plan of picture poses. Soletta Manassee in solo dancing; Jack Chepard in recitations; Doris Kirschner in readings; and Mary Louise Boos and Gerald Dow in dancing were notably clever. "Sweet Pea Ladies" was sung by the children in chorus, and impersonated by Helen Snow, Mamie Blethen, Doris Rogers, Jean Stewart and Patricia Game.

Mr. and Mrs. Harold Weddle of New York are at the Hotel Oakland. Mrs. Weddle will be remembered as Miss Clara Stella Hansen of Oakland.

Mrs. J. W. Treadwell was hostess at a luncheon at the Hotel Oakland recently. Her guests were Mesdames Frank Simpson, E. H. Savercool, Peter Jurs, Godfrey Rueger, Jesse B. McCargar, Henry Hinman, Wm. Doub, Walter Scott, Arthur Sander-son, Thomas Clark and Tracy Bibbins.

On June 3d, Mr. Frank Edoff and Mr. Jos. King will entertain with a dance and supper in the Ivory ball room. Three hundred of the smart set of the bay region have been included in the guest list for the occasion.

J. J. SCOTT HEADS NEW INSURANCE FEDERATION.

Announcement has been made of the selection of Mr. Joseph J. Scott, for the past three years Collector of Internal Revenue at San Francisco, as secretary-manager of the Insurance Federation of California.

Mr. Scott will resign his office in the government service, to take the management of the Federation throughout the State.

Mr. Will H. Fischer will be in immediate charge of the work of the Federation in Southern California, with headquarters in Los Angeles. Headquarters have been opened for the Federation in San Francisco in the Merchants' Exchange Building, and in Los Angeles in the Citizens' Bank Building, and the work of organization is going rapidly forward.

ECONOMY AND CON- VENIENCE IN NEW GLASSES

With the invention of the new double vision glasses called "Caltex" Oneplace Bifocals it is not necessary to have two pairs of glasses—one for reading and one for distance. The "Caltex" Oneplace Bifocals are ground from a solid piece of clear optical glass, and both reading and distance vision are ground in one lens. They are a great convenience, as one pair of glasses serve the purpose of two.

PERSONAL ADVENTURES IN THE PAINTED WORLD

BY HENRY McDONALD SPENCER

"Along Came Ruth" to the Alcazar

The cheer-leaders of the drama, newspaper-reporters styling themselves critics, and who constantly prate of the art of the mime—artistry in the case of a she-mime—are indulging in their usual eulogistic debauch on the presentation of "Along Came Ruth" at the Alcazar this week.

Now, I am strong for the drama, and likewise for the Alcazar, which continues to be the only important theatre in San Francisco exclusively devoted to the spoken play in three dimensions and known as the Legitimate; indiscriminate and superlative praise, however, defeats its own end, and, ipse facto, renders itself nugatory.

Thus, when the worst receives as high commendation as the best—and there is nothing beyond superlative—what is left to say when the best comes along? All the adjectives have been used up.

When all the lights in a picture are high lights there are—to state a paradox—no high lights; when all qualification is raised to the "nth." degree the "nth." degree becomes the minimum, or at least the norm.

The word "wholesome" has been seized upon particularly by the signed-article stenographers in connection with Holman Day's play, just as the merry flag-waving troupe have all had their fling with that cliche, "the tired business man," in referring to musical comedy; and the idea undoubtedly arose from the billing—good work by the press agent and illustrative of the power of suggestion.

Now why the drama, a form of art, should be "criticised" in terms of Battle Creek breakfast cereals, God alone knows, and he is silent. Accepting, however, this attitude towards the play, to which it must be admitted the proprietors in view of the billing cannot object, I may add that the play itself is as anaemic as the "puffed" food, as emasculated as coffee without any coffee in it, or the kickless beer we have been hearing so much about lately.

Ruth (Mary Boland) happens into a sleepy New England village, although why she does so is not disclosed (score one against the author), and by a bewildering exhibition of scientific salesmanship (where she learned it, not stated) plus sex attraction, makes her employer wealthy; and subsequently, or rather synchronously, speeds up the Chamber of Commerce, and puts the town on the map. Incidentally, every man in the play falls in love with her and proposes, but she marries the right man in the end, owing to the "noble" resignation of her elderly admirer.

Furthermore, there is not sufficient reason given for the "contest" or "friction," as fathers in America, especially of the village storekeeper class have little enough to say about their daughter's marriage, none whatever about that of their son.

Last week I was for lovely Mary Boland, but this week she was not suitably cast; she was too sophisticated, and—how shall I say it without offending the lady—A trifle too prononcee for the character which she was supposed to represent. As I take it, some 110 pound cutey with large, soulful brown eyes and modest brown hair is the kind for the part.

The honors, however, easily went to George Howard, who played the silly old storekeeper with his head turned by his purely fortuitous success; although, it must be admitted, that given the physical qualifications the part is nearly actor-proof.

Forrest Stanley as Allan Hubbard, and of course the successful suitor to the leading lady's hand, did not seem to be very happy in his share of the evening's entertainment, but it was hardly his fault, as the play was dull enough. The rest of the performers were likewise better than their parts.

I am sorry to feel constrained to write the foregoing, as I want to help the Alcazar all that lies in my power, but I am sure that when, as in last week's issue, I do commend, my words will have greater weight; so far as the management and details of production are concerned, they are all to the good. (A little ointment for the wound.)

Season's Second Musical Comedy Production at Columbia

The principle employed by the Columbia in its musical comedy season appears to be eminently sound. The theatre is employing New York principals, stage direction and management, and by using local young ladies costumed principally in talcum powder, for festooning the stage, it saves the high cost of transporting and guaranteeing exotic fauna from the neighborhood of Forty-second and Broadway; thereby we have the benefit of a metropolitan production plus local pulchritude, at half price.

It remains, therefore, for the public to show its appreciation; otherwise it will have for its only theatrical fare the epileptic antics of Charlie Chaplin, the immature inanities of Mary Pickford, or the lubricity of the brothel in two dimensions as portrayed by Theda Bara.

There you are—take your choice, but do not say that I never warned you.

It is not the movies, the cabarets, automobiles and Fords, suburban residence, or any one thing that keep people away from the theatre; it is rather a combination of all forms of distraction which has resulted from a certain revolt at Puritanism. More than all else, however, it is habit.

Up to ten years ago, people had the theatre habit; now they have lost it largely; and when they do go to the playhouse it is rather more casually than purposefully. Where are the full-dress audiences which used to appear regularly at the old Columbia, especially, and with unflinching regularity, on first nights? Surely they haven't all moved to the suburbs, and if so, there is the auto to carry them to town. You can come up from Burlingame, San Mateo or Hillsborough, for instance, more quickly and comfortably than you could reach the theatre in the old days from, say, Pacific Avenue and Central. In London, for example, theatre-going is part of the life of the community, particularly among the leaders of fashion; this you may see reflected in English fiction, where so many incidents are located at or near theatres.

The same stock company which was so successful in "The Midnight Girl" is playing "Oh, I Say" this week, with some additions to the cast, all of whom are acceptable.

Dorothy Webb rather changed places with Eleanor Henry in relative importance of roles, and Arthur Cunningham's voice was heard more frequently, but not enough. Why don't the powers interpolate a song or two for this popular favorite and excellent singer.

The costuming was all exquisitely fresh, and the Ex-Performer who graciously consented to occupy the other seat provided me by the management, commented on how well the girls worked. And you know this sort of praise, or rather praise coming from such a source, is not passed around for merry conversation.

The "Ponies" at Pantages

"The Junior Review of 1915" is one of the most elaborate and pretentious acts which I have ever seen in vaudeville, and while it was billed as presenting kids, I can assure you on my word as a critic in good standing, i. e., drawing pay, that the cradle was not robbed in casting the act, and that you will not be violating any State law if you yearn.

The young lady assistants are of the pony type, a kind that has been going out of fashion in musical comedy, but in this case they are all very attractive, and I shall not venture to give you my choice, as generally I do. See them and judge for yourself, and if you don't agree with me that they alone are worth

ENGAGEMENTS.

BAUME-POZANSKI.—Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Baume announce the engagement of their daughter, Hattie, to Mr. Norton Louis Pozanski.

COHEN-ALTFIELD.—Announcement is made of the engagement of Miss Vera Irene Cohen, of Melbourne, Australia, to Daniel Altfield, son of Mr. and Mrs. S. Altfield, of this city.

THOMPSON-CUMMING.—The engagement of Miss Mary Dickson Thompson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Thompson of this city, and Lieutenant John W. W. Cumming, U. S. N., now stationed at Mare Island, was announced recently at a tea given by Miss Alice Barr at her home in San Rafael.

WALTER-O'NEIL.—At a pretty tea over which she presided at the Bellevue Saturday afternoon, Miss Irene Walter announced her engagement to Gerald E. O'Neil. The bride-elect was assisted in her duties as hostess by her sister, Mrs. F. N. Reeves of San Anselmo.

WEDDING ANNOUNCEMENTS.

CHADWICK-BROWN.—The marriage of Miss Beryl Chadwick, niece of Mrs. J. Parker Whitney of Rocklin, and Roy H. Brown of Knoxville, Tennessee, will take place at Trinity Church to-day, with the Reverend Frederick W. Clappett officiating. The young couple will leave immediately after the wedding breakfast, which is to be at the Fairmont Hotel, for a honeymoon trip to British Columbia and the Canadian Rockies. They will live in Knoxville.

COMANS-McMEANS.—The marriage of Lieutenant Robert G. Comans, U. S. N., and Miss Mary McMeans will be solemnized June 10th in the Church of the Incarnation in Santa Rosa, and will be followed by a reception at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Alexander McMeans of that place. The young people will live at Mare Island, where Lieutenant Comans is on duty.

CUNNINGHAM-KENT.—The marriage of Miss Genevieve Cunningham and Platt Kent will not take place this summer, but will be an event of the early fall. It will take place at Woodside, with a reception at the James A. Folger home following the ceremony.

SUYDAM-BARKER.—Miss Mary Suydam and Harold Earle Barker of New York will be married the second week in July, but the precise date will not be determined until after Mr. Barker arrives, which will be toward the last of June.

WILLIAMS-HARTIGAN.—In the presence of relatives and a few intimate friends, Miss Dorothy Williams and John Doane Hartigan will be married at high noon on Saturday, June 10th. The ceremony will be performed at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Smith Williams, at Roxbury, N. Y.

WOODWARD-BOGEL.—Miss Bess Woodward, daughter of Mrs. Edward F. Woodward, will be married to Dr. Samuel S. Bogel of this city to-day, at the Woodward home in Santa Rosa. The engagement was announced a few weeks ago.

WEDDINGS.

BENNETT-ERIZARD.—Miss Katherine Bennett, niece of Mr. and Mrs. Philip E. Bowles, became the wife of Henry Brizard of Arcata on Saturday afternoon. The ceremony took place at the Pines, the Bowles residence in Piedmont. Following the ceremony, which was read by the Rev. William K. Guthrie, there was a reception and repast served out of doors. Following their honeymoon, the bride and bridegroom will make their home in Arcata, where Henry Brizard has prepared a charming home among the redwoods.

TORNEY-O'BRIEN.—The marriage of Miss Mary Torney and Morgan V. O'Brien took place Thursday at St. Vincent's Church, Vallejo. The ceremony and wedding breakfast was attended by the members of the two families only.

SUES-LEE.—Miss Margaret Y. Sues, daughter of Major A. L. Sues, special pension examiner for the United States government Tuesday, became the bride of Arthur S. Lee, Sacramento manager of the E. E. Horst Company, and a graduate of the University of California. The wedding took place at the bride's home in Lake street. The bride is but eighteen years old and a graduate of the Lowell High School.

LUNCHEONS.

CADWALADER.—A coterie of friends enjoyed the hospitality of Mrs. George Cadwalader at luncheon recently. It took place at the Burlingame Country Club.

HOTZ.—Mrs. Alfred Hunter was the guest of honor at the luncheon at which Mrs. John G. Hotz was the hostess Wednesday afternoon at her quarters at Fort Winfield Scott.

KNIGHT.—Mrs. Samuel Knight gave a luncheon at the Burlingame Country Club Saturday afternoon.

McKEEVER.—Mrs. T. L. McKeever entertained a number of her friends recently as a compliment to Miss Frances Dougherty, who is leaving soon to study the drama in the East. After luncheon cards afforded diversion for a couple of hours.

MURPHY.—Mr. and Mrs. Daniel T. Murphy presided at an informal luncheon Sunday afternoon, taking their guests to the Burlingame Country Club, where several groups were gathered about tables arranged on the veranda.

NICKEL.—Miss Beatrice Nickel was hostess Wednesday at a luncheon at the Francisca Club for Misses Ruth Zelle and Helen Garritt and Mrs. Harry McAfee.

WHITNEY.—Mrs. J. Parker Whitney will give a luncheon for fourteen guests this afternoon at the Fairmont Hotel.

DINNERS.

ARMS.—Mr. and Mrs. Franklin T. Arms, the former pay-director at Mare Island, entertained some friends at a dinner at their home Wednesday evening.

BLACK.—Miss Mary Louise Black was hostess at dinner Thursday evening, entertaining a group of friends at her home on Broadway.

FAGAN.—Miss Mae Fagan, whose engagement to Thomas P. McNearney was recently announced, was the guest of honor at a dinner party which Miss Elsie Faily gave at her home in Mill Valley this week.

MARTIN.—Mrs. Eleanor Martin entertained Wednesday night at her home at a dinner complimentary to Count Buena Esperanza.

McNEAR.—Mr. and Mrs. George McNear entertained at dinner Tuesday evening, their guests assembling in their handsome home on Jackson street.

McNEAR.—Mrs. Willis Walker was the guest of honor at a dinner Monday evening over which Mr. and Mrs. Seward McNear presided at their home on Green street.

MENZIES.—Mr. and Mrs. Robert Menzies will be hosts at dinner this evening at their home in San Rafael. It will precede the entertainment that is to be given to mark the opening of the San Rafael Improvement Club's new building.

ROTHSCHILD.—The attractive home of Dr. and Mrs. Max Rothschild at Burlingame was the setting for a delightful dinner Tuesday evening.

SHELDON.—Mrs. A. Goodwin Sheldon presided at a dinner and theatre party Wednesday evening, her guests assembling for dinner at her residence in Sea Cliff.

SIBERT.—General William L. Sibert, U. S. A., and his sister, Miss Sibert, gave a dinner Monday night at their quarters at Fort Alvey in compliment to Colonel Alfred M. Hunter, U. S. A., and Mrs. Hunter.

TEAS.

ASHE.—Mrs. Sydney A. Ashe achieved the distinction of doing something pleasantly original Sunday by giving a tea, at which two excellent artists appeared, Giuseppe Jollani and Sigismonde Martinez, who were heard in solo numbers and later on, accompanied Mrs. Ashe in her splendid reading of Stephen Phillips' "Paola and Francesca," for which beautiful music has been written.

CARSON.—Mrs. Thomas G. Carson will be hostess Thursday afternoon at a bridge tea to be given at the Bellevue Hotel for Mrs. Lee Holcombe, who, with her son, Captain Lee Holcombe, U. S. A., will sail Monday for their new station, Honolulu.

FILMER.—Tuesday Miss Marion Filmer was hostess at a tea in honor of Miss Viva Radovich, who is to marry Thomas H. Dazler soon.

HOBART.—Mr. and Mrs. Walter S. Hobart entertained Messrs. and Mesdames Frederick Hussey, Christian de Gulgne and Herbert Payne at an informal tea Sunday afternoon at the San Mateo Polo Club, following the polo game.

MAHONEY.—Miss Louise Mahoney will be hostess Sunday afternoon at a tea to be given at her studio in Post street in honor of Mrs. Bertha Lum of Minneapolis, who is famed for her Japanese prints.

WHITNEY.—Miss Lillian Whitney entertained a few of her intimate friends at an informal tea Monday afternoon.

CARDS.

BELL.—Luncheon, followed by bridge, formed an afternoon of much pleasure Saturday for a group of the friends of Mrs. J. Franklin Bell, who assembled in her attractive quarters at Fort Mason.

WEEK END PARTIES.

BLACK.—Mr. and Mrs. Algernon Gibson accompanied Miss Marie Louise Black and Miss Josephine Marshall to Miramonte, Marin County, for the week-end, chaperoning the house party which Miss Black gave for a dozen of her friends.

ARRIVALS.

WILDER.—Mrs. Arthur Wilder and Mrs. Helen Noonan departed Monday for Chico, where they contemplate spending the next ten days.

INTIMATIONS.

BAKER.—Mr. and Mrs. George Barr Baker are expected here soon from New York, to remain all summer. They have taken a house in Burlingame.

DRUM.—Mr. and Mrs. John Drum moved on June 1st to Burlingame, where they have taken the home of Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Rathbone for the summer.

DE PUE.—Edgar De Pue and daughter, Miss Elva De Pue, are expected home to-day from New York, where Miss De Pue has spent the winter studying music.

HAWKINS.—Captain Hamilton Hawkins, United States Army, Mrs. Hawkins and their children, who have been at the Bellevue since their arrival in San Francisco from the Mexican border, will sail Monday for Honolulu, where they are to be stationed for the next two years.

HOLBROOK.—Mr. and Mrs. Harry Holbrook will return Sunday from San Diego, where they have been visiting the latter's father.

HOLCOMBE.—Captain John Holcombe and his mother, Mrs. Lee Holcombe, who have been the guests of Major and Mrs. William Hastings Brooks for a few days, sail on the 5th for Honolulu.

HOOPER.—Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Hooper, who recently returned from the East, have decided to spend the summer in Woodside, where they have taken a house.

HUTCHINSON.—Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Hutchinson, the latter of whom was Miss Dorothy Allen, have returned from their honeymoon in Bermuda, and are established in a handsome home at Hempstead, L. I., where they will be during the summer.

JOHNSON.—Mr. and Mrs. Ois Johnson and their two children will move shortly to Belvedere, where they have taken a house for the summer.

JONES.—Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Jones and Miss Mimi Brewer have given up their apartment on Chestnut street, and are established in Mill Valley, where they will spend the next few months.

KERS.—Mr. and Mrs. Peter Kers, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Goss, Jr. and Mr. and Mrs. James Firth, leave on June 1st for Mill Valley to remain for the summer.

LANSDALE.—Mr. Philip Van Hone Lansdale is in Los Angeles and will be south again about June 15th. Toward the last of the month she will go to Santa Barbara.

LAWIS.—Mr. and Mrs. de Lanay Lawis are passing a week at their attractive bungalow in Los Gatos, having used their California home in Merced Park for that period of time.

LYMAN.—Dr. and Mrs. George Lyman have taken a cottage at Danville for the summer, and moved there recently.

MARKER.—Mrs. George T. Murve and sister, Miss Flora (Lovel) and her young daughter, Emma Maive, are expected to arrive here Tuesday. They have visited friends here but they would start from Washington Friday.

MOLITON.—Mr. and Mrs. Irving Moliton and their daughter, Mrs. Hattie Moliton, leave on June 1st for Alaska, to be away several weeks. They will return from Vancouver.

POUCHING.—Mrs. Frederick M. Pouching and Mrs. Robert C. Foyt and Miss Augusta Foyt, who were at Byron Hot Springs for a fortnight, have returned to town.

REILLY.—Mr. and Mrs. F. J. Reilly have returned from their honeymoon, and have taken an apartment at the Clift Hotel to reside permanently.

ZEILE.—Word has been received from Miss Marian Zeile, who sailed on the 17th with Mr. and Mrs. Templeton Crocker to Honolulu, that they had an excellent crossing, with only two days of windy weather.

"CALIFORNIA" IN PAGEANT.

Ina Coolbrith's beautiful poem, "California," was translated into a charming pageant, this week, by the Sisters of the Order of St. Dominic to celebrate commencement week at their college in Magnolia Valley. Esther Cardwell, robed in gold and helmeted, and surrounded by Grecian maids in classic robes, rendered in idealistic forms the spirit of the old world and the new. A large number of friends of the institution and a number of the clergy, headed by Most Reverend Edward Hanna, enjoyed the illuminating spectacle.

—"Now I want this and I expect that, likewise so and so," declared the cook. "That will do for you," said the lady of the house. "You act like a foreign nation attempting to win the sympathy of the United States."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

"The Present Day China."

To the ordinary run of Americans, China is practically a blank space on the map where tea, rice and silk come from. Since the war with Japan, China, the giant slumbering nation of the Orient, has turned over, awakened, and is trying to take her true position among the nations of the world. She is now the center of intense interest, as her future bulks large in the destiny of a new world commercially. Gardner L. Harding has traveled widely in China, and has kept his eyes open to the economical, political and spiritual changes there. On his visits he has kept tab of transformations underway, and has observed at close range the encroachments and plans for future encroachments by foreign nations, especially Japan. He senses the drift of the 400,000,000 inhabitants, and describes convincingly the changes and achievements underway. His book is the latest, best and most illuminating on the rapid changes underway there.

"Including You and Me."

The success of "Including Finnigan," a former book of verses by Strickland Gillian, impelled him to publish this second volume. His verses touch the common things of earth so dear to the ordinary human being with a heart for all. Human interest is his theme, a baby's sorrow, a genuine man, boy dreams, becoming a man, the fun of living, the greatest gift, all perhaps homely, but all touching the hearthstone and the hearts that gather there.

"William Keith as a Prophet Painter."

This monograph, by Emily P. B. Hay, is a sincere and loving appreciation of the man as well as the highly gifted artist. His life is covered illuminatingly, and his several studios are pictured from the first one in the heart of the old San Francisco to the one he finally settled in after the big fire of 1906, which swept away the large number of paintings he had on hand, the work of years of painstaking toil. Many delightful anecdotes told of these studios shed a new light on Keith as a man and an artist. The comments on Keith's conception of art and his efforts to materialize his visions are rarely interesting. Those who are interested in art and in this gifted California artist will find deep interest in this little book.

"Merry Monologues."

This little volume presents for the first time in printed form a selected list of the most successful readings of the author, Mary Moncure Parker, author of several plays, and prominent as a successful monologist. The selections are wholly original, bear the stamp of enthusiastic public approval, a large number of them having been given under the auspices of Gustav Frohman. They are varied in sentiment and character to meet all ordinary demands. A number of new monologues have been introduced into this edition, which have never been given in public. Those who are gifted in monologue and who appreciate a good monologue to entertain their friends or others will find this little book a gold mine for their purpose.

The Most Original Club in America.

A writer in the June American Magazine says: "There exists in one of our great Western cities a unique secret club—called by the members of the Get-Out and Get-On Club. It was organized seventeen years ago by ten ambitious men who looked upon themselves as not yet having won success. Membership for twelve years has been limited to fifty. The rules are what makes this club different. No member may call himself a Success until the club votes him one, and when the club votes any member a Success, he is expelled and his place is filled by another. But before a Success is expelled, a dinner is given in his honor and to welcome the new member. At this dinner the Success must read a paper explaining to his fellows how and why he won. These papers are preserved."

Astronomical Charity.

In the June Woman's Home Companion Hayden Carruth says: "We think that Mr. Carnegie's advice to folks with surplus wealth—to devote it to promoting astronomy—was far from wise advice. Promoting astronomy at present seems to us much like a man who, when his house is afire, takes out a pair of manicure scissors and begins to trim the cat's whiskers."

The Rex Beach of the South.

Rex Beach, whose new book, "The Crimson Gardenia," was published by Harpers during his trip to Panama, has just returned north. Though many of his readers continue to associate Mr. Beach with Alaska, his later writings have been laid in southern settings: "Heart of the Sunset," on the Mexican border; many of the tales in "The Crimson Gardenia," take place in the West Indies, and "The Ne'er-Do-Well," in Panama itself. Beach does not believe that the Canal is adequately defended. "If a fair-sized battle cruiser," he remarked, in an interview after landing, "took a couple of shots at the forts defending the terminals of the canal, it would be all off with the defences. The forts are sadly inadequate. So far as I could see, they could be destroyed by a squadron of warships at sea."

The third printing of T. Everett Harre's dramatic novel, "Behold the Woman!" preceded the date of publication by Lippincott, and will shortly be followed by a fourth. The book has been reviewed widely and at length, and such notabilities as Amelie Rives, Princess Troubetzkoy, Mary Garden, Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont, General Bingham and Mrs. Minnie Maddern Fiske, have given the book high praise as a great literary achievement ranking with the famous novels of all time.

AN IDEAL SCHOOL FOR BOYS.

The annual booklet of the Hitchcock Military Academy at San Rafael, for its thirty-ninth successful year, is replete with pictorial and letterprint regarding its many attractions in physical and mental development for young students. The school was founded in the early part of 1878, by the Reverend William Dixon, rector of St. Paul's Episcopal Church in San Rafael, and is thus the oldest institution of its kind in the West. The system of the academy is intended to develop regular and healthy habits of mind and body, thoroughness in all work undertaken, and an appreciation of the necessity of obedience to proper authority, as well as the responsibility of command. Excellent photographs show the life of the students in school rooms, and on the playgrounds, and attractive countryside, in which the academy is located. The booklet is encyclopedic in information regarding details. If you are interested, address the Hitchcock Military Academy, San Rafael, California.

ANNUAL MEETING OF OSTEOPATHS.

Arrangements have been made by the local committees in charge for the fifteenth annual convention of the California State Osteopathic Association, which meets this year in Hotel Oakland for three days, beginning Thursday, June 8th. On the evening before the opening of the convention there will be an informal reception to the visiting delegates. Mayor John L. Davie will deliver the address of welcome on Thursday morning. The president of the Los Angeles Association will respond. Other speakers will be Dr. E. Bertella Fergusen, president of the Bay Osteopathic Association, and Dr. W. Curtis Brigham, president of the State Association. Social welfare workers have been invited to attend the Thursday morning session, as two papers of particular interest to those connected with social welfare work are to be read. The afternoon session of the same day will also be a public one. This session will be devoted entirely to problems of motherhood and better babies.

GRADUATING EXERCISES OF MISS HAMLIN'S SCHOOL

The graduating exercises of the Class of 1916 of Miss Hamlin's School were held Thursday evening, June 1st, at 8:30 o'clock at the Fairmont Hotel. The following program was given. 1. Processional, Class of 1916. 2. Piano Solo, Miss Anne Grigsby. 3. A Group of 17th Century Songs: Sleep, Why Dost Thou Leave Me? (Handel); Lass, with a Delicate Air (Arne); Passing By (Purcell); Have You But Seen a White Lily Grow (Traditional), Miss Mary Anderson (Mrs. Paul Jarboe, accompanist.) 4. Address, Judge George E. Crothers. 5. Songs: Si mes vers avaient des ailes (Reynolds Heger), Villanelle (Eva dell' Aqua), Miss Merle Epstein (Miss Grigsby, accompanist.) 6. Short Address and Presentation of Diplomas, Miss Hamlin. 7. Recessional, The Graduates. 8. Reception in the Red Room. 9. Dancing.

—Mr. Jerry Dillon—could any name be more Irish? Mr. Dillon, as you know, is press representative for the Orpheum theatres. Incidentally, he is also one of those personalities that make San Francisco characteristic and different. Mr. Dillon's ancestors must have been aristocrats, for "Jerry" has the languid repose of aristocracy, the "grand manner," so to speak, the reserve of generations. And along with it he possesses the slim figure of youth that never ages and is the envy of large-girthed men. All this because Mr. Dillon has it coming to him, and because being so conspicuous he keeps himself over in the background.

MY WISH.

What would I give, dear friend of mine,
 Could I but share your grief,
 Could I but still your aching heart
 With my prayer for your soul's relief!
 But never a way will we ever find,
 Though the whole world be searched through,
 To dry the tears of the suffering One,
 For the sins that are done by Two.

Into the joy of flower-strewn ways
 Where love-light brightly shone,
 There came no threat, no warning note,
 That we'd travel the path alone;
 And much would I give of the All you gave,
 And the All I'd give, 'tis true,
 If I could lighten the sorrowing One
 Of the woe of the sins of Two.

Brave must he be, as knights of old,
 Who seek the Gate of Love,
 The poppits hide the flint beneath
 And the roses the spears above;
 But where is the man, with his heart of gold,
 Or the woman, fond and true,
 Who'd shrink from pain of the Cross built for One
 Out of happiness shared by Two?
 —Mabel Porter Pitts.

THE MODERN WOMAN'S COMPLAINT.

The modern complaint of woman is that the care of the house has divorced her from growing interests, from literature and, what is more important, from the newspaper, partly from music, entirely from politics. It is a purely material question; there are only twenty-four hours in every day, and there are some things one cannot hustle. One can no more hustle the English joint than the decrees of the Supreme Court. Moreover, and this is a collateral fact, an emptiness has formed around woman; while on the one side she was being tempted by the professions that opened to her, by the interests ready to her hand, the old demands of less organized homes were falling away from her. Once upon a time she was a slave; now she is a half-timer, and the taste of liberty that has come to her has made her more intolerant of the old laws than she was in the ancient days of her serfdom. Not much more than seventy years ago it was still the custom in lower middle-class homes for the woman to sew and bake and brew. These occupations were relinquished, for the distribution of labor made it possible to have them better done at a lower cost.

In the 'fifties and 'sixties the great shops began to grow, stores to rise of the type of Whiteley and Wanamaker. Woman ceased to be industrial, and became commercial; her chief occupation was now shopping. But of late years even that has begun to go; the great stores dominate the retail trade, and now, qualities being equal, there is hardly anything to pick between universal provider No. 1 at one end of the town, and No. 2, equally universal, at the other. Also the stores sell everything; they facilitate purchases; the housekeeper need not go to ten shops, for at a single one she can buy cheese, bicycles and elephants. That is only an indication of the movement: the time will come, probably within our lifetime, when the great stores of the towns will have crushed the small traders and turned them into branch managers; when all the prices will be alike, all the goods alike; when food will be so graded that it will no longer be worth the housekeeper's while to try and discover a particularly good sirloin—instead, she will telephone for seven pounds of quality AF, No. 14,692. Then, having less to do, woman will want to do still less, and the modern rebellion against house and home will find in her restlessness a greater impetus.—W. L. George in Harper's Magazine for June.

—The decision taken, recently, by twenty-two cooperative societies in Great Britain to pay full male rates to female employees marks another great forward step in the cooperative movement. It is just seventy years since the first cooperative store, "The Rochdale Equitable Pioneers," was opened in Rochdale, Lancashire, by a "handful of poor weavers." The Rochdale Society still exists, only to-day it has a membership of over 15,000 and an annual turnover of more than $2,500,000.

—Edmund had just begun to attend the public school, and had found a new friend, a child of whom Edmund's mother had never heard. "Who is this Walter?" she asked; "is he a nice little boy?" "Yes, ma'am he is!" replied Edmund, enthusiastically. "Does he say any naughty words?" pursued the mother. "No," replied Edmund, with emphasis, "and I am not going to teach him any!"—Youth's Companion.

TRIBUTE TO THE BAILEY GEARLESS DIFFERENTIAL

It is not often that the consumer is more eulogistic than the advertiser in commending the latter's goods; but it would appear from the subjoined letter that the distributors of the "Bailey Gearless Differential," Mess. Chanslor & Lyon Co., rather understated the merits of the device. This testimonial, unsought, also is a tribute to the value of the News Letter advertising columns.

—Sister (writing letter to brother at the front)—And hae ye anything else tae say, feyther? Father—Ay! Tell Donal' that gin he comes ower yon German waiter that gaed us a bad saxpence for change when we had a bit dinner in London a while syne, tell him—tae—tak—steady aim.—Punch.

Editor S.F. News Letter

Dear Sir

Seeing an ad in S.F. News Letter May 24/1916 of the Bailey Gearless Differential, our Editor that ad does not do justice to the merits of that device as one of the public and in the interest of "Safety First" the Automobile Public should know more of this device. I have one installed in my "Ford" it makes my car (without shock absorbers) ride like a "Cackard"

Having a pull on both rear wheels on a straight way the car steers itself, the traction on both rear wheels lines up the front wheels and makes your "Ford" hold the road at all speeds

During corners I have on high made over a dozen 30 foot circles without my hand on the steering wheel which is proof that there is no friction in the Differential Bailey Gearless Differential no friction, long life, less gas, less wear, less tire wear, less repairs.

To the ~~person~~ ^{Person} at the wheel it keeps your heart where nature put it. when you strike a skiddy spot you Mr Editor (if you drive a machine) have experienced a sudden elevation of Chief Yule Park when you saw a skiddy spot. The ~~the~~ Bailey Gearless Differential makes Safety Yours in all roads at all speeds

PREPARING FOR POST-WAR TRADE.

The commerce of the world after the war is over may be a merciless international battle of tariffs and political maneuver, or it may return to the keen, open competition and skillful cultivation of the world's markets of before the war; but whatever comes, we may be sure that carefully trained organization and scientific production are going to play a much more obvious part in business everywhere, domestic or foreign. Europe is getting ready to systematize the use of industrial training and practical science all through manufacturing and trade, and much more universally than heretofore.

—According to Slosson and Whitman Symmes, engineers in charge of Comstock operations, the drifts in Con-Virginia and Ophir, on the 2,700 foot level, are in virgin territory, removed many hundreds of feet from the last work, performed in eighties, and there is considerable speculation as to the results to be here obtained, both drifts being in quartz.

—Unusual activity in sugar stocks dealt in on the Honolulu Exchange are reported from there by cable this week. In nearly every instance, the following bids reflect an advance of one point: Ewa, 34¾; McBryde, 14¼; Oahu, 43½; Oloo, 54; Wailaua, 38. Although the San Francisco Board was closed, advanced bids for local sugar stocks were bandied about the "street," and some sales were doubtless made over the counter.

—Examiner H. A. Encell heard the application this week of the Oakland, Antioch and Eastern Railway for leave to issue $25,000 of new 6 per cent notes to refund a maturing issue. Bonds to the amount of $42,000 are pledged to secure these notes. Jesse Steinhart appeared for the company, Manager H. A. Mitchell was the principal witness, and no opposition materialized at the hearing.

—Standard Copper futures made an advance of $25 in London this week, and closed at $7.25.

—Government receipts from internal revenue in present fiscal year will reach $495,000,000—breaking all prior records.

—Estimated unfilled tonnage statement of United States Steel for May will show about 200,000 tons increase, compared with 500,000 in April and 650,000 in March.

—Foreign trade for fiscal year is estimated at $6,300,000,000. Heavier demand is predicted for oil after the war.

—Fifty thousand applications have been made for the 12,000 seats at the disposal of the committee in charge of the Republican national convention hall in Chicago. It must be obvious, even to the most casual, that a large number of these applicants are going to be disappointed. Yet they should be consoled by the knowledge that many of those who have had no trouble about getting seats will be disappointed also. National political conventions in the United States, as a rule, are not strong on the point of giving general satisfaction.

—Doctor (examining Red Cross candidate)—What would you do to the patient first of all? Candidate—Give him some brandy. Doctor—Quite right; but what would you do if you hadn't any brandy? Candidate—Promise him some.—London

Resta Wins the Indianapolis Classic

Two accidents, one of which may prove fatal to Jack Lecain, marred the 300 mile race at the Indianapolis speedway. The race and the first prize of $12,000 were won by Dario Resta in a Peugeot car in 3 hours 36 minutes 10.82 seconds, the slow time of 83.26 miles an hour. D'Alene in a Deussenberg was second, and Mulford, driving a Peugeot, finished third. Only eleven of the twenty starters finished. The race was witnessed by 83,000 spectators.

Resta drove a masterful race at all times, refusing to be dragged into any sort of competition that would tend to put his car out of commission.

In an interview after the race the winner stated that much of his success was to be attributed to the fact that he used Goodrich tires. At no time, he said, did he feel any anxiety as to tire trouble, and this had much to do with preserving his mental equilibrium.

Wife Deserters and Other Misdemeanants Set to Work on Roads

Road work affords a means of making the family deserter support his wife and children. California by statute provides that deserters and other misdemeanants shall be worked by the counties upon the roads, and a sum not exceeding $1.50 a day be paid to their dependents for the work.

Miss Beatrice McCall of the Woman's Protective Bureau of Oakland has reported to the National Committee on Prisons that Los Angeles and Sacramento Counties are enforcing this provision and employing their prisoners in road work. The bureau is endeavoring to have the statute enforced in Alameda County.

The movement to work county prisoners on public roads is also gaining ground in Louisiana.

New Orleans passed an ordinance in 1907 providing for such work. Other counties have leased their prisoners under the lease system abolished as far as State prisoners are concerned by the constitution of the State. W. O. Hart, president of the Louisiana Prison Reform Association, has informed the National Committee on Prisons that the association is introducing a bill into the next session of the legislature to abolish the lease system even for county prisoners, and extend the New Orleans system to other counties.

Kalamazoo County, Michigan, ridded the county of tramps by establishing road camps for county prisoners. Salem County, New Jersey, found the road camp a means of overcoming crowded conditions in the jail. Georgia finds road work a successful means of employing practically all her county prisoners.

The movement for road work for short-term prisoners given impetus by the National Committee on Prisons is extending from county to county. Soon the old idleness and degradation of the county jail will have given place to health work on the roads, with wage which will keep many a family off the charity list.

Lessons from the War to Auto Engineers

"Radiators are proving to be the weak spots." This is one of the lessons in respect to motor equipment requirements, as taught by the European war, according to Major Francis Lawton of the Commissary Department of the East, United States Army.

Major Lawton directed attention to the disadvantage of radiation of the Commissary Department of the East, United States Society of Automobile Engineers, on the transportation lessons of the great war in relation to the problem of preparedness in this country. He said that modern warfare has supplied, for the first time, the experience upon which knowledge of the needs for the right kind of service can be based.

Ten observations relating to type, capacities and equipment in motor transportation for military purposes were cited by Major Lawton. Of the ten, the only one in which mechanical difficulties was involved singled out the radiator as the weak spot of any motor squadron.

This condition is further emphasized by information given by a correspondent of a news service, writing from the scene of the American punitive expedition's activities in Mexico. He explains that the efficiency of motor transports has been hindered by their consumption of large quantities of water for cooling. Water along the march has been very scarce, and with the trucks demanding their portion, that for men and horses has necessarily been decreased much below normal.

The impracticability of water-consuming radiators in military motor equipment adds interest to direct air cooling. It is predicted that the adaptability of direct air cooling to rigorous service will finally be recognized as the solution of drawbacks incident to the use of radiators.

Reducing the High Cost of Tire Changing

The annual tire bill paid by American motorists is $200,000,000, as revealed by figures on the combined sales of all tire companies in 1915.

Of that amount $100,000,000 could be saved the consumer, according to statistics of a prominent technical authority who last year received thousands of reports from owners of cars of all makes.

The car of ideal service was determined by selecting the make which registered the highest average mileage per set of tires. The result of this classification matched consistently with the national average published by the manufacturer of the car established as the standard—9,360 miles per set of tires. The mileage of all the other makes of cars averaged 4,750 miles per set, less than half the basic mileage.

These figures go to support the statement by George Horace Lorimer, editor of the Saturday Evening Post, in commenting editorially on the rising cost of motor car operation. "We are banking a great deal more on the engineer than on the statesman," Mr. Lorimer says in discussing possible solutions of the problem.

Certainly much depends on the automobile engineer, for if one car gives twice the mileage on one set of tires as the average for all other makes of automobiles, the possibilities for economy are apparent.

Doubling the average to equal the 9,630 mile standard would mean a closer following by engineers of the fundamentals responsible for long tire service. The tire question demands engineering consideration of the relation of the car to the tires. That the tires must be made a part of the car design is a truth demonstrated by the manufacturer of the car earning the distinction of establishing the comparative basis in the investigation referred to.

The record of 7,630 miles shows that tires can be relieved of much of the strain which they are commonly required to stand. Lightening the weight the tires must carry, making them big enough for their work, and flexible, yielding construction that softens the blows absorbed by the tires are steps in the right direction. Such treatment by one manufacturer, in particular, has already brought about longer tire life through the practical elimination of blowouts, which most generally occur before a tire has a chance to wear out.

The upward course in the cost of rubber calls for the same attention that the car owning public is giving the gasoline question. Saving tires is a possibility on a par with saving gasoline.

No State Barriers for Autos

Washington, D. C., June 1—With Federal road money legislation disposed of, and the Senate and House measures in the hands of the conferees, the American Automobile Association will now devote itself in an effort to secure the passage of the Adamson bill before the conclusion of the present Congress.

Nearly three million users of automobiles have an interest in the Adamson open-door policy, which briefly gives the self-propelled vehicle the same interstate right as are now possessed by horse-drawn wagons and carriages; in fact it would make country-wide the present New York State reciprocity. New York offers to the motor-car owners of other States reciprocity for whatever period that State will give to a New York

State owner, which means one day or the entire 365 days of the year.

Representative W. C. Adamson, who is the father of the open door measure, is the chairman of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and when he introduced his bill a year ago it was without consultation with any organization. The Georgia Congressman simply put forward his idea as a commonsense solution of the diversified and conflicting periods of reciprocity among the States, in addition to a belief that it was discrimination to forbid the self-propelled vehicle to exercise the same rights on the road possessed by muscle-drawn vehicles.

While it would appear a difficult matter to get such an important piece of legislation passed at the present time in a Congress which is crowded with the necessity of doing many things, the A. A. A. has secured such a generous promise of support from so many National legislators that it is not improbable that there would be a minimum of discussion and a quick agreement that the automobile was now entitled to the freedom of the highways in interstate passenger and freight transportation.

Enormous Quantity of Motor Trucks Required by the Army

A force of 500,000 men requires more than 8,000 trucks, on the basis of a one-and-a-half ton capacity, is the statement of Major Francis Lawton of the Commissary Department of the East, U. S. A., who bases his assertion on a study of motor equipment requirements of the armies in the European war. Major Lawton recently spoke before the Pennsylvania Section of the Society of Automobile Engineers on the transportation lessons of the European war in relation to the problems of preparedness in this country.

The lesson of Europe shows, he said, that rapidly moving troops must rely on motor trucks. The tactical unit of an army, a division, consisting of 22,000 men, required 175,000 pounds of food a day, and a great task of organization was necessary in order to be prepared to handle the problem of transportation in this country.

Comparing the truck with animal transportation, Major Lawton said:

With animals the average march is eighteen miles per day, and with a total distance of seventy-five miles from the base, 780 wagons would be required. With motor trucks of about two tons capacity the work could be done with 120 vehicles. With 240 trucks a division could operate 150 miles from its base. A division operating forty miles from its base would require thirty trucks.

Lessons from the present war in Europe teach us the following facts:

1. Ordinary commercial trucks are best, the special body types not necessary.
2. Light chassis for ambulance work are best.
3. Best all-round car, 1½ tons.
4. Heavy armored cars have proved satisfactory.
5. Motor cycles on a grand scale are unsatisfactory.
6. Passenger cars make good ambulances, but the body should be arranged so that the driver is over the engine and the wounded lie between the axles.
7. Radiators are proving to be the weak spots.
8. The steel plate wheel is satisfactory.
9. Electric starting is satisfactory.
10. Electric headlights should be mounted on universal joints.

United States Government favors the 1½ ton truck on account of its ability to traverse the ordinary bridges without breaking them down. This, of course, only refers to the divisional trains, as larger trucks can be used satisfactorily on the main roads. To attempt to use trucks of 3 ton and over spells disaster.

A force of 500,000 men requires over 8,000 trucks of 1½ ton capacity, and the problem is where and how to get these trucks. They must be organized into units of the same make if they are to be effective.

Useful Hints

Stone Bruises—When the tire has hit a stone with considerable force, especially if the tire is not fully inflated, the inner surface of the tire will show injury to the fabric when the rubber on the tread has no mark of the injury. Such an injury should be repaired by putting a fabric patch over the injured place, and then inserting an inner protector all around the casing. To Bend Small Tubing—Pour melted resin in the tube, and when in the tube may be bent without kinking. The Spark and the Starter—It is just as important to retard the spark when using a starter as when hand cranking an engine.

New Truck Company in Local Field

The commercial motor vehicle trade has attracted another big company into the local field. The Rivers-Andrews Company is the latest organization to locate in San Francisco. With a complete line of Broadway trucks, the new organization is planning to distribute motors for commercial purposes all over the western territory.

The new line of commercial trucks is featured in the light types, including the 3/4 to the 2-ton machines. W. J. Andrews, manager of the company, is well known in the local field, having been associated with some of the largest concerns in this city for several years. He is a pioneer in the motor truck industry.

The new concern has established headquarters on Second street, where it will carry a large line of machines and maintain a service station.

"The motor truck industry is just in its infancy," said Andrews recently. "The demand for all types of commercial vehicles is growing every year, and within a short time the manufacture and sale of these machines will be the most important factor in the automobile industry

"During the last three years the motor truck for commercial service has invaded every line of business. They are competing with railroads, street cars and horse-drawn vehicles in every part of the world, and in every case the motor vehicle is proving equal to every kind of service and competition.

"There is a particular necessity for motor trucks in this city. The hills and the great amount of territory necessary for merchants to cover in distributing their merchandise makes the use of motor vehicles a necessity. We expect to develop the Western market for motor trucks, and will place agents throughout all of the Pacific Coast territory."

World's Record Broken

The world's record for the fastest two miles ever traveled by an amateur driver was broken by Dr. R. Robinson Duff, in the Western Inter-Club Auto Race at the Chicago Speedway on May 21, 1916.

Dr. Duff, who drove his Rayfield-equipped stock Mercer in the thirty-mile amateur contest, turned the two-mile course in 1:16 flat, or at a speed of 94 miles per hour.

The result of this remarkable performance has been officially authenticated, and stands as the world's amateur record.

Mr. Charles L. Rayfield, the well known engineer and designer of the Rayfield Carburetor, shared the glory with his friend, Dr. Duff, owner of the car, by acting as his mechanic and advisor in this important event.

FASHION'S FADS AND FRILLS

Quite as important as the June bride is the June graduate. She must be just as daintily dressed in misty white, and her future is equally as promising.

It is no longer considered the proper thing for the graduate to be elaborately dressed in silk or satin; many of the daintiest frocks are fashioned by the graduate herself, from the sheer voiles, organdies, nets, or from the dainty flouncings of lace or embroidery. The high schools favor the idea of the graduate fashioning her own dress; some go as far as to suggest the material and the cut for the entire class. Perhaps this does not appeal to the average girl, with her ideas of individuality, but the notion of making her own frock should appeal to her, for this very reason, that she may add little distinctive touches which bring out her own personality.

Commencement Frock of Voile

Another Dainty Model for the Graduate

Simplicity in Cut and Material.

The very simplest, most youthful models are chosen for the June graduate. They are usually of organdy, or one of the sheer cottons, very sparingly and simply trimmed. Crepe de Chine or one of the very soft taffetas or satins may also be used, if preferred, but the cottons are more in vogue and daintier.

Net, which is such a general favorite for the typical summer dress, is quite as well liked for the graduation dress and proves extremely practical. White cotton net, combined with taffeta, voile, or organdy, fashions the daintiest of graduation frocks; one which may be worn later for summer afternoons, or the dance.

Skirts are short, sleeves range from the short puff, so charmingly in keeping with bouffant skirts of the moment, to the three-quarter or full length sleeve of organdy, net, Georgette or chiffon. Round necks are particularly modish, although the square neck and the V are also liked. If one wishes to be at the height of the mode, the graduation frock must boast a hooped petticoat. These are so softly boned and so unobtrusive that the frock loses none of its simplicity but gains in grace.

Shoes, Gloves and a Fan.

White kid pumps and white silk stockings are dainty and carry out the "all white" notion; black patent or kid pumps and black stockings, however, are in quite as good form. White silk gloves, if any gloves are worn, are better than kid, being cooler. A small white fan may be carried, both for use and ornament, for fans are extremely dainty this summer. Feathers are being used in the new fans. There are small ostrich feather fans and plain cock feather fans in white and colors. The small spangled silk fan is still favored. Any of these make most acceptable gifts for the graduate. Although the plainer the hair is dressed the better, a bit of tulle or a single comb may be worn, and Colonial silver or rhinestone buckles may adorn the pumps. Very little jewelry, if any, is permissible; a small brooch or a tiny Lavalliere is quite enough.

Summer Frocks of Organdy.

Organdy is one of the most generally favored of materials for the summer frock, whether for graduation, garden parties, or summer dances. It comes in all the delicate pastel colorings now favored, and is also patterned with dainty, conventionalized designs, on white and colored grounds.

The plain and figured voiles are effective also, and there are many attractive combinations of voile and taffeta, organdy and taffeta, net and organdy and the like.

It is considered most Frenchy to combine organdy and taffeta, or net and taffeta. This is usually done in a frock which one has no idea of sending to the laundry, although there are at the moment taffetas and satins which wash very well.

The first frock illustrated here is a jumper model adapted from one of Poiret's designs. It is developed in net and taffeta and is a charmingly simple model for the girl who wishes to make her own frock for commencement.

In the second design is a particularly effective frock of plain and figured voile. The figured material is white with a white mercerized ring. The quaint neck line, puffed sleeves and full skirt, make it a very pleasing and youthful frock, suitable for graduation exercises or summer parties.

The Garden Party Hat.

It will do no harm to tell of a hat or two, which, worn with the graduation frock after that wonderful day, will complete a most effective garden party, or summer afternoon costume. There are large hats of organdy in the dainty colorings, just the thing for the organdy frock; large black and colored wenchows, stenciled with some quaintly conceived and colored figure, flower or bird; wide brimmed leghorns, with a flower or two on their drooping brims; and many others, for the large hat is again modish. These stenciled hats offer alluring possibilities to the girl who paints or understands the mixing of colors.

INSURANCE

A decision that greatly lessens the liability of cities in actions for damages due to negligence of city officials was rendered by the Supreme Court recently. The opinion finds that municipal corporations act in a double character in the performance of their functions, one being in a governmental character, in which they are not liable for the negligence of their officials, and the other in a private character, as when they rent out a hall. In the latter case they are liable.

A verdict for the defendant insurance company was returned by the jury in the case of H. L. Smith against the Liverpool & London & Globe, on May 26th, at Merced, Cal. The plaintiff sued to recover $10,806 from the insurance company on account of costs and fire loss due to the destruction by fire of a store on April 22, 1912. The defense fought the suit by alleging incendiarism, and introduced evidence purposed to prove that point.

—“Woman Takes Poison, Promptly Revised,” says a newspaper headline. Sort of a revised edition.

—Many a presidential boom has died a-borning in the past week, with its author its only mourner.

—“Irish Problem Near Settlement,” says a newspaper headline. That head-writer doesn't know the Irish.

—The King of Greece seems willing to let anybody not only play in either his front or back yard, but to fight there.

—If many more of the fellows are arrested on the complaints of fifteen year old girls, they will be demanding birth affidavits.

—It seems a pity to have wasted all the noise, energy and oratory that have been expended at Chicago when Wilson is to win, anyway.

—While the Germans and English each are claiming a victory in the North Sea battle, Death, the real victor, is laughing at both of them.

—Bryan is writing of how conventions are conducted. From the viewpoint of his personal ambition, some of them have been seriously misconducted.

—Japanese marchioness, on quitting the Fairmont Hotel, left $500 in tips. The attaches are hoping that others of the millionaire class will take a tip from her action.

—Eighteen inning baseball game with a one to naught score played here last Sunday! You can take your choice between ascribing it to good pitching or poor hitting.

—The prices charged by the Chicago hotels for the past few days makes San Francisco's record for every day rates during the Exposition all the more conspicuous and creditable.

—San Jose judge has awarded $17,000 to a man who was knocked down and badly injured by a speeding automobile. It would take only a few such judgments to put the brakes on the speeders.

—The State thought it would be cheaper to build Pier 46 of wood—then along came a fire and wiped out the $150,000 structure, painfully proving that present economy means future expense.

—Woman up in the country is raising two young bald eagles, and cannot find a diet that suits the birds of freedom. Try a few of Roosevelt's blood and thunder campaign speeches on them.

—Sixty-five year old Alameda woman complains that her thirty-four year old husband plays practical jokes on her. It would seem, on reflection, that he started the series of jests by marrying her.

—Blindness among soldiers and officers is one of the greatest tragedies of the war, declares a British writer. And the war was brought on by the blindness of a lot of wool-headed rulers and diplomats.

—It is decidedly a reversal of form to have a Republican convention as noisy as a Donnybrook Fair, with prospects of the Democratic gathering being as peaceful and harmonious as a Chautauqua meeting.

—The preparedness wave that is sweeping over the country is partly patriotism and largely hysteria. But if it came to the scratch, the American people could be depended upon to eliminate the hysteria in short order.

—Crank throws stones through windows of William K. Vanderbilt's house in New York, mistaking it for John D. Rockefeller's residence. Well, he has the consolation that he pestered one of the hated rich, anyway.

—News comes from Washington that Congress is to pass a law which will stop betting on horse races. We move to amend the statement—Congress is to pass a law that will attempt to put a stop to betting on horse races.

—The fire that took Pier 46 last week is referred to by the Chronicle as the greatest fire in the history of San Francisco's water front. Yet there are those with long and tenacious memories who remember a bigger one on an April day ten years ago.

—The postoffice department has announced that the Postal Guide, hitherto sold to business men for $3.50, will now be sold for thirty and forty cents. It would be interesting to know the disposition of the immense profit that was made before the reduction.

—The city owns between seventy and eighty touring cars and roadsters for the use of its officials, and their repairs cost $1,000 a month. Of course it is apparent to any intelligent person that the city needs this flock of automobiles far more than it does school houses and equipment.

—San Jose judge has decreed that a man flirt convicted in his court shall not appear on the streets without his wife, who, under the court's decree, will have to accompany her husband to and from his work. To the judicial mind this may seem all right—but to our unlegal intelligence it appears that it is the wife who has been sentenced.

—Some wise rogue, pretending to be a special and confidential agent of President Wilson, has been traveling through South America, living on the fat of the land; but he dallied too long with the champagne cup, and gave himself away. Another proof that one cannot monkey with liquor and make a success of life.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

THE LIQUOR QUESTION AND THE CONVENTIONS.

The liquor men of the country are apparently satisfied that neither of the two big national conventions will have the hardihood to tackle the liquor question, this year, and that that grave question will not come upon the carpet till the women feel that their voting strength is strong enough to force that issue into a party platform. Bryan recently declared that neither convention dared tackle the liquor question for fear of splitting the party, and he forecasted that party leaders would be forced to meet that issue at an early day in spite of themselves. Eighteen States are now in the prohibition column, and ten of them are Democratic. Perhaps he figures on this showing as an entering wedge. However, any influence he may exercise this year will be indirect, as he has declined an alternate's seat at the Democratic convention, and will be there simply as a newspaper representative. But Bryan and the Prohibitionists are all the while digging their trenches deeper and extending them into new States in preparation for the assault that he has intimated "will come later," probably in 1920. The liquor interests are fully alive to the situation, and are paralleling all the trenches of the "drys," and these endeavors extend into legislative and congressional halls, as was illustrated recently in Congress in the Porto Rico Citizenship bill before the House of Representatives on an amendment to give suffrage to the women on the island. The bill passed the committee of the whole, but on the report to the House the amendment for suffrage was stricken out. This illustrates the hard and bitter contest underway and the determination of the "wets" to balk the efforts of suffrage for recognition as long as possible. Only on such lines will they be able to protect their interests.

ON THE HEELS OF TAX DODGERS.

The government is naturally meeting with some rather vexatious troubles in collecting the personal income tax. Some corporations and individuals find it so difficult in running down and getting a Nelson lock on a dollar that they dislike turning over the tail feathers of the eagle to the treasury at Washington in the form of a tax or anything else. Accordingly frauds and evasions on the list of last year aggregated $8,380,185. Scouts of the treasury department are hot and pussey-footed on the trail of the delinquents. A glance at the list of these delinquents show that corporations are more obsessed than individuals in dodging payment by almost two to one, according to the reports of the sleuths. The treasury agents are ingenious diggers, and they have penetrated a failing that is indigenous with most corporations; few of the latter understand the intricate details of their gross incomes. The method of the shirkers is to pad expense items which they deduct from gross receipts to determine net income. Most of them understand their gross incomes. They add tens of thousands of dollars to their expense account, but through "unpreparedness" fail to cover up the real returns, and a ready clue is thus left open for the keen-eyed, sapient government sleuth. The force is now checking up all the tax lists of last year, and it is expected that practically all the dodgers will be rounded up—and rigorously assessed. The receipts of this year will reach approximately $110,000,000, and of this amount about $11,000,000 will be carried over to the next fiscal year for collection, representing 10 per cent of this year's tax of $113,000,000. With the fat gatherings on war contracts made in the East this year, the total collections should show an encouraging advance, next year. Happy the capitalist who can pay the tax with a smile.

THE JIGGER IN THE WAR GAME

In diplomatic crises of governments, expediency is the prevailing policy of the ruling class, especially in imperial governments. Those people in this country who believe that the proletariat of Germany will develop an intense dislike against Americans, because of the present stand taken by the Washington administration against the policy of the Teuton submarine warfare, are in error. History is dead against them. Germany stands for imperialism, and the ruling family at Berlin has educated its subjects in the several German States into taking orders from the throne. Those orders are dutifully accepted by the large majority of the population. Austria and Russia are in somewhat like position. This machine team-work has transformed the German nation into the present perfect military government machine that up to the present time has been able to accomplish such surprising results against the nations not so well organized and prepared. Europe is rightly regarded as an armed camp, and when an explosion occurs, as at present, all treaties, agreements and secret contracts are flung to the winds by the nation or nations determined to win at any cost. Such has been the policy of all military nations and leaders from Cyrus down to Napoleon. History is full of such results that are amazing and confusing from the American viewpoint. Take only a few modern instances: In the last great war, Russia and Japan were at each other's throats; now they are fighting side by side, and the rancor of a few years ago has been transmuted into brotherly love. England then sided with Japan, and is now own brother in arms to the mujik. Prussia whaled Austria in 1866, and now Austria is sacrificing everything to make the Kaiser's dream of a European-Asiatic Germanic empire come true. And the proletariat, the common people, trail right along and fight, and think whatever their rulers decree. History is packed with such instances, and the German nation can be relied on to follow the Kaiser's orders as to cultivating friendship with America. Unless he wins, he will sorely need her friendship.

—Mayor Rolph has succeeded finally in saving Golden Gate Park, San Francisco's most attractive outdoor feature, from being slashed and defaced by a crossing street car line. The majority of the citizens were against such defacement, so was the united Park Commission, the law and the prophets. For once, sound reason prevailed in the Board of Supervisors, but it was by the close vote of 10 to 8, indicating on what thin ice reason prevailed. The usual concession was given the losers by supplying a 'bus line across the park, which will connect through transfers with the municipal electric car lines. Mayor Rolph is to be congratulated on winning the contest.

—In New York the fat is sputtering viciously in the fire under the investigation started by Mayor Mitchel to probe into the scandals surrounding the charity institution of the metropolis. Some $5,000,000 are distributed annually among these humane institutions handled by Catholics, Protestants and Jews, and there's the devil to pay over the scandalous way in which many of the 22,000 children are treated. The filthy mess was stirred up by a committee of three, one from each of the religious bodies named. To say that they discovered things were rotten is to put it mildly, as the vermin covered and wretched bodies of the sickly waifs attested. Mayor Mitchel, a Catholic, ripped things wide open, and thereby drew the wrath of a wing of his co-religionists, who attacked him hotly in print and pulpit. Out of this acrimony came the present "telephone tapping" scandal, and the accusation that certain religionists were striving to interfere with government. Behind it all is that grim and detestable spectre of a class of vampires who batten on the lives of little children entrusted to their care, miserly creatures stealing the dollars apportioned by the city for their sustenance, greedily playing politics against human lives.

—Isn't it about time that some one of the sapient city fathers should hitch up a kink in his gray matter and reconsider the extension of the municipal railways in the face of the fact that the present inroads already made by the jitneys into the railroad fares of the State have reached $3,000,000 per year, and give every evidence of continued active climbing. The United Railways feel the strain, as a business proposition, but the supervisors, with the power of taxation at hand and without dread of taxpayers or Fate, survey the outlook with serenity, as spending public money is the easiest way to bridge time. Under present conditions, it is unlikely that if they build two more tracks out Market street from Twin Peaks to Third street the new unit can be made to pay in competition with the jitneys. The overhead expense will smother any chance profits in the contest. The jitneys can run all around a street car in following and picking up traffic. The supervisors can chase around the same route, spending the people's money in "improvements," but the showing only evokes a horse laugh from the equines. All the people are not asses, even if most of them did vote with the majority in the last election.

—The ruling political force wins as usual, and Louis D. Brandeis takes his seat on the bench of the U. S. Supreme Court by a strict party vote, an unusual election and establishing a precedent of fine import. The Republicans, detesting his radicalism, tried to claw his reputation into shreds during the investigation before the Senate Committee. But his Democratic friends managed to draw him safely through that ordeal and saved his bacon. Taft, Root, Choate and other high Republican influences were unable to unseat him. Wilson was his Gibraltar. His elevation is a significant sign of the times; that is why the Republicans fought his appointment so vigorously and persistently. In both camps, the radicals are in the saddle; whereof, Louis B. may thank his potent star. As the first Jew admitted to that honor, he rounds out a movement that is untiring in this country.

—Dodge into your storm cellars and bank safe the doors. Now comes the pestiferous quadrennial deluge of political slush and drivel in the daily yellow press fashioned "by our special staff of great writers and statesmen" misrepresenting in hysterical phrases the doings of the several national conventions. This is the bedraggled opportunity of the yellow sheets of the country to flop all kinds of hysterical loop-doodals in mental gymnastics, and somersault exhausted into the shrinking dumps. God send that the wretched spot prove their monument.

—Ted—What do you do when a man tries to kiss you?
Marjorie—Find out for yourself.—Life.

Blighting Our Fair Land

By ARTHUR H. DUTTON.

Our beautiful State of California, "the land of sunshine, fruit and flowers," the land of scenic beauty, of contentment, happiness, music and laughter, is threatened with a horrid blight.

The Puritanic prohibitionists are swooping down upon us like wolves upon the fold. Gone will be our carnivals, our fiestas, our gay cafe life, our merry mask balls, when the "drys" once have fastened their fangs in our life.

Throughout the world, California has ever been associated with peace and plenty, with excellent food, with delicious wines, with all that makes life worth living. What man, what woman has ever left California with other than the pleasantest recollections? Mild winters, cool summers, beautiful mountains, fair valleys, fertile fields, gorgeous forests, cascades, surf rolling on white beaches, and a climate unsurpassed, even if equaled, anywhere in the world; strong men and beautiful women—these are some of the characteristics of California, the Golden State.

Hospitality, consideration for others, liberality of both hand and thought, fondness for gayety and happiness, indomitable will and supreme courage in time of disaster—these are some of the Californian traits of character. "Live and let live" is the California motto.

Then, in the sunshine of our happy life, a cloud appears in the sky, ominous and growing. It is the centuries-old cloud of the blue-law Puritan, who sees nothing but wickedness in every human enjoyment. In his mind, everything pleasurable must necessarily be wicked. In the midst of our life of contentment, liberty and joy comes the blighting hand of the Puritan, who would shackle us, restrict us in everything, regulate our everyday personal actions to accord with his own anachronistic ideas.

Give the prohibitionist his way, and gone would be the California of old. We would have a new land, a new environment, a new atmosphere. Beautiful, happy California would be another Kansas.

Give the prohibitionist his way, and joy would be legendary, laughter but a memory.

PASSING OF LOUIS ROESCH.

Louis Roesch, president of Louis Roesch & Co., lithographers and engravers, passed away this week at his city residence after a two-days' illness caused by heart failure. He was born in Stuttgart, Germany, 1856, and came to this country forty-five years ago. A few years later he launched the business which brought him unusual success. Like his fellow countrymen, he devoted dutifully a large part of his time to helping his fellows. He was a director of the German Old People's Home, a member of the German General Benevolent Society, the Turn Verein, a Mason of high standing, and many other organizations. He is survived by a son, Louis Roesch, Jr., who succeeds his father in business. His wife and his daughter, Miss Freda Roesch, died within the past two years.

—True to their instincts, the soldierettes at the Presidio are dividing naturally into the "society set," the "stenographers set," the "shop girl set," the "colleges," the "cooks and waitress" and the like—a line of "Preparedness" in which they are all thoroughly acquainted. But if war ever comes and they become "mixed" in the confusion, Heaven help the Colonelette.

Divorce and Epigrams.

Country life is now in full tilt, and practically all of the people who own town as well as country homes have closed up their city houses. Last year the Exposition festivities kept the blinds up in the town houses, and many householders with plethoric purses kept two establishments going last summer. Which recalls the retort courteous passed by an acrimonious wife to her erring spouse at a dinner party given last July. He was complaining about the altitudinous cost of living, holding forth eloquently on the expense of keeping up two places.

"Two places," cooed wife, in sickening sweet accents; "the rest of the world adds up your life differently, and the sum is at least three."

Which remark, while true, did not gain overmuch sympathy for the wife, for that kind of arithmetic is supposed to be done in the long, still watches of privacy.

Incidentally, rumor insists that the author of this well known remark is threatening to divorce her husband, and it is believed that her religious scruples against divorce will no longer prevent her from taking her marital troubles into court.

Mrs. Marye Learns Bridge.

The Maryes are comfortably settled in their Burlingame home, which they very wisely did not give up when Mr. Marye accepted the post of Ambassador to Russia, for the strain of diplomatic service and the northern winters proved too much of a tax on his health, and he was forced to resign his post to make amends to his failing constitution. They had an opportunity to dispose of their house to great advantage, but decided against it, and now they are rejoicing, for Mr. Marye will be out here in a few weeks, and will join his family at their country home, where he will relax and regain his health. The Maryes will bring to the social life of Burlingame a locker full of interesting experiences in Russia, for they made for themselves a very unusual place in Petrograd and in the royal family, Mrs. Marye being one of the few women of the diplomatic service who was admitted to anything more than the formalities of the imperial household. The Czarina summoned her for many private audiences when they enjoyed intimate little discussions of the every-dayness sort of thing. So she has many interesting contributions to make to the summer conversation.

Speaking of conversation at its best, when the Maryes were out here during the Exposition, some one, I have forgotten just who it was, gave them a dinner party, and after dinner the guests played bridge. Mrs. Marye drew Joe Redding for her partner at the table where she played. The bidding began.

"One heart," announced the dealer.

"A spadudilum," jauntily chirped Joe.

"I beg pardon," said Mrs. Marye, "but you know I've been away so long, and the bidding and signals and all that sort of thing so constantly change that I am rusty—I don't even know what you mean by a 'spadudilum!'"

"A spadudilum," gravely answered Joseph Redding, "is a brunette with a rural past," and Mrs. Marye promptly raised him on spades when her turn came.

Templeton Crocker and Politics.

Templeton Crocker is one of those who could not resist the temptation of the political drama at Chicago, so instead of going to Honolulu as he had planned, he went on to the Windy City, which is having the regulation gusts of oratory that breeze along every four years when the Republican delegates get together to sing and shout their way through the blowhardy days that will be duplicated when the Democrats foregather at St. Louis.

Templeton Crocker is a young man of many millions and the highly intensified and diversified political experience which comes only to those who have been on the "inside" of a political game as it is played in a town like Hillsborough. I believe that he served his home town on the city council, or something of the sort that meets once a year in a place like Hillsborough. It was around the time that that other "favorite son" decided to do his civic duty, and the residents of that neck of the woods had the honor of being represented by Walter Hobart as Chief of Police, or deputy sheriff, or town constable, or whatever it is that they call a man when they let him wear a nice, shiny tin star under his coat.

Of course, with a political background of this sort (and with his millions), Templeton Crocker should not have experienced any trouble in getting a card to the spectators' gallery in the convention hall, where the flapping orators help the electric fans to create a breeze. But it is said that Crocker found that there were about fifty thousand other bidders willing to pay premiums for those cherished cards of admission to the great American circus, and for a time Templeton despaired of getting his passports, and he envied mightily his uncle, Will Crocker, who went on as a regularly elected delegate, with all official right to the business of nominating a President.

However, young Crocker refused to be daunted by the difficulties of the situation, and with that indomitable will which is the dominant strain in the clan of Crocker, that quality which refuses to beat its wings around in a nebulous void, managing somehow to fly straight to the nest where the golden eggs are hidden, he secured the coveted admission to the big show, and beat any number of equally energetic citizens the country over who cherished the same desire. In fact, such great acumen, strategic ability, influence, or whatnot, does it take to get in that one wonders why a city like San Francisco should not demand that Templeton Crocker turn this remarkable quality to civic account.

The Macomber Hospitality.

The Macomers plan to entertain more on their ranch at Hollister than at their home in Burlingame, and those who are fortunate enough to be included on their week-end visiting list are looking forward with more than the interest which most invitations beget for ranch diversions glorified by unlimited expenditure present stimulating possibilities that the imagination fed on limited income can scarcely compass.

For example, there is talk of staging a moving picture down there some time with professional and society people taking part in the production—the kind of production that includes a cattle round-up and all the stir and thrill and action which a manager can conjure up for a rattling good screen picture.

Society all over America is going in for moving pictures, and not to have one's own camera man will, among the multis, soon be as rare as not to have one's own chauffeur. A number of people out here have equipments to show pictures, and frequently arrangements are made to take motion pictures of some special stunt—as, for example, the beagle hunt pictures which were taken one Sunday morning and shown the next at the hunt breakfast which the Andrew Welchs gave.

But in the East there are any number of bemillioned country homes where a moving picture outfit, complete as to operator and stage director, are part of the summer equipment, and the guests amuse themselves writing scenarios which they act and throw on the screen for the amusement of the fashionable contingent in the neighborhood. The Vincent Astors have gone in for that sort of thing at Newport, and San Franciscans who have been fortunate enough to be included in one of these stunts say it is a real thrill.

Apropos of the Macomers and the possibility of their doing something of this sort at their ranch this summer, one is reminded of the novelty they presented to their guests during the Exposition period, when time after time they paid "Mme. Ellis," the "psychic mystery," and her partner to come down to Burlingame after the midnight crowd at the Exposition had left the zone, and in close private seance in the early morning hours their guests tried to figure out the "system" by which this pair baffled the throngs at the Exposition.

Charles M. Schwab, the Steel King, remarked to his guest at dinner at the Techau Tavern: "Here is where one really sees the spirit of San Francisco." At the Tavern one enjoys the true life and color of the town. The hurry-up-luncheon for business men at the noon hour remains supreme. At the dinner one enjoys perfect service, delectable menu and the smartest sort of entertainment, pretty girls and artistic numbers; dancing begins at 7 o'clock. The after-theatre throngs continue to make Techau Tavern a headquarters, while the Dansant Club, with the special table d'hote dinner and dancing and entertainment on Sunday evenings, adds further charm and novelty. Something interesting occurring at the Tavern at all times.

The passing show at the Hotel St. Francis this week includes the stars of the theatrical world and the satellites of society. Among them are nine noted hotel managers; Henry Evans, president of the Continental Fire Insurance Company and the Fidelity-Phoenix Fire Insurance Company; Count del Buena Esperanza, the Spanish judicial head of the New Hebrides Islands; Edwin W. Mills and J. F. Manning of Seoul, who operate the mines of a large British Syndicate that works in South Africa and South America, as well as China and Korea; George Askvig, of Moss, Norway, who has made enormous purchases of grain for Europe; Henry F. Brizard, who came from the north for his marriage with Miss Kate Bennett; Mrs. M. S. Hellman, of the famous banking family, who is here with Mrs. A. Harris; Madame Marie Rappold, the famous songstress; Miss Emily Stevens, leading lady at the Cort.

Miss Eleanor Uhl was hostess at a tea party at the Hotel Oakland Wednesday, May 31st. Her guests were Mrs. A. Uhl and Misses Elva and Juanita Ghirardelli, Katheryn Armstrong, Katheryn Maxwell, Elsie Bishop, Mary Adams and Mignon Wilson.

Mrs. Alexander Pantages was hostess Saturday, June 3d, to a number of friends at a luncheon in the Hotel Oakland. The decorations were pink and white roses, and those who enjoyed Mrs. Pantages' hospitality were Mrs. Herrick, Miss Galindo, Mrs. Wright, Miss Bill, Mrs. Flitter, Mrs. Church, Miss Stolp, Mrs. Smith, Mrs. Daniels, Little Carmen Pantages and Little Felixe, Miss Armstrong and Mrs. Armstrong.

Among the prominent arrivals at the Hotel Oakland are Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Bastian of Los Angeles; Mr. Chas. F. Dencklan of Chicago; Mrs. Cora S. Stowell of Coronado; Mr. W. Y. Loanza and family of San Anselmo; Dr. J. A. Simpson and family of the U. S. Navy.

Bernard C. Carroll, of the Pacific States Telephone and Telegraph Company of this city, and a well known figure throughout the country in telephone and telegraph circles, and Mrs. M. A. Viele, formerly of Alameda, were married in Oklahoma City this week. Mrs. Carroll before her marriage was Miss Dora Kirk, daughter of Mrs. Thomas J. Kirk, of 1737 Santa Clara avenue, Alameda. Her father was the late Thomas J. Kirk, at one time State Superintendent of Public Instruction. The ceremony was performed in the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. W. R. Molinard. Mr. Carroll and his wife will tour the East, visiting New York, Philadelphia, Washington and Minneapolis. They will attend the commencement exercises of Bowdoin College, the alma mater of Carroll. The happy couple will return to the Pacific Coast by way of the Canadian Pacific, and will temporarily reside with Mrs. Kirk in Alameda.

LOCAL NATIONAL SECURITY LEAGUE ORGANIZED.

Great enthusiasm prevailed this week in the organization of the National Security League, the object of which is preparedness against war and not for war. Already the membership is reaching into the hundreds, thus advancing it among the leaders of the two hundred branches already instituted in this country. The movement is a thriving one. The object is to wage a campaign of education emphasizing the importance of two things, legislation tending to correct present wasteful military appropriations and the adoption of plans for national defense army and navy experts. The league believes that the advice of military experts is safer than spasmodic plans of politicians. The local branch organized this week with the following board of officers: President, John A. Briton; vice-presidents, Bernard Faymonville, J. F. Clay, Selah Chamberlain, R. M. Hotaling, John D. McKee; treasurer, Albert E. Castle; secretary, Howard C. Rowley; assistant secretary, L. M. Hotchkiss; executive committee, Paul M. Nippert, chairman; Robert Newton Lynch, Bernard Bienerfeld, E. H. Williams, H. C. Rowley, A. E. Castle, J. F. Clay, W. H. Hammer, C. C. McDougall, A. J. De Lmare, L. M. Hotchkiss, J. C. Costello, H. O. Stevens and J. S. Tobin.

HOCKEY ON THE ICE.

Society is still engrossed in ice skating and the attendant activity of hockey. A ladies' hockey club is now mooted, with Miss Anna Peters, Mrs. Andrew Welch, Jr., and Mrs. Fred McNear sponsoring the movement. The Tuxedo Park Ladies' Hockey Club was the novelty and the inspiring activity of the metropolitan season of 1915-1916. The Tuxedo women, led by Mrs. Norman Whitehouse, went over to Paris last February, and at the Palais du Glace successfully met the ladies of the Club du Polaire. In the morning hours at the Techau Tavern Ice Palace, M. Desballiets, the noted Parisian skatorial artist and hockeyist has in hand many private parties for instruction in skating and hockey. Last Monday the Messrs. John Gallois, Fred J. Lewis and Frederic Coudert enjoyed an hours' exhilarating sport.

After a conference at the Techau Tavern Ice Palace, between Fred S. Lynch and Sven Philip, representing the Olympic Club, and Fred Burden of the Canadian Club, a referee for next Tuesday night's hockey game between these clubs was agreed upon. President W. F. Humphrey, of the Olympic Club was accepted. He will act as First Referee, with P. C. Muldoon as his assistant. This means a good, clean game, with enough reasonable indulgence in the matter of straight, hard play to keep the great game at an interesting pitch. At the same conference, Dr. G. W. McConnell, chairman of the House Committee, Olympic Club, was agreed upon as umpire for the Winged "O" boys. Ed. M. O'Brien will umpire for the Canadians.

On Tuesday night the players will appear on the ice at sharp 9:00 o'clock. Two twenty-five minute halves will be played with a ten minute rest. As in intercollegiate football, substitutes will be thrown into the play from time to time as either team may choose. Manager A. C. Morisson announces the fact that any seat in the entire house may be had for 50 cents, except boxes and loges. The Olympic Club followers will be apportioned the Eddy street sub-section of the gallery and main balcony, while the Canadian Club rooters will have the section directly opposite. There will be an hour of hockey and three hours of general skating, while the After Theatre Show, 11 to 12 midnight, will be observed as usual.

At this time it looks as if W. E. Judge will play point for the Olympics, with Chandler in goals. Traub hurt himself in the Caledonian Club's games a week ago, and has not been on the ice since. Probably White, Wells or Wood will fill the center of the ice for the Winged "O" Skaters. Certain of right wing is Logenstrutter, a fine skater and elegant stick-handler. He is a big man, and at the University of Minnesota he made both the Varsity ball team and the hockey first string squad. The Olympic Club players will have a big rallying work out at the Ice Palace this evening, 5 to 6 o'clock. Commissioner Fred S. Lynch invites all followers of the Olympic athletic fortunes to look the candidates over.

—Goldsmith—Would you like any name or motto engraved on it, sir? Customer (who had chosen an engagement ring)—Ye-yes-um. "Augustus to Irene." And—ah—look here, don't—ah—cut Irene very deep.—Punch.

PERSONAL ADVENTURES IN THE PAINTED WORLD

The Bunk of the "Tired Business Man"

BY HENRY McDONALD SPENCER

Why did the talcumed magnet at the Columbia fail to attract, at least, with sufficient power to warrant the continuance of the musical comedy season as originally planned?

The show was alright—legs, back, and as much of the bust as the police and fire departments would allow were exposed, the principals clever and agreeable, the jokes surely recognised, the music reminiscent and the plot easily forgotten.

Then why?

It was not the fault of the producers or players; it was the fault of the audience, or rather potential audiences—that remained potential. And so we come by a winding road to that favorite phrase of the journalistic reporters who cover the theatres: "The tired business man."

The phrase became a bromide one month after it was originated in New York some fifteen years ago. It was once new, but it never has been true, i. e., basically valid.

Invented by a New York press agent, the term supplied any man with an alibi when he was caught frankly gloating over the naked glories of the show girls. And we all dearly love to gloat, whether tired or refreshed, eighteen or eighty, drunk or sober; women, too, as a matter of trade rivalry.

The word "business" must mean business in the larger sense, and the business men obviously are of the class that constitutes, for example, the membership of the Bohemian, Pacific Union, University and other clubs of the kind.

Is there any fatigue connected with their labors in business? Not except when you hear them tell it. The tired people are the stenographers, the small clerks, the factory-workers, mechanics, laborers and the like. American genius has gone into business; certainly not into art, letters, politics or science, except in rare instances. And the efficiency of "big business" is appalling to a man whose entire factory equipment consists of one typewriting machine (rebuilt).

Now efficiency simply means: Getting somebody else—or some other agency—to do your work while you draw the pay.

No, indeed. The typical business man believes in having his "mind free for the larger affairs," and turns over the details to subordinates, or at least that is the way he expresses it when he spends a couple of hours in the middle of the day over bridge or dominoes. Friday to Monday for a run into the country to freshen up his mind for another struggle with the rubber stamp with which he signs his name. An occasional afternoon off for golf to rest up from the mental fatigue of remembering the number of spots on the dice. Dancing, dinners, cards and "little trips" occupy many evenings.

In fact, life is just one rest after another.

For this I don't blame him, only for his pharisaism. Why isn't he honest enough to come out and say: "I am smart enough to make a good living for myself and family by working at a maximum of twenty hours per week"? Perhaps he is afraid of his wife.

Well! there is one answer to the question of what has become of the audiences of yesteryear. There are so many more distractions nowadays, that neither men nor women are driven to the theatre for relaxation. Curiously enough, as the country is becoming freed—in certain circles at least—from the Puritanical taint, the theatre suffers, for there are now so many other interesting things to do.

"The Real Thing" at the Alcazar

The Ex-Performer, who sometimes consents to go fifty-fifty with me on the seats provided the paper by the theatre management, said to me when the kiddies came on in "The Real Thing" at the Alcazar: "But I thought 'Where are My Children' was a picture."

I had my come-back in the third act when the youngsters were pajamed for bed: "You are mistaken, this is 'Twilight Sleep.'"

This, however, is only by way of the facetious opening; the play was quite an improvement on last week's offering, and gave Mary Boland a much better opportunity to score in the part of the managing widow. You know—the kind that can manage every one's affairs but her own. Although we are all somewhat strong on that, e. g., how well I can manage the affairs of the theatre, tell the stage director his business and the actors how to act.

I am not strong for kids on the stage, for in my brief career on the other side of the foots we were imbued with a "wholesome" (the "mush" word again) horror of animals and children as performers. The Grayson children in the play, however, acted, i. e., behaved, very nicely, and won the heart of the audience, or at least the lady part of the audience. Thus as on a submarine ship we dispose of the children first, and so to the ladies.

Mary Boland appeared to better advantage than at any time of her season here, and although she was pretty well fed up with the fat lines, nevertheless, aside from the lines themselves, she got the comedy well over. She ought to do these hard, brilliant, woman of the world types rather than cutey parts. For the latter she is too sophisticated both in manner and appearance.

As a foil for the lead, Helene Sullivan was successful, although the Ex-Performer told me that when her company played the piece, the part of Kate Grayson was taken by the leading lady. I must confess that I think the Alcazar stage director showed the better judgment. The "understudy," Olive Wycoff, might have been made a little more dashing and a little less of a honeybunch by Marion Dentler, but then I think the great heart of the American people always responds to the sweet young thing whether there are any residents or not. E-pluribus-unum-long-may-she-wave.

Forrest Stanley was rather eclipsed by Jimmy Gleason, for the latter, as in "Bought and Paid For," "took it away," so far as the men's roles were concerned; although, at that, Stanley did all that was asked of him in the part.

As this is the lovely leading lady's last week, I wish la belle Boland all sorts of luck and that she will soon return.

Mrs. Cisneros Makes a Speech at the Orpheum

First I want to express my personal thanks to Eleonora Cisneros, the grand opera prima donna at the Orpheum this week, for permission to smoke during that part of the performance preceding her act. It seems to be the custom for operatic stars when they "descend" to the two-a-day, to have displayed that hateful sign, "Gentlemen are requested not to, etc." How little of a request it is, is shown by the fact that non-compliance means a tap on the shoulder by the gentlemanly young usher. It is not so much the deprivation—although this is bad enough, but still you manage to stand it in the regular theatre—it is the "side" that you resent. Thanks, Mrs. Eleo, if I may be so familiar.

Mrs. Cisneros has a perfectly true, grand-operatic voice, and what is more, she can act her singing. If she lost her voice she could still get a good job in the Legitimate—if there is any Legitimate. For the big, strong, dominating, woman-sinner parts she is there with bells. However, she has a voice, and plenty of it, and is not afraid of spilling it.

the discovery of gold at Sutter's Mill; the rush of gold seekers from all over the world, by land and sea, and the turbulent times which followed, reaching its climax in the conquest of lawless San Francisco by the mysterious Vigilance Committee, but it is essentially the romantic chronicle of San Francisco's youth. Old Portsmouth Square (the Plaza of 1849), with its historic landmarks, the famous City Hall, the El Dorado gambling palace—the headquarters of the Vigilance Committee, and many other points in and around San Francisco, are reproduced with exact accuracy from old pictures and descriptions. The assassinations of such historic characters as James King of William and Richardson, the execution of Cora and Casey, the Reign of Terror when the "Hounds" and "Sydney Coves" ruled the town, and many other stirring events of the first years of the city figure prominently in the action of "The Argonauts of California," which will be seen for the first time at the Columbia Theatre, San Francisco, on Sunday, June 18th.

The musical comedy success, "Ch. I Say," which has made quite a substantial success at the Columbia Theatre, will be seen for the last times this Saturday afternoon, Saturday and Sunday nights. The theatre will be dark during the week commencing with Monday, reopening Sunday, June 18th, with "The Argonauts of California."

Pantages—Patricola and her violin carry the headline honors with the new show which opens at the Pantages next Sunday matinee. For the past year Patricola has been entertaining the elite of Chicago and the scribes of the windy city bestowed upon the girl the title of "Queen of the Cabaret." One thing is certain, that any single entertainer that is typed over the weekly "girl" production on the Pantages circuit must have such fire box office magnetism. "At Ocean Beach," J. J. Brazee's musical tabloid with a flock of pretty girls, and Billy Batchelor and Don Adams in the principal comedy roles, is one of the special features of the new show. The Doris Wilson trio, three swagger looking young girls, have a decided novelty styled "Through a Looking Glass." The other acts will comprise McCrea and Clegg as the "Intruder and the Queen of the Wheel;" Keit and De Mont in "College Pastimes;" Browne and Jackson as the "Clubman and the Suffragette," and the thirteenth chapter of the engrossing picture serial, "The Iron Claw."

SEASON'S FINAL LORING CLUB CONCERT.

One of the most delightful of the Loring Club's concerts was given last Tuesday night at the Scottish Rite Auditorium, and as it was the closing performance of the season, a large audience welcomed the performers.

This club, which is the oldest of the kind on the Coast, has done more to foster good music than any other organization, and for thirty-nine years has steadily resisted the encroachments of the Philistines.

While, to be sure, the club is inclined to follow the beaten track of tradition, yet the flame is kept alive, and at least we are so far removed from barbarism. Furthermore, it is obvious that in planning any programme, consideration of the vocal training is a factor, and we are a long way from Paris or Munich.

However, the ensembles are remarkably good in expression, a fact which was specially noticeable last Tuesday evening in Harling's "Before the Dawn," a work whose beauty lies in the sensuous rhythm of the Persian. Notable solo work was in the hands of Miss May Mukle, cellist, and Easton Kent, tenor, both of whom claimed the alert attention of the auditors.

The Shavitch-de Grassi-Bem trio, comprising piano, violin and 'cello was heard in the Arenzky "Trio," op. 32, and in two movements of the Beethoven "Trio," op. 1, No. 1, their concerted work being the most acceptable in musicianship and technique.

The numerous chorals included a new one by Henry Hadley, "The Lucky Horseshoe," which combined unmistakable humor with its cleverness of design. The club will begin its fortieth year next September.

REPARTÉE BETWEEN CHURCHES.

I do not vouch for this yarn; it may be an old favorite of the comic journals for all my knowledge to the contrary, but it is a great example of church repartee. Out in Highland Park, where churches are as thick as in Pasadena, necessarily there are differences of opinion relative to salvation, but usually not so blatant as one reported to have occurred last Sunday afternoon. Be it known that the "Holy Rollers" have rented one of the surplus Presbyterian churches of the community and were holding a meeting. They were coming out strong with the hymn, "Will There Be Any Stars in My Crown?" when from the Episcopal church across the street there issued forth the sound of many voices proclaiming, "No, Not One." Assurances have been forthcoming that 'twas but a coincidence.

JUST ONE SCENE.

Library of the husband. Shriveled up in a deep chair, her closed hands twitching nervously between her knees, the young wife. The husband is seated at the writing table. He smokes cigarettes, walks up and down, resumes his seat, walks up and down, again resumes his seat. They never look one at the other. A long suspended scene. The husband opens the drawer of his writing table. He takes out a small, long box, and opens it. He holds a gun in his hands. The young wife watches him intensely. She shrinks back and watches him again, motionless.

The Husband—To the telephone, Nelly!

She rises, walks over to the telephone upon the table. The husband hands her the receiver; he turns the mouthpiece towards her face.

"What's your lover's number?"

Silence.

"What—is—your—lover's—number?"

"5712."

Following the peremptory look of her husband, she calls the number into the instrument: "5712."

The Husband (whispering, but it sounds more like hissing, into her ear)—This is Nelly—

A little silence; evidently somebody speaks at the other end of the line.

The Husband—I'm so lonesome for you, I am so wretched without you—

She repeats these words.

The Husband—if you only were here—

She repeats.

The Husband—My husband went away this morning quite unexpectedly. He will stay away for three days. Won't you come, dear—

She is silent. He looks at her. He points the gun at her. She speaks the words into the telephone. An inaudible answer at the other end of the wire. She screams into the instrument: "Don't come! He is here! He knows everything!"

The husband places his finger on the trigger. She stares boldly into his face, erect, ready to die, but so sad. He has let go the gun. It crashes to the floor. He walks over to the writing desk. He is seated. A long silence.

Then he speaks very slowly: "So it is, then; if a woman really loves a man? Nelly, go—and go in peace!"—After the German of Peter Altenberg, by Guido Bruno.

REPLATED PLATITUDES.

Coming necessities cast their clamors before.

Unfortunately, the woman who lives to become beautiful to look at, generally becomes merely beastly to live with.

Poetry is the product of that art which understands how to wed the visions of the soul to the music of fit words, so that syllabic sequences shall spell, not only sense, but a symphony as well.

Fashion seems to be the fitful froth borne upon a sickly brew of feeble wits and doubtful morals.

A grafter is a rogue who would be a thief if he had the moral courage.

Boulevard—Peninsula Country Club, San Carlos-on-the-Peninsula

New Country Club Organized

Under the name of the Peninsula Country Club, some of the prominent men and women of the bay cities are organizing a large club that will surpass in the generous scope of its activities, and the facilities for sport and sociability offered its members, anything yet attempted by a club in California.

200 acres of land on San Carlos Channel, an estuary of the Bay, near San Carlos-on-the-Peninsula, 23 miles south of San Francisco, have been purchased. Contracts have been let for building a spacious swimming pool and dredging a yacht harbor large enough to accommodate all the pleasure fleets on the Bay.

The beautiful Ohio State Building has been bought, and will be moved from the Exposition Grounds to its site at the head of San Carlos Channel the latter part of this month, when the tide serves. The moving of this large building, which measures 131½ feet long, 80 feet deep, and 43 feet high, will be accomplished by the means of scows. The contractor in charge, H. L. Hatch, states that as an engineering feat the moving presents no serious difficulty, and he has guaranteed to float the building to its destination without injury. The launching of a building of this size on the bay will be a most unique sight, and one well worth seeing.

In the purchase of the stately Ohio Building, the Club has acquired a home that will, with but few alterations, be exactly suited to accommodate a large membership.

On the ground floor there is a spacious rotunda and lobby lighted by a beautiful stained glass dome. The dining room opens on a large portico, so that meals may be served out-of-doors, and in addition there is a billiard room and buffet, card room, men's reception parlor and dressing rooms, secretary's office, telephone exchange and ballroom. The ballroom contains a stage, so that it can be used for private theatricals, lectures and entertainments.

The second floor has a large reception hall and rotunda, ladies' parlors, dressing rooms and a number of commodious bedrooms, with baths. In addition to the main club building, there will be a large, fully equipped garage, boat-house, aviators' hangar, and numerous dressing rooms for the convenience of bathers, aviators, yachtsmen, etc.

The Peninsula Country Club is destined to become a delightful playground for its members, where all can enjoy their individual hobbies. The calm atmosphere and the proximity of a large body of smooth water with ample level shore lands, makes this location most ideal for aeroplaning, hydroplaning, yachting, canoeing and other aquatic sports. For members who desire less venturesome diversions, there will be a field reserved for trap shooting, large tennis courts, bowling green and an eighteen hole golf course.

The fact that acroplaning and hydroplaning are being taken up as a sport by a large club shows the growing interest in this fascinating pastime. It is also another sign of the growing feeling throughout the nation that anything which makes for preparedness is of the greatest importance.

Transportation facilities to the Club are unexcelled, there being 32 Southern Pacific trains per day going and coming. Besides the train service, a line of auto buses maintains a thirty minute service on week days and a twenty minute service on holidays along the State Highway, which passes the club gates.

The officers of the Peninsula Country Club are: C. T. Ryland, president; Courtney L. Moore, vice-president; E. A. von Hasslocher, secretary; Stanford Gwin, assistant secretary; Albert J. Ferguson, treasurer.

The following is a partial list of the charter members: Frank B. Peterson, E. F. Delger, Chas. A. Warren, W. W. Jones, Luther J. Holton, E. H. Benedict, R. J. Tyson, W. J. Woosley, M. B. Follis, J. H. Goldman, Fred H. Drake, H. B. Mayo, Chas. Sonntag, D. Bromfield, W. F. Doig, Geo. McCullough, Victor Stanquist, R. P. Hurlbut, F. O. Cook, H. G. Dorsch, M. C. Kerr, M. McIntosh, W. J. DeLaney, Frank J. Melbourne, R. C. Holmquist, C. E. Baen, C. T. Ryland, Courtney L. Moore, E. A. von Hasslocher, Stanford Gwin, A. J. Ferguson, F. R. King, G. H. Zeh, H. L. Hatch, Josephine A. Phelps, F. E. Kendall, John F. Cannon, Charles W. Haseltine, W. C. Graves, Jr., Byron Mauzy, Donald Lindo, G. N. McCormack, M. M. Hartmann, W. F. Chipman, and others.

The memberships are rapidly being taken up; out of the limit of fifty life members, forty have already been taken.

Temporary offices have been established by the Secretary of the Club in the rotunda of the Mills Building.

LEVEY, PRESIDENT OF WESTERN PACIFIC.

Charles M. Levey will be the president of the reorganized Western Pacific Railroad as soon as the details are perfected and the property is turned over to the regular officials of the company. Some changes are expected in the names of the Western directors, who were named at a recent meeting. They were filled in to satisfy the requirements necessary for the sale day, June 28th. Permanent officers will be elected later.

Levey came to the Western Pacific from the Northern Pacific in October, 1909, as vice-president and general manager. He had charge of the completion of the road, and afterwards organized the operating department, the first passenger train being run August 22, 1910. He continued in the same capacity until March 5, 1915, when the road went into the hands of Frank G. Drum and Warren Olney as receivers. They appointed Levey as general manager, and he continued until the present time.

Million Dollar Bazaar A "Hummer."

With a committee including some of the wealthiest and smartest women in New York as patronesses, and thousands of the most prominent artists, writers, diplomats, financiers, State Senators, Governors and clergymen, representing every allied war relief society in the United States and Canada, from the great national relief committees to the smallest local organization, all cooperating, the Million Dollar Allied Bazaar to raise funds for the Allies had its opening at the Grand Central Palace Saturday night, June 3d, and will continue until Wednesday, June 14th.

Three floors of the building have been engaged for the donations, which have been sent from all over the world, which include everything from crudely shaped toys made by soldiers in the trenches to first class round trip passages to Liverpool.

The French government exhibit includes the aeroplane in which the famous Pegoud fought his memorable duels with the German flyers, also shrapnel, shells, projectiles, bullets, asphyxiating bombs, gas masks, etc., gathered from the battlefield at Verdun. A gold and platinum watch (valued at $1,000), automobiles, motorcycles, motor boats, carved chests, antique Chinese porcelains, exquisite Venetian and Brussels laces, round-trip tickets to Bermuda and Liverpool, a large number of the pedigreed dogs, cats and autographed books and paintings by famous American writers and artists, are a few of the donations that will be auctioned off.

The "Perfect Day of Ladylike Thrills," including a ride in an aeroplane with Katherine Stinson, a ride with the swiftest lady automobile driver the committee can find, a spin in Mrs. J. Stuart Blackton's speed motor boat, a big scene in a movie picture that will be a thriller, with a star film actress, and also a dance with Florence Walton at the Biltmore, is only one of the many novelties of the bazaar. The winner of another contest will be given three days of romance, starting with a kidnapping at some unlooked-for time and spot. Another stunt will be a contest for a week-end visit in the home of a Newport hostess.

The British-French-Belgian Permanent War Relief Fund has taken over six booths, to be managed by 300 society girls under the personal direction of Mrs. R. V. Webster. Each girl will carry a bank around with her continually to catch any small change that might otherwise be overlooked.

The three organizers of the fund are Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, Mrs. George A. Kessler and Mrs. Webster. Miss Anne Morgan has arranged to have the Vacation War Relief Fund and American Fund for French Wounded cooperate in managing a chocolate house and garden. The American Ambulance in Russia and the Imperial Daughters of the British Empire will each have something unique to offer. Mrs. Philip Lydig has given ten hats—$500 worth—to the French Hospital Committee. Mrs. Helen S. Woodruff, writer, will have charge of the Authors' Booth.

Even the little folks will have their share in the success of the biggest bazaar. The "Children of 1915," an organization of American children who are working to help the children of the warring nations, will appear in costume and sell programs, chances and flowers.

The fire boat David Scannell, Captain Silvio Rocca, which performed such heroic work in drowning out the big fire on the water front. The flames destroyed a pier, shipping and freight, value $2,000,000.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL ITEMS

ENGAGEMENTS.

- BROWN-BOWERS.—Mrs. Arthur P. Brown has announced the engagement of her daughter, Miss Agnes P. Brown, to Ray D. Bowers. The wedding will take place early this summer.
- GLASSFORD-SHAW.—The engagement of Miss Julia Glassford and John Shaw, of Philadelphia, was announced at a recent luncheon given by the bride-elect at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. James Glassford, on Thirty-seventh avenue.
- HARTIGAN-WILLIAMS.—The engagement of John D. Hartigan and Miss Dorothy Williams, of New York, was one of the announcements of the past week. Miss Williams is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Smith Williams, and was here last summer as a guest of Mr. and Mrs. George Barr Baker.
- SCHAFFER-MAZE.—Announcement is made of the engagement of Miss Lena Schaffer, a prominent member of this year's graduating class at the University of California, and George Maze of the '13 class. The news was made known at the home of the prospective bride in Modesto at a luncheon given in her honor by her aunt, Mrs. W. H. Langdon.

STEWART. Miss Margaret Stewart, one of the owners of the Hotel Stewart, returned this week from a prolonged trip through Southern California.

DEPARTURES.

BABCOCK.—A large number of relatives and civilian friends will be at the dock to say farewell to Captain and Mrs. Conrad S. Babcock, U. S. A., who are to be stationed at Honolulu.

BOWLES.—Mr. and Mrs. Philip E. Bowles left this week for New Haven to be present at the graduation from Yale of their son, Robert Bowles. The young man will return to California with his parents in a few weeks.

BECKWITH.—Mrs. John Beckwith, president of Ebell Club, has returned from the East, where she attended the biennial of the National Federation of Women's Clubs in New York. Early next month Mr. and Mrs. Beckwith will leave for Glacier National Park for several weeks.

DAVIS.—Mr. and Mrs. Winfield Scott Davis have gone to Louisville, Ky., to be present at the marriage of their son, Kenneth Davis, to Miss Cornelia Davis, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Donald MacDonald.

D'EVELYN.—Mrs. Frederick D'Evelyn and daughter, Miss Bernice D'Evelyn, left for England this week. She is to be married to Major Carleton Woodford Allen toward the end of this month. The ceremony will take place in London.

FOSTER.—Dr. and Mrs. N. K. Foster and Miss Ruth Foster left for the Yosemite on Saturday for a sojourn of several weeks. They made the trip by motor, and will establish a camp of their own in the valley during their stay.

HALE.—Mr. and Mrs. Prentiss Cobb Hale and their children have gone to Shasta Springs, where they will spend the summer.

HOLCOMBE.—Captain Lee Holcombe, U. S. A., and his mother, Mrs. Lee Holcombe, widow of the late Commander Holcombe of the Navy, who have been guests of Major and Mrs. William H. Brooks at their home in Laguna street, are sailing for Honolulu.

SHEPARD.—Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Shepard left Wednesday for a motor trip through Southern California. They will be away from San Francisco for a fortnight, and will visit Los Angeles, Pasadena, Riverside and San Diego. They recently returned from a two weeks' motor trip in Lake County.

TAYLOR.—Miss Bernice Taylor, with her mother and sister, Mrs. H. W. Taylor and Miss Ruth Taylor, left Monday for their summer home near Los Gatos.

WALLER.—Miss Evelyn Waller left Wednesday for Belvedere, where she will be the guest of Miss Jeannette Bertheau for several weeks.

WEBER-COOLEY.—Robert Weber and Victor Cooley have gone to Santa Barbara, where they expect to spend the next ten days. They are guests at the Hotel Potter.

INTIMATIONS.

CAROLAN.—Mr. and Mrs. Frank Carolan have gone to Chicago from New York, and are the guests of the latter's mother, Mrs. Pullman.

CUNNINGHAM.—Mrs. Arthur Lee Cunningham has sent out cards this week for a large reception in honor of her son's bride, Mrs. Arthur Lee Cunningham, Jr. (Ruth Logan), whose marriage was an interesting event of last Wednesday.

FLETTTER.—Mr. and Mrs. Charles Franklin Fletter and Randolph Whiting Fletter, accompanied by Miss Edith Stone, will spend the month of July motoring in the Sierras, and later will go to Lake Tahoe.

GEORGES.—Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Georges have moved into their new home on Bay Vista avenue, Alameda.

JUDSON.—Mrs. Charles Judson is visiting her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Somers, at Stanford. Mr. and Mrs. Somers have closed their city home on Clay street, and will pass the remainder of the summer at Palo Alto.

MILLER.—Mr. George F. Miller of this city is now a guest at the Wolcott Hotel in New York.

McMILLAN.—Mrs. Robert McMillan is visiting with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. T. Z. Blakeman.

MacMONNIES.—Mr. and Mrs. Frederic MacMonnies of New York are visiting in Santa Barbara with Mrs. MacMonnies' mother, Mrs. John P. Jones.

PALMER.—Mr. and Mrs. Silas Palmer have closed their home on Pacific avenue for the summer, and are established in Menlo Park, where they are guests at the home of Mrs. Palmer's father, Charles Holbrook.

PEREZ.—Miss Evelyn Perez and her parents have given up their apartments in Washington street and are now living in Ross.

PURDY.—Mr. and Mrs. John Henry Purdy of New York, who have been in Southern California several weeks, visited Mr. and Mrs. William Babcock in San Rafael. Mrs. J. K. R. Nuttall also entertained for them at a luncheon party.

SAN FRANCISCO YACHT CLUB.—With the lam bake, at which the San Francisco Yacht Club opened its summer season, there were yachting parties, preceded with Saturday evening dances at home, where week end house parties were put up. All of the yachts anchored at Sausalito were in the jaunty little fleet that sailed to Paradise Cove Tuesday morning, and a pretty sight it was to be had to picture.

SANE.—Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Sane have returned from their honeymoon and are temporarily at home at the Cliff Hotel. They will later on take possession of their new home at Marinette, where they will reside permanently.

SCOTT.—Mr. and Mrs. Harry Horsay Scott will leave June 23rd for Salt Lake.

STONE.—Miss Kate R. Stone and her nephew Philip S. Baker, are stopping at the Plaza Hotel, where they will entertain during the summer season.

—The Elks will hold Flag Day celebration in the Greek Theatre, Berkeley, Sunday afternoon, June 11th, at 2:30. F. E. Brooks has written specially for the occasion a poem called "Old Glory."

BUSINESS OUTLOOK THROUGHOUT COUNTRY.

The business situation has changed but little in the last month, and confidence in the future has not weakened. Bank clearings in manufacturing districts of the East are forty to sixty per cent higher than a year ago, and in the cities more directly related to the agricultural interest twenty to forty per cent. Railway traffic could hardly be heavier with present facilities. The congestion is reduced to an extent that permits of a fairly expeditious movement of consignments, but there is still much unloaded freight at the terminals and a shortage of cars. The fundamental conditions, which include full employment of the people, and an enormous production of commodities from original sources, were never better. Agricultural products and mineral products never before brought prices that were so remunerative to the producers, and the number of people directly engaged in these industries is very large. The lumber industry is also prosperous, although not to the extraordinary degree enjoyed by agriculture and mining. Manufacturing in practically all lines is working up to the limit of the available labor supply. Judge Gary, of the United States Steel Corporation, last week described conditions in the steel industry by saying that the orders being booked still more than covered the current production, and that business for fully a year ahead was in sight.

—According to an announcement made by President H. L. Slosson, Jr., of the Union Consolidated, who had received the mill sheet for May, the surplus cash in the Union treasury amounted to $77,079.78, with all company debts paid except the mining and pumping expenses for May not yet computed. The bullion product for May, treated at the Mexican mill, nets the Union $39,330.74, after deducting moisture, tailings loss and milling charges. This amount includes $1,237.31 due the company from April on the basis of the increased price of bar silver. The mill sheet is the most satisfactory received from the Mexican by any Comstock management in many years.

—The official report of April earnings of the Great Northern Railroad issued in St. Paul shows an increase of $1,072,245.48 over the same month a year ago. The total operating income for April this year was $1,700,912.18. The total operating expenses for the month were $4,356,864.17, or $861,752.35 more than for April, 1915. The total operating revenue for the month this year was $2,108,326.92.

Last week's production by Tonopah mines was 8,878 tons, estimated in value at $183,264, as compared with 9,400 tons, worth $194,460, during the preceding week. Shipments to the mill included 3,052 tons by Belmont, 2,100 tons by Tonopah Mining, 1,850 tons by Tonopah Extension, 750 tons by Jim Butler, 566 tons by West End, 151 tons by Rescue-Eula, 198 tons by Halifax, and 68 tons by North Star.

—The organization of American Motors was the big event in Wall street this week. It contributed lively speculation. John M. Willys is said to have received $500 per share for his controlling stock in Overland-Willys.

—Bank clearings for May totaled $278,778,838 vs. $206,990,335 in 1915. Building permits for May totaled $1,777,231 vs. $1,209,543 in 1915.

—Sugar stocks paid out $625,300 in dividends this week, distributed as follows: Hawaiian Commercial $500,000; Hutchinson Plantation, $50,000; Paauhau Plantation, $50,000; Union Sugar, $25,300; total, $625,300.

—One morning the "Black Maria" arrived at the police-court to take to jail the prisoners who had been arrested the previous night. As they filed into the van the policemen were much amused to hear an old woman, who was the last of the string, shout out to a young prisoner in front: "Now, then, come out of that; you've got my corner!" Needless to say, the old lady obtained her accustomed seat. Then as the door was closed to and the policeman stepped up behind, she put her face to the bars and said to him in delightfully dulcet tones: "Home, James."—Tit-Bits.

"What Is Coming?"

H. G. Well's attitude of mind in his new book, "What is Coming?" is interestingly revealed in the following passage from the first chapter of that volume:

"The present writer is a prophet by use and wont. He is more interested in to-morrow than he is in to-day, and the past is just material for future guessing. 'Think of the men who have walked here!' said a tourist in the Roman Coliseum. It was a futurist mind that answered: 'Think of the men who will.' It is surely as interesting that presently some founder of the World Republic, some obstinate opponent of militarism or legalism, or the man who will first release atomic energy for human use, will walk along the Via Sacra as that Cicero or Giordano Bruno or Shelley have walked there in the past. To the prophetic mind all history is and will continue to be a prelude. The prophetic type will steadfastly refuse to see the world as a museum; it will insist that here is a stage set for a drama that perpetually begins."

"The European Anarchy."

Mr. G. Lowes Dickinson's book gives in broad outline a just estimate of the European concept of government—what he calls the European Anarchy—with particular reference to the underlying causes of the war and the possibility of a movement toward better things in the future. The key-note of the discussion is Germany, her expansion and her desire for future expansion, what was legitimate in it and what was disastrous, the influence of Bismarck, and Bismarck's success in divorcing from the German mind, the old, generous idealism of 1848 in favor of a Machiavellianism as far removed from the real needs of human nature as any romanticism could be. Mr. Dickinson recognizes that the fundamental interests of the European nations demand a united Europe, and wherever he criticises the past, it is only with the searching hope of reconstruction for the future.

"Present Day China."

Gardner L. Harding says that China has experienced the equivalent of a generation of change several times since 1911. In spite of this, he considers that the privilege of writing of the mental background of a people of such incessant wakefulness and vitality is worth the journalistic risk of never being quite abreast of actual events. His attempt has been to interpret the quality of mind which produced the Chinese Revolution, and that he has not written for "old China hands," with their authorities and their prejudices, but for those among the American and English people who honor Young China's long and bitter fight upward through the darkness, the darkness through which the Chinese Revolution of 1911 will always shine as a beacon light of Oriental freedom.

"Principles of Labor Legislation."

Professor John R. Commons, of the chair of Political Economy at the University of Wisconsin, and Dr. John B. Andrews, Secretary of the American Association for Labor Legislation, have performed for the layman a helpful service in compiling a volume entitled "Principles of Labor Legislation," which the Harpers have just published. As in any other science, where the assembled data have assumed vast proportions, recourse must be had to the formulation of principles which underlie the phenomena. This the co-authors have admirably done, with a view to acquainting the citizen and the general student with those underlying bases upon which the bewildering fabric of labor legislation is rising. It is the historical background, the nature and extent of the various labor problems, and the legislative remedies which have been applied with varying results which are set forth, rather than any technical discussion of the legality involved. Individual and collective bargaining, wages, hours, unemployment, safety and health, social insurance and administration are the major heads of the discussion.

"A Clearing House for the Mentally Deficient" is proposed in a bill which has passed both houses of the New York Legislature. Dr. Max G. Schlapp appears to have been the scientist promoting it. Under it a backward child, or a person lacking proper intelligence, must be taken to a State institution conveniently accessible for proper treatment, and mothers are to be educated up to the point of watching their children for signs of mental disease. In such work of care and education Dr. Jacoby's "Exact Science of Child Training" should have an important part. There are 35,000 unfortunate "defectives" in New York State alone.

Zeppeline and Super-Zeppelins.

R. P. Hearne, author of "Airships in Peace and War," lays before us in simple language the history and principles of the Zeppelin; then he discusses the use of the vessel in warfare, and the various means of combating enemy warships. In his book, "Aerial Warfare," published eight years ago, Mr. Hearne was amongst the first writers in England to call attention to the Zeppelin menace. There are twenty-five illustrations, a unique collection of photographs, diagrams and maps enhances the value of the book.

WHERE THE PHILADELPHIAN NEVER VENTURES

A famous and agreeable example of Philadelphianism is the geographical restrictions as to the district where polite life may be led; you may search the world without finding anything comparable to the feeling in Philadelphia concerning the regions north of Market street.

There is an apocryphal story of a delightful and famous old lady who had seen here and there at afternoon parties a younger woman whose look somehow seemed to win friendliness. Finding herself one day descending some of the best white-marble door steps in company with this agreeable stranger, the elder lady suggested driving her home, and they stepped together into the snug brougham, drawn by a sleek, fat horse, and driven by an equally sleek, fat coachman.

"James, we will drive Mrs. X home," was the only order given.

The brougham started, and for a period, while its occupants chatted pleasantly, wandered somewhat aimlessly through the very best streets. At last its owner, vaguely disturbed, said apologetically:

"I am afraid James doesn't know where you live. It is annoying; he always knows where everybody lives. I apologize for having to ask such a question, but where do you live, my dear?"

Her charming companion smiled, and then mentioned a number in North Broad street—it may even have been Spring Garden street—an address in the unmentionable regions. The Philadelphian—for we can no longer so designate the younger woman—took the blow gallantly. The pleasant chat was resumed, but for at least a quarter of an hour more the sleek, fat horse still ambled aimlessly through the very best district. At last the elder lady rose to the situation. She tapped the glass, and as the sleek, fat coachman halted, said:

"I wonder if you would mind telling James yourself where to drive us, dear? I'm afraid he would think it very odd if I myself were to give him an address north of Market street."—Harrison Rhoads in Harper's Magazine for June.

THE ETERNAL RIDDLE.

One evening the adorable Gladys said: "Because you are so very unhappy on account of your affection not being returned, I shall let you kiss at least my bed, my pillow and my slipper, poor, poor Peter—"

She let me up into the little room which served her and her friend Olive as bedchamber. She said: "This one to the right is my bed—"

I knelt down and I kissed the beloved sheet and the coverlet. I embraced with inexpressible tenderness the beloved cushion still fragrant from her hair. I kissed passionately her slipper.

She was looking at me and started to giggle. She giggled, she laughed, she screamed, she was quite out of sorts with merriment. "Why, this is Olive's bed, my dear, you are rewarding with all this affection."

I was deeply hurt to have been misled so mischievously, and I replied as quietly as I could: "And if so, isn't your friend Olive a beautiful and attractive girl, too?" Sweet Gladys paled at these words. She said: "Come on, let us go; you are an actor, and anyhow, I was too wise to you, you little fool—"

Later on, I said to Olive: "Olive, dear, which one is really your bed in your little bedchamber; the one on the left side or the one on the right side?"

"The one on the right." "But Gladys asked me to tell you in case you enquired, that it is the one to the left from the door. What is the matter with you two people?"

Later on I said to Gladys: "Darling, I think you really care more for me than you want to make me believe you do—"

Infuriated, she replied: "So you really believe, you idiot, that it was my bed?"

"Yes, that's exactly what I believe," I answered emphatically.

She smiled. She seemed completely satisfied, and in quite a kind way she said: "Poor, poor Peter. I'm sorry that I love another one, and that you don't like Olive— But are you sure that you really and honestly don't care for her?"—After the German of Peter Altenberg, by Guido Bruno.

FROM OSCAR WILDE.

Yet each man kills the thing he loves,
By each let this be heard:
Some do it with a bitter look,
Some with a flattering word;
The coward does it with a kiss,
The brave man with a sword!

Some kill their love when they are young,
And some when they are old;
Some strangle with the hands of Lust,
Some with the hands of Gold:
The kindest use a knife, because
The dead so soon grow cold.

Some love too little, some too long,
Some sell and others buy;
Some do the deed with many tears,
And some without a sigh;
For each man kills the thing he loves,
Yet each man does not die.

The Grade Crossing Juggernaut

The recent deplorable accidents at grade crossings of the railway near this city, resulting in the deaths of a number of autoists, and in one instance last Sunday of a motor cyclist, himself an expert chauffeur, has reawakened public interest in its own safety.

A grade crossing passed by five thousand or more machines in the daylight hours, and with forty passenger trains whirring by simply should not exist—that is the solution, and the only solution—the old-fashioned gates are no more prevention to the passage of an automobile than would be so much thread; at best they operate as a signal.

But do you not suppose that the railways know this as well as any one? Does any one think for a moment that these dangerous spots continue to exist through greed for a few dollars, or many dollars, for that matter?

It is granted that the American railway official is about the most efficient of all America's very efficient business men—and practically all of our genius has gone into business, certainly not into art, letters or politics—. That being so, the transportation companies certainly would not want to expose themselves to damage suits before hostile juries, with demagogic judges seeking re-election, and with the constant fear of the referendum before their eyes.

No, indeed. The railways cannot make the improvements they know are necessary so long as their business is controlled by a group of Washington politicians and lawyers, who, whatever may be their abilities to procure high places under the government, are not able railway officials, not even high class amateurs. And just so long as this interference with a perfectly legitimate business continues, there will be little to tempt banks and investors to finance railway securities. The American Railway Association has recently adopted uniform standards for grade crossing protection, and while these may be all right in sparsely settled districts, yet as indicated in the foregoing, they are utterly inadequate in congested traffic, and at certain times the State highway down the peninsula is as congested as anywhere in the city.

In such cases people must be protected from themselves.

Specific standards for protecting grade crossings, to apply to every crossing in the United States, have been adopted by the American Railway Association, which held its semi-annual convention at the Hotel Biltmore, New York City, this week. The special committee on the prevention of accidents at grade crossings was authorized at the meeting to confer with the National Association of Railway Commissioners, and to join with them in recommending standards to be followed in the protection of grade crossings, and to secure legislation in all the States requiring compliance with such standards.

The association adopted five specific practices, which will be recommended for adoption by public service commissions and other properly constituted authorities. These standards cover:

1. Uniform approach warning signs.
2. Uniform color of light for night indication.
3. Uniform use of a circular disc, approximating 16 inches in diameter, with the word "STOP" painted thereon in large letters instead of the vari-colored flags which are now in use by crossing watchmen or flagmen.
4. Uniform painting of crossing gates alternate diagonal stripes of black and white (something like a barber's pole.)
5. Uniform rules governing crossing watchmen or flagmen while controlling or regulating street or highway traffic.

The report of the special committee that made these recommendations to the association stated that accidents at crossings have increased 1,000 per cent in the last five years, in some parts of the country. It is with the view of standardizing the crossing signals throughout the country in order that automobile drivers might have ample warning when approaching a crossing that the association has taken this step to make all warnings similar in every State. The circular disc with the word "STOP" in large letters with a contrasting background to make it stand out in bold relief will eliminate the complaint that flags, which are now generally used, do not give the drivers sufficiently clear indication whether the flagman is urging them across or trying to stop them. The disc will be held up in the middle of the highway to warn vehicular and pedestrian traffic.

Astounding Growth of Motor Exports

The popularity of American-built motor cars is growing all the time in foreign climes, the latest government statistics show. During the month of March last, according to figures compiled by the bureau of statistics, 1,878 commercial cars, valued at $4,909,179, were shipped abroad, as against 1,339 commercial cars, valued at $4,725,563, exported during the corresponding month of last year. The exports of passenger cars increased from 2,429 cars, valued at $1,958,302, in March, 1915, to 5,539 cars, valued at $3,726,639, in March last, while the exports of parts, not including engines and tires, increased from $762,386 to $1,858,247 during the same periods.

The figures for the 9 months' period ended March show astounding increases in exports. It will amaze many to learn that during the 9 months ended March, 1916, there were 38,795 pleasure cars, valued at $29,261,446, exported to all parts of the globe, while during the same period of last year the exports totaled 11,563 cars, valued at $9,551,731. Exports of commercial cars also show a remarkable gain from 6,313 cars, valued at $18,737,487, during the 9 months ended March, 1915, to 16,345 cars, valued at $43,638,900 during the corresponding period of 1916.

It is interesting to trace the different parts of the world where these tremendous shipments of motor cars went during the periods under consideration. Of course, the warring nations in Europe are importing thousands of cars, but other sections of the world are also beginning to buy American-built cars at a rate that must be pleasing to every manufacturer who is looking into the foreign field.

Looking over the figures one finds that France imported 948 cars, valued at $2,405,437, from this country in March last, as against 460 cars, valued at $1,918,053, imported during the same month of last year. During the 9 months' period these exports increased from 2,896 cars, valued at $8,325,140, in 1915, to 5,147 cars, valued at $13,203,663, in 1916.

The exports of cars to the United Kingdom fell off in March last as compared with the exports for the same month of last year, but during the 9 months' period there was a big gain. In March, a year ago, 1,566 cars, valued at $2,468,014, were exported to King George's Islands, while in March last the number was 1,367 and the value $1,711,672. During the 9 months of 1916 no less than 16,107 cars, valued at $22,089,418, were shipped there, as against 6,197 cars, valued at $8,915,029, exported during the same period of 1915.

Auto Preparedness Plan of Northern California Dealers

An appeal for five hundred automobiles for July 9th has been made by representatives of the automobile industry, the State Automobile Association and representatives of the United States government. This number of motor vehicles will be required to transport the troops and recruits from San Francisco to the military training camp at Monterey.

The automobile industry plans to make this the greatest demonstration ever held on the Pacific Coast of the advantages of motor vehicles for the transportation of troops, and to show the government just what the auto could do in emergency.

It is planned by the motorists to show the government their willingness and ability to cooperate in case of emergency and also to demonstrate the necessity of further improvement of highways. The distance from San Francisco to the Monterey training camp is about 125 miles, and the movement of the arms of troops is expected to be accomplished within five hours. This would have been impossible on the poor roads of last year.

The auto as a military asset is receiving widespread attention throughout the East, and it is the purpose of the auto owners and dealers here to place California among the leaders in the operation of motor vehicles for army service.

KisselKar Scores One Hundred Points Out of a Possible One Hundred

Eight more coats of finish than any car of its price class, many more bearings and bushings, an oiling system requiring but two grease cups—these and ninety-seven other points, some exclusive and the remainder the accepted standard, feature the "Hundred-Point Six," a new car just announced by the Kissel Motor Car Company of Hartford, Wis., says W. L. Hughson, head of the Pacific KisselKar branch.

In the table of points contained in the company's prospectus, twenty are listed under the heading "Efficiency," eighteen under "Stability," twenty under "Simplicity," ten under "Quiet," fourteen under "Comfort," nine under "Economy," and nine under "Refinement."

The engine is a high speed Kissel-built block type, with a bore of $3\frac{1}{4}$ and a stroke of 5, and will, it is said, make fifty-five to sixty miles an hour if desired.

The ignition system is Remy, the carburetor a special Kissel-Stromberg design, the electric battery Willard, and the starter the same successful Kissel system, operated in connection with the Bendix screw, that has been used in KisselKars for three years.

Special praise is given the springs, which are long and flat, with drop forged shackles and case-hardened suspension bolts. It is claimed that sideway and rebound are eliminated by the design of these springs making shock absorbers unnecessary.

It is urged that brakes, both external, are incomparable in efficiency and reliability. Timken roller bearings are used in the axles and wheels. Imported ball bearings are used in the transmission.

In place of the usual twenty to twenty-five grease cups found in the average chassis, Kissel has substituted oil bolts. Each of these bolts contains an ample reservoir which may be filled from a can in the ordinary way, thus doing away with one of the most obnoxious chores in connection with the care of a car.

The carburetor automatically supplies the right mixture at all speeds, which makes for gas economy as well as efficiency.

The wheel base of the "hundred point six" is 117 inches. It has big door openings, extra deep upholstery of real leather, cushion springs and curled hair. The front seats are divided, of course, Kissel being the first in America to introduce the much followed corridor construction. The driver's seat is adjustable to any length, and the indicating instruments are mounted in a straight line on the cowl board. A pedal button starts the motor.

Motorists will appreciate the fact that every effort has been used to make the "hundred point six" as free from noise as it is possible to build an automobile.

The hundred point is a very smart little car, with an improved stream line and body hung low without sacrificing ample clearance. It is given twenty-two finishing operations over the finest quality of twenty-gauge silver finish sheet steel. It is built in touring and roadster models at $1,095 and also mounts several new designs of the all-year car, a Kissel idea which has proved so successful that fully two-thirds the Kissel output is now sold with demountable tops. Sedan, coupe and town car tops are in the new line, all being built in connection with an extra-strong lower body known as the Gibraltar. The town car is in fair weather transformed into a swagger Victoria, the Sedan into a touring car, and the coupe into a roadster.

Kissel still gives a year's guarantee against defects of material and workmanship in KisselKars, although most manufacturers have reduced theirs to three months.

Coast to Coast Record Cut to 6 Days 10 Hours and 58 Minutes

When Bobby Hammond, driving an Empire car from San Francisco, landed in New York at 7:59 p. m. May 23d, he established a new trans-continental record of six days ten hours and fifty-eight minutes, clipping twenty-five hours from the best previous time for a tour from coast to coast.

Hammond left San Francisco at 12:01 a. m. Wednesday, May 17th, carrying a United States mail sack containing greetings from Mayor Rolph of San Francisco to Mayor Mitchell at New York. Practically without stop he drove to Ogden, Utah, in 36 hrs; thence the route was via Cheyenne, Omaha, Clinton, Ft. Wayne, Canton, Pittsburgh, and Philadelphia to New York. The direct mileage on this route is 3,485 miles, or about 80 miles further than the southern route. This gives an average speed of about 22.50 miles per hour. It is the course of the Lincoln Highway, and the record, therefore, stands also for this trans-continental road. Outside of Hammond's run from San Francisco to Ogden, the fourth day's run was the most sensational when, without companion, he drove from Omaha, Neb., to Elkhart, Ind., over 600 miles, in about 17 hours.

His companion on the early stages of the trip was compelled to leave the car beyond Cheyenne, and at Ft. Wayne, Hammond picked up Herbert Wasson of the Empire Automobile Company's force as companion to New York.

The record driver and car was enthusiastically greeted upon his arrival. Representing the city government, Traffic Officer Pat MacDonald, stationed at 42d street and Broadway, champion weight-thrower, signed Hammond's checking book on the completion of the tour. Big Pat stopped traffic as the crowd gathered, then the tourists drove to the City Hall, violated all precedents by bumping the curve and driving across the Esplanade to the very door.

Arnold-Stelling Co. Appointed Agents Ross "8"

The Arnold-Stelling Company, one of the wellknown local firms, will handle the Ross "8" in Northern California, in addition to distributing the Simplex-Crane car in this territory.

The Ross "8" is a long, racy car, and as an official of the company puts it, "a racy acting car." The car has full streamline design, and is roomy and made for seven passengers.

The motor is of the Ross 8-cylinder type. The cylinders are set at an angle of ninety degrees. The equipment of the motor is so arranged as to keep the space between the cylinder blocks absolutely clear, thus making the engine easily accessible.

The transmission is of the selective sliding-gear type, with three speeds forward and reverse. The gears and shaft are of chrome nickel steel. The car is equipped with all the accessories which go to make riding easy and comfortable.

Army Motor Activities in Monterey Maneuvers

The part that the motor plays in war will be brought sharply home to us in the transportation of recruits and troops from San Francisco to the training camp at Monterey, July 9th. Besides the hundreds of touring cars used in the movement of troops there will be a big division of motor trucks for hauling supplies, guns and other army equipment.

The troop movement on July 9th promises to be the largest and most interesting demonstration of the advantages of motor vehicles for army service ever held in this country. According to plans now being made, there will be aeroplane scouts in advance of the army and wireless stations equipped on motor trucks following the rear division.

All classes of motor vehicles will be used extensively. There will be Red Cross ambulance machines, heavy gun trucks, dispatch cars, motorcycle patrol and messenger machines. The automobile dealers are having unusual success in securing cars from owners for the trip, and according to reports of W. L. Hughson, chairman of the dealers' committee, there will be enough cars to transport the army over the 125 miles of State highways, besides moving all of the equipment necessary for such a movement.

While at least 300 touring cars are needed from San Francisco, it will also be necessary to secure about 50 motor trucks. In fact, the truck division promises to be one of the most interesting features of the demonstration. Carrying as they will exceptionally heavy loads, the trucks will not be able to maintain as fast a pace as the touring cars, but the actual performance of the heavy trucks, the cost of their operation on the trip, the speed maintained and the amount of equipment carried, will furnish interesting data for the War Department.

Among the large truck distributors who are planning to send fleets of their machines in the trial are the Garford Motor Truck Company, the Thomas B. Jeffery Company, the Moreland Motor Truck Company, Don Lee, distributor for the G. M. C. trucks; the White Company, the Kissel-Kar Company, with a fleet of Federal trucks, and the Rivers-Andrews Company.

Liquor Business Uses Many Trucks

Inquiries made at the convention of the National Liquor Dealers' Association, held in Louisville, Ky., May 9, 10 and 11, developed the surprising fact that more than $25,000,000 worth of trucks and motor cars are used in the liquor business in the United States, and that the replenishment cost is not less than $20,000,000 annually. Deliveries of the "wet goods" are mainly made by power vehicles—and there was some resentment at the convention when it was pointed out that of all the businesses the automobile business is about the worst, as far as "reciprocity" is concerned. Liquor, in quantity consumption, is "taboo" in the automobile industry, it seems to the liquor men.

A First-Class Garage

There are many garages in town, and the motorist is often in a quandary as to where to go, especially for permanent service. There are very few who give you the QUALITY of service of Dow & Green, in Taylor street, between O'Farrell and Geary. Here your car will receive something more than the "once over," and the prices are moderate.

FASHION'S FADS AND FRILLS

For true sport, the vacation girl must dress the part, whether her outing be a tramping tour, a camping trip, a mountain climb, or just the conventional round of tennis, golf and boating. This annual week or two of freedom, open air and sunshine must carry us through another year, so let us make the most of our outing.

Sport Shirts and Sport Skirts

Perhaps the most comfortable general outfit for the girl who likes a long cross-country tramp, is the short skirt of corduroy, with heavy tan boots, not too high, well oiled to prevent wetting through, a soft tan flannel shirt, made on the order of a man's with pockets, and soft roll collar, and a soft felt or Panama hat, which is light of weight and wide enough of brim to keep the face from burning. Dogskin or wash chamois gloves may be worn if one has the patience for them, and desires to keep the hands smooth and white. These sport shirts are being used

Slip-On Blouse and Linen Skirt

Modified Middy with Novel Pockets

generally for even the most conventional sports purposes. They are developed in many suitable materials, ranging from flannel to the elaborately colored, checked and striped silk shirtings and taffetas; and may be purchased from about one dollar and twenty-five cents to fifteen dollars and beyond. The comfortable and practical sport skirts are fashioned of the colored cotton velours and corduroys, the vividly striped linens and canvas weaves, smart mixtures of Scotch and English chevots and tweeds, soft wool plaids and checks, and for real hard usage the regulation corduroys, and khaki. These skirts are cut short, full enough for comfort, and well supplied with pockets. They usually fit trimly around waist and hips, and, combined with a natty sport blouse or shirt, form a smart, becoming costume.

Coats and Sweaters

Sweaters, or sweater coats, are decidedly comfortable and practical articles to complete the sport costume. These sweater coats are made of the new striped and plain jersey cloths in wool or silk; of corduroy, in the bright, pretty colorings favored for this purpose; of broadcloth, flannel, tweed, and similar fabrics. They are, as a rule, unlined and may be fashioned at home to be as effective as those purchased, and much less expensive. The striped linen suit, with plain coat, illustrated here, is a perfectly appropriate suit for the beach, boardwalk, or general daytime wear. The blouse is one of the new middys, effectively trimmed with collar, cuffs, and wide, roomy pockets of the striped material used for the skirt.

A smart little sport coat of one of the striped silks, glove or jersey, may be appropriately worn with various frocks and on various occasions. For instance, it is not out of place to slip on one of these soft silken coats over the dance or afternoon frock, if one is chilly, and there is no danger of crushing the frock; and they are quite the usual thing to wear over the lingerie dress, either for daytime or evening.

There are many effective blouses, cut Russian or modified middy fashion, developed in these soft silks, linens and novelty fabrics, and commonly called sport blouses, but being appropriately worn for the various daytime occasions aside from sports. An especially pretty design is shown here, combined with a skirt of white serge. This model slips on over the head, and is made of the new glove silk, in black and white stripes; the blouse is smartly trimmed with collar, cuffs and girdle of the serge. Such a costume is charming and sensible for the girl who plays tennis and indulges in similar sports, and it may be worn quite as appropriately by the girl who merely looks on.

Sporting and Walking Shoes

Whether it is the influence of the sports fad, or just a natural reaction from uncomfortable heels and pointed toes, one sees numbers of sensible shoes worn by smartly dressed women these days. Of course, there is the distinct sports shoe for tennis or golf, with rubber sole and heel, and the heavy tramping or hunting boot. But there is another shoe, a typical walking shoe, which is beginning to be seen on the street, worn with the smartly tailored suit of serge or linen; this shoe or tie has a broad heel, a round toe and a generally sensible, smart appearance. One of the most charming low shoes of the season, worn for the street, with a tailored suit, is of patent leather with heels which resemble closely the old-fashioned spring heels of the child's shoe. These are smart, new and comfortable. For those who find the backward tilt of the low heel rather uncomfortable at first, there comes an air cushion or inside heel which may be slipped into the shoe, adding to the comfort and giving the same effect as the outside heel of rubber.

White buckskin and canvas shoes, with leather trimmings, or plain, are popular for general sports wear, with the white or colored linen suit; the plain black or tan walking boot is favored for rough wear. Silk stockings are seldom worn for sports purposes; a good heavy lisle or cotton is preferable.

INSURANCE

Under the auspices of the San Francisco Life Underwriters' Association, the most notable outing for life insurance men and their families ever arranged in California took place Tuesday, when five hundred members journeyed to Mount Diablo on a special train. The committee in charge of the affair consisted of A. P. Chipron, chairman; F. A. Stolph, R. B. Field and B. G. Franklin.

* * *

President Henry Evans, accompanied by Mrs. Evans, is a guest of the St. Francis. He will remain here several days.

It is probable that at the next meeting of the directors of the Fire Underwriters' Inspection Bureau an effort will be made to induce Fire Marshall J. W. Stevens of Portland, Ore., to accept the presidency which was vacated last week by the death of F. H. Porter. Stephens has made an admirable record which has attracted the favorable notice of underwriters all over the Coast.

* * *

The California Supreme Court has decided that it is not necessary to tender the return premium in order to effect a cancellation.

George Titcum has pleaded guilty of arson at Bellingham, Wash., and been sentenced to ten years at Walla Walla prison.

At the annual meeting of the Managers' Association of the Mutual Life, held in New York recently, W. L. Hathaway, manager of the company at San Francisco, was honored with the office of vice-president of the Western section.

The general agency firm of Chapman & Nauman has engaged R. H. Keagy as special agent to cover the Pacific Northwest field, with headquarters at Seattle. Mr. Keagy has been doing clerical work with the Royal & Queen office at San Francisco. He will assume the duties of his new position on June 15th.

Arthur F. Nicoll, who began work for the Hartford as special agent of the fire branch of the company's automobile department at San Francisco, will cover the central and northern field.

* * *

L. R. Weinmann, the insurance attorney, has moved his office from the Royal to the Merchants' Exchange building.

Joseph J. Scott resigned the office of United States Collector of Internal Revenue at San Francisco to accept the office of manager of the Insurance Federation of California, assuming his duties June 1st.

The receiver for the California branch of the Ancient Order United Workmen has brought suit to recover $4,500 from six beneficiaries of the Order who were paid benefits within four months of the date at which the concern was declared a bankrupt.

Gordon Thomson, secretary and actuary of the West Coast-San Francisco Life, has been appointed a member of the committee on resolutions of the American Life Convention in lieu of Mr. Sonntag, vice-president of the company, recently deceased.

W. S. Brainard & Sons have purchased the extensive agency of the late Ben M. Rapp of Long Beach, Cal.

* * *

A. McAllister, formerly with the Hartford Accident, has been engaged as special agent by Lamb & Dowell, general agents for the automobile department of the California Fire.

The sale of delinquent stock of the National Funding Company of Los Angeles, has been postponed to June 20th. The large majority of stockholders have declined to pay a sixty cent assessment levied several months ago.

A final dividend of eight dollars and sixty-five cents is being paid by receiver Hill of the Walla Walla Fire of Washington.

Companies affiliated with the Pacific Coast Automobile Conference have concluded to amend their contracts by eliminating the exclusion against the payment of loss due to striking the road bed, street or railway rails or ties, without additional charge. Consequential damages will also be considered as a loss under property damage endorsement, though the endorsement itself reads that property alone is covered.

* * *

On June 14th, the San Francisco Brokers' Association will consider a resolution to donate one thousand dollars to the Young Women's Christian Association, and a like sum to the Exposition preservation fund.

Dr. Byron Haines, Dentist, has resumed practice at his office in Gunst Building, S. W. corner Geary and Powell streets.

In Budweiser you get a flavor and a bouquet that are invariably the same—delightful and distinctive. These qualities are directly due to our exclusive use of Imported Saazer Hops. These hops cannot now be imported, owing to the war. We anticipated this situation before the embargo went on. In the hop house shown is stored a sufficient supply to last through 1917—You profit by our foresight.

—The dark horses proved to be of light weight.

—The Russ army now deserves to be called the Rush army.

—Roosevelt says he is out of politics. If only he would run out of words!

—The Democrats should be able to count on the barbers and the safety razor makers.

—Sweets and pastry have gone up on account of the price of sugar. Then fewer indigestion tablets will go down.

—Roosevelt has found out that one cannot desert and betray his party, then get back under cover of noisy speeches.

—Here's to the two Charlies—the gay and riotous Charlies. Really, those chaps are too frivolous to head a national ticket.

—“Man Dodges Bullets Fired by Woman,” says newspaper headline. He should go into the army, where his skill would be of value.

—Dr. J. Grant Lyman has been convicted of fraud—so what he saved by acting as his own attorney will not do him any particular good.

—The Republican convention gave the suffragists half a loaf—and to make the spirit of giving match the gift, they gave it in a half-hearted way.

—Chicago is now able to hear its own noise, smothered and drowned for a week in the uproar of political oratory, brass bands and favorite son yells.

—The British have captured two towns in East Africa. The capture of a gun or two on the West front would have a lot more effect on the result of the war.

—“I couldn't think of criticising Colonel Roosevelt,” Hiram Johnson told a newspaper reporter. Which isn't far from saying that one cannot think at all.

—Local baseball player fined $50 for the language he used in abusing another player. It was announced that while fouls were unavoidable, foul language had to be cut out.

—The man who doesn't get a vacation can console himself with the reflection that there are no mosquitoes in Market street, and that poison oak does not grow in asphalt.

—California's tax income will be twenty million dollars for the next fiscal year—five million more than the previous year. Wouldn't that make a tax-eater's mouth water?

—Chicago hotels reaped a half million dollar harvest during the convention. From the accounts of the noise and turmoil that the delegates made, the innkeepers earned whatever they got.

—Some of the city officials are uttering wails of protest because favoritism is shown in appointments to municipal positions. Interpreted, this means that their own favorites did not get the jobs.

—Experts are at work trying to find what is the matter with our city government. They have plenty of material to work on, and if their report is frank, it will consist of one word: Everything.

—German naval expert says the Teuton fleet thoroughly crippled the British ships, then went back to its base. But he doesn't explain what rule of naval warfare kept them from completing the work of destruction after rendering the British helpless.

—Purse-snatcher's plea is that he stole in order to get money with which to buy a birthday present for his little daughter. He knows human nature well enough to realize that there are a lot of sentimental sobbers who will believe that sort of a story.

—We read with interest that August Belmont has made a settlement in five figures on the chorus girl who married his son. As five figures includes all sums from $10,000 to $99,999, there is plenty of room for speculation as to how much the young lady got.

—San Francisco has a child prodigy who at seven years of age was qualified to enter high school, and who at eight has started on a world tour and will write a book on her experiences. It would be consistent with her precocity to come back with a husband and family.

—The soldierettes in San Francisco stick to skirts, while their sistern in the East who are studying first aid to the shattered prefer to wear trousers in camp. It is only on rare occasions like this that we are constrained to hand the medal for intelligence to the Eastern woman.

—There hasn't been a prisoner in the county jail in Yuba City for six months; not a marriage license has been issued in three months; the city marshall's only official act in the past year has been to kill a sick dog; and all the undertaking shops have closed. The last is a pity—there's nobody left to bury the town.

—Former Police Chief Petersen, of Oakland, speaking in New Jersey, said that sometimes a town was burdened by a demagogic, fake reform, uneducated mayor. Immediately, Mayor Davie of Oakland raised a piercing shriek of agony—Petersen had no right to talk about him that way. A Petersen did not mention or even hint at a name, the public should feel indebted to Davie for revealing his own estimate of himself.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

CLEAN-CUT WORK OF THE REPUBLICAN ELEPHANT.

The iron-willed masters of the Republican party, in convention assembled, entirely ignored overtures of the Progressives for unity and practically threw them into the limbo of "has beens." Roosevelt overplayed his hand in the political chicanery that marked the gathering of the clans, and the Republican leaders, cognizant of his bluffing, and confident that numbers of the Progressives would naturally drift back to their old party, winked the other eye, got down to the business of putting over the slate and demonstrating to the country that they have every confidence in their ability "to go it alone." They did not even deem it necessary to skin the Moose and tack its hide to their wigwam. The short, sharp, and clean-cut way in which Hughes' nomination was carried, when the word was given, shows that Murray Crane, Penrose, Smoot, et als., some dozen national politicians, backed by the Steel Trust, constitutes the backbone of the Republican party. The "Boss" insignia worn by Mark Hanna has been divided among a bunch of Senators. Hughes is an ideal candidate for their purpose, cold, shrewd, an adept in formulating appealing promises and party platforms that are later used as fire material to light his "jollification party," if he is successful. With the present issues before the voters of the country, Wilson will win.

It is significant that when the Roosevelt delegates bolted from the Republican Convention four years ago because of unfair treatment by the Old Guard, they organized the Progressive party, and the introductory paragraph of their planks set forth their dissent from the old party as follows: "Behind the ostensible government sits enthroned an invisible government, owing no allegiance and acknowledging no responsibility to the people. To destroy this invisible government, to dissolve the unholy alliance between corrupt business and corrupt politics, is the first task of the statesmanship of the day." This condition set forth by them still prevails.

CENSORS AND THE MOVIES. One wing of the local movie men are flagrantly inconsistent or else they are playing both ends against the middle in their greedy efforts to gather nickels and dimes. The point is illustrated in the number of films of a sensational character appealing to sex which have recently appeared in this city. The titles are evidently prepared to catch the attention of those inclined to pruriency. In other cases the published details of the reels are furnished in a way to deceive readers into thinking that something of frou-frou friskiness will be illustrated in all its naughtiness. Some of this clan of movie managers bait their advertisements with salacious suggestions when they know full well that the censors have not and would not pass anything of that character. The meat of the matter is that this class of movie managers would delight to go the limit were the censors removed. Such characters are the bane of any calling they enter, and circumscribe the efforts and hopes of the leaders who strive to develop it on broad and lasting lines. Claim has been made that the field of the movie is educational. No doubt of it, but these catch-penny pirates in the business misuse its privileges and invite the stigma of censorship. The movie business would come into its own and bear a much higher reputation were these nickel-seeking bandits repressed in some way. Till then, censorship will hang heavy, heavy over the movie business, a condition that an American detests but dares not change—till the generation of nickel buccaneers come to their senses, if they ever do.

UNCOMFORTABLE, BUT HE STICKS

—Satterfield in the Knoxville Sentinel

SOME HUMANIZING RESULTS OF THE WAR.

The war continues to show every indication that it marks a turning point in the world's affairs, commercially, industrially, socially and financially. It is already noticeable that capital and labor are already coming to a more reasonable understanding both in Europe and in this country. Co-operation seems to be looming ahead with the close of the war, especially in the belligerent countries. If so, it will be only a matter of time when the same relation will materialize in America and other competing industrial countries. Profit sharing, somewhat after the Ford system, is already in existence in this country and is growing. Mutual helpfulness is in the air, part of the propaganda drilled into the belligerent nations.

This feeling is being extended not only between capital and labor in this country, but between corporations and the government as well. By the time peace is established this movement will be in active working order and widely recognized. It is this feeling, this sense of confidence, among those mermeated with this movement, that contributes the assurance that many of the international trade, financial and industrial problems will be handled satisfactorily following on the heels of the declaration of peace, when the nerve-racked belligerents lay down their weapons and pick up the tools of industry.

PUBLISHERS' TROUBLES.

The continued rising prices of white paper, inks and other materials in turning out daily papers and weekly periodicals is becoming so burdensome that publishers in certain sections of the country are meeting for the purpose of finding some way to relieve the situation without going bankrupt, a blow the ordinary publisher naturally abhors. The big newspapers, with their enormous circulation, are hit hardest, for every rise in the several materials eats deeply into the circulation and the advertising profits, and the greater the circulation the greater the loss. Under the best prevailing conditions the profit on an Eastern paper delivered at the home is almost a hair margin. This condition explains the recent big growl at the recent convention of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association held in New York. A thorough thrashing of the situation developed that the only action to protect themselves was to raise the subscription price, a step they were all anxious to dodge. The result was that each publisher was left to fight for his own preservation and face the problem of the loss as best he could. The association as a whole refused to vote on an increase of price in circulation. Eastern publishers are accordingly hoping that somehow, somehow, subscribers and advertisers, between them, will bridge in some way with increased pay the chasm of shortage now facing the editors. The publishers in Pennsylvania had no compunctions in preserving their bank accounts and handily settled the matter by raising the price of their one cent papers to two cents.

CAMERA STORIES OF EVENTS OF THE WEEK

1. Mrs. Margaret H. Sanger, who has stirred up the country with her lectures on "Birth Control" and prolific child bearing. Her visit in California attracted the strong support of radicals in the problems of the day.

3. An episode in the big water front strike of the longshoremen in San Francisco. Employers and stockholders handling their own freight to meet their contracts. The trio at the truck are (right to left) Captain C. W. Saunders, Wm. Roth and Matthew Lindsey.

2. The old Russian barracks at Fort Ross, the site of an old time prosperous Russian settlement, one of the historical sights of early California, and a favorite visiting place of tourists that favor Mendocino and Humboldt Counties.

4. Mrs. George T. Marye and her daughter, Helen, who have returned home to San Francisco from Russia, following the resignation of George T. Marye as Ambassador to Russia.

5. Chief of Police White, who has taken a vacation after a series of strenuous shooting conflicts with notorious criminals.

TOWN CRIER

—The war of the direct actionists in this country is developing a condition that will in time make the hinges of the government squeak and demand costly repairing in time, money and spirit. America boasts of its great financiers, business men, politicians, its able doctors and lawyers, but not of one recognized broad and deep thinker on independent social and industrial conditions. Every man of gray matter calibre is chasing the dollar, and the rest are grubbing along trying to find their daily bread with no time to waste on prayers. This latter class contribute to the ranks of the direct actionists. A few days ago they again called attention to themselves by dynamiting the steel structures supporting the high tension wires of the United Railroads, that transmit the electric current to that company into this city. "The police have a good description of the man supposed to have engineered the job,"—that's all. Except that if he is caught and sent to the penitentiary, another direct actionist will quietly take up his tools and job, and another "dynamiting bit of work" will develop just as naturally as the cabbage crop in South San Francisco. The convictions following the dynamiting of the Los Angeles Times never made a dent in the dynamiting program of the direct actionists of the country. In fact, it stimulated them to more activities. A specialist in this national disease is needed, and needed badly.

—The Board of Supervisors started the long expected scrap, this week, with the United Railroads, by ordering the construction of tracks laid parallel to those of the company from Kearny street to the eastern portal of the Twin Peaks tunnel. The attempted coup is an effort to cover the drooping receipts of the Van Ness avenue and Ferry lines since the Exposition closed. Interminable law suits will follow. In fact, the United Railroads has already obtained an injunction from the court, and further proceedings in laying the rails are already tied up. There are signs in the air that certain politicians are trying to get the railroad company's goat and fixtures. The method smacks of the kind used in the early '50's when the redoubtable rounders, the Hounds, exercised political control of the city and ignored the rights of corporations and citizens. President Lilienthal of the United Railroads has made a just and equitable offer to the city regarding the sale of the property to the city which should be met with the consideration it deserves, and not with bushwhacking methods.

—The younger wing of the Authors' League of this country is working overtime to unionize the league and transform it into an integral part of the American Federation of Labor. It is evident that the writer's art is making a gigantic sweeping circle around old-time Grubb street. The elect of the younger writers are in this movement, reflecting a symptom that they are greatly disgruntled over the way publishers are handing out checks and fame. The White Rats, an organization of actors, are shouting hallelujahs in a similar movement to demand better treatment and better pay from the theatrical Molochs. War may be all that Sherman claimed for it, but the struggles in the trenches aren't a marker to the flying wedges of the authors and actors in trying to get their share of the Great American Dollar. No wonder the eagle screams perennially on the back of a silver dollar. Every hand is grabbing at its tail feathers.

—British wits are ridiculing the German practice of "nailing full" the wooden statues of their war heroes, von Hindenburg, Mackensen and the rest; the citizens doing the hammering to pay a small price for the privilege, the total sum collected going to Red Cross and like purposes. "Statue nailing" was one form of eczema that developed early in the war before any of the belligerents had acquired their new mental gait. Even the Germans are now scoffing at it. That eminent aesthetic critic, Professor Pazaurek, now dubs it the "nailing nuisance," and suggests that one of the famous "nail statues," filled with thirty tons of iron nails, be planted on the Bosphorus to be used as a lighthouse. Apparently fashions in war statues are as fleeting as those in Easter bonnets. War has no edge on Peace when it comes to a question of fashion.

THE NEW SHIPPING BILL.

The new shipping bill, which has now passed the House is quite different from the one over which a prolonged contest occurred last year, but makes no stronger appeal to the shipping interests. In deference to the opposition to government ownership this measure provides that the corporation which it is proposed to form, and to which the government is authorized to subscribe $50,000,000, shall be dissolved and its ships sold within five years from the end of the European war. The government's investment is therefore to be temporary, but a permanent Board of Shipping Commissioners is to be created, composed of the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of Commerce and five members appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate, the appointed members to receive a salary of $10,000 per year. This Board is to have powers over common carriers by water analogous to that exercised by the Interstate Commerce Commission over the railroads. It will review all agreements between carriers and have authority to modify them and to fix rates.

There can be no dissent from the view that the United States ought to have more shipping under its own flag, and it would have been supplied long ago but for laws which have made it much cheaper to use transportation facilities under other flags. Congress is apparently of the opinion that this state of affairs can be remedied by more restrictive legislation.

SELLING MORGAN'S ART TREASURES.

Three more collections of art treasures gathered by the late J. Pierpont Morgan have been sold by his son, J. P. Morgan, for $4,000,000. The transaction included the Renaissance bronzes, 200 pieces; the Limoges enamels, 150 pieces; and the Italian majolicas, 150 pieces. More than $15,000,000 already has been realized by sales from the Morgan collection, the bulk of which is still on view at the Metropolitan museum of art. It is reported in art circles that the buyers were acting not as agents but as spectators. The collection of Renaissance bronzes is said to be excelled only by the Spalding collection in the Victoria and Albert museum in London. It took the late Mr. Morgan ten years to complete it. The collections of enamels and majolicas are regarded as the finest in the world.

—"As a result of their long daily glides over the ice they will be married in the spring," says a report of a romance between a Chicago girl and her skating instructor. And in the spring the ice will melt, after which points of uncongeniality may develop.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Highbrows in Society.

There is no longer a divided opinion in the younger set about the advantages of an Eastern education.

Educators, America over, may agree that the California schools will, when properly applied, massage the brow to the standardized heights of the Eastern halls of learning.

The younger set spurns such testimony, and will admit to its High and Mighty Esteem no graduates of the Temperate Zone.

Only a season ago, and the majority of the buds and belles questioned the real intelligence of any girl who would waste four years of her life at one of the Eastern colleges, when she might have been spending that time in the open matrimonial market of her native home. To be sure, the fairest-minded among them admitted that now and then a society girl superimposed a college education upon the finishing school process without seriously undermining her social worth. But on the whole, the academic slant could not be counted on to bring forth a cheer from anyone—least frequently of all from those who had gone off at that tangent!

But now all is changed. The women who went to any one of the big Eastern colleges for girls no longer interrogate the worth of college training.

The girls who did not go to college have frequent twinges of regret. As for the girls who have no Eastern training to their credit, they are now absolutely discredited in the race for supremacy.

Why?

Not because "east is east, and west is west;" not because the first letter of the alphabet gets broader the nearer it approaches the Atlantic seaboard; not because an Eastern education can be used for a folding doormat in the halls of Intellect.

The unanimity of flattering opinion which envelops all Eastern graduates in its warm glow is manufactured at the Skating Rink!

Frozen Favorites.

There the experts on the ice are those who have spent their school years where winter buckles on skates.

If you don't believe that college education (with geographical inhibitions) has taken on a new value, come with me and let us join this group of girls. Here they are in a box, with plenty of room for us to crowd in. There is Anna Peters just down from the Peters ranch at Stockton, looking lovely and rested, thanks to the rigid discipline about early hours imposed by her mother.

There is Leslie Miller, who cannot bear the idea of summering more than comfortable motoring distance from the ice rink—and as her mother shares her enthusiasms, she manages to spend much of her time where the artificial ice cracks its perpetual joke on summer.

There is Marie Louise Black, with her Southern guest, Miss Marshall, both of them happy over the encomiums of their instructors, who have given them an hour of expert help.

There may be one or two others in the box, and the conversation may run like this. It is Anna Peters, let us say, who speaks, and a bit wistfully at that:

"Look at Flora Hobart and Ethel Hussey," she commands, and then adds: "Oh, don't I wish that I had spent four years at Vassar!"

So of course we all look at Mrs. Walter Hobart and her sister, Mrs. Hussey, and it's so much pleasure to look that any one would be willing to keep it up indefinitely!

They are unquestionably two of the most stunning women in this neck of the woods, and as they skate together in perfect rhythm with the music, with the long, free sweep of those who have a frigid past, one realizes the difference between such skating and that of the beginners who manage to cut a pretty figure with an instructor, but could not get out on the floor alone or with a fellow tyro.

Mrs. Robert Hayes Smith, Mrs. Andrew Welch, Mrs. C. O.

G. Miller, any of the girls in the box, Mrs. Fred McNear, Mrs. Will Taylor and others, have all acquired a sense of perfect abandon to the joys of skating so long as their partners are professionals or adepts, but they do not any of them dare alone the long sweeps and swirls and dips and spurs and turns and figures of the skaters long accustomed to the ice.

Just watch Mrs. Hobart and Mrs. Hussey some day and then you, too, will understand why any girl might well voice with real regret that she had not gone to Vassar!

Oh, there is no doubt that the society women with "higher education" (always providing that the height is due easterly) are putting it all over their unacademic sisters!

Perfectly Attuned Wedding Bells.

The scent of the orange blossom can always be counted upon to perfume the month of June, but not always does it garland it so decoratively as at the wedding of Miss Marie Louise Bryant and Roland C. Foerster. Of the many pretty weddings to the credit of St. Luke's this will have to be written down as one of the daintiest in the annals of the church.

The bride, who is a very attractive girl, looked lovely in her bridal robes, and introduced a novel touch in her bouquet which will undoubtedly be adopted by other girls. The bouquet was a rainbow affair with all the pastel shades of pink, lavender, blue and yellow represented, leaving the duty of striking the white note to a shower of lilies of the valley that fringed the bouquet.

The bride's attendants were the Misses Leslie Underhill, Gertrude Curtis, Vivian Gurney, Florence

Fisher and Albertine Pendleton and a rosebud garden of girls they were in bouffant frocks of white over pink, with picturesque garden hats bobbing from their arms, filled to the brim with flowers.

This gave a lovely out-doors touch to the wedding procession, as though the girls had just come in from some enchanting garden.

The musical service was particularly lovely, the Knickerbocker Concert Trio rendering the usual things with the artist finish and musical significance that lift them out of the commonplace. The Foersters on their return from a honeymoon trip will occupy the house in Lake street which is in readiness for them.

Tributes to Mr. Rich.

A number of informal affairs are being given for Mr. and Mrs. Obadiah Rich, who leave in a few days for a visit to Mr. Rich's old home in Salem, Mass. The visit will necessarily be a very short one, for much to the delight of Mr. Rich's countless friends he will assume the management of the Clift Hotel on July 1st, having been recently elected vice-president and manager. A number of society people make that hotel their home, and they are delighted with the selection of Mr. Rich.

The Passing of a Grande Dame.

Mrs. Malcolm Whitman's sorrow over the death of her aged grandmother is lightened considerably by the good fortune which brought her to California just in time to spend the last hours at the bedside of the lovely old lady who had been mother as well as grandmother to her. Mrs. Easton, during the year, had many times expressed the belief that her days were numbered, and she as frequently expressed the hope that in the end Mrs. Whitman would be with her, and that she would have another look at the Whitman babies.

On Wednesday, June 7th, Mrs. J. D. Smedberg was hostess at a luncheon in the Hotel Oakland, honoring Mrs. N. O. Shively. The decoration scheme was carried out very prettily in pink. Mrs. Smedberg's guests were Mesdames H. C. Morris, Mark Roth, C. R. Nelson, W. H. McCabe, Fred W. Johnson and Charles Scheibal.

On Monday, June 12th, a wedding breakfast was served in the Hotel Oakland to Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Lehe and seventy-five guests. Mrs. Lehe before her marriage was Miss Ruth Irvin.

Among the prominent arrivals at the Hotel Oakland last week were: Mrs. Frank L. Wildes of Carson, Nev.; Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Pollard of Alameda; Mr. and Mrs. C. Carpenter of St. Louis; A. E. Havens of Chicago; Miss Catherine Walker, Miss Jean Walker and C. C. Johnson of Pasadena; Mr. and Mrs. S. F. Zombro and son of Los Angeles; Mr. H. E. Lathrop and wife of Coronado; H. H. Atkinson of Tonopah, Nevada; Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Eaton of Berkeley.

Society is preparing for an event of its young summer days, with the Cubist-Futurist Fete Champetre which Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Crane will give at the St. Francis Hotel Monday evening, June 26th. Fete Champetre, of course, means merely a midsummer revel out of doors, but this one will be in the Colonial and Italian ballrooms, the bay and orange trees bordering a false wall that is to transform it into a neo-archaic dwelling, giving the only hint of out-of-doors about the evening's function.

Albert Farr, the architect, has been given the difficult and expensive task of changing the St. Francis ballroom walls for one night. He expects to build lovely lavender ladies and gorgeous red flamingos, brilliant green dragons, spouting bright orange fire, and have them silhouetted on the muslin like an Egyptian tapestry. It will be sort of a combination of Leon Bakst and Bertram Hartman, Matisse, and a little of Farr himself, when finished, and will present the familiar ballroom in an entirely new aspect.

All of the revelers, of course, are expected to come in costume of either the Futurist or Cubist design to give the affair the proper color. The ball is to be patterned after the Quat'z Arts in Paris, and fun is to run freely through the assembly in true old San Francisco style.

The Cranes have secured several popular beaux to serve on the floor committee—including Edward M. Greenwal, Thornwell Mullally, Robert Eyre. William Lange and William F. Humphries.

The Cranes have covered their old dansant list pretty thoroughly in sending out cards for the fete, but the attendance will in no way be restricted to that or any other set. The idea is to give everybody a real old fashioned San Francisco mid-summer time, and to show that San Francisco can be a summer resort if its breezy climate is only put to the proper use.

Mrs. Henry T. Scott, Mrs. Morris Meyerfeld, Mrs. Stuart Haldorn, Mrs. Alison Weeks, Mrs. Christian De Guigne, Mrs. Robert Hayne, Mrs. Melville Schweitzer, Mrs. Daulton Mann, Mrs. Alexander Wilson, Mrs. Max Sloss, Mrs. Mark Gerstle, Mrs. Frederick Burnham, Mrs. Gerard Howe, and a number of other well known women are taking an active interest in the success of the affair.

A rare genius in dance music has been discovered by Manager Woods of the St. Francis Hotel, who found him playing rag-time in the wilds of Boyes Springs. Woods admits that he is no expert in classic music, but he claims that he has a keen appreciation of rhythm and time in dance music. Accordingly "Art" Hickman is now installed as dance music leader in the Rose Room of the St. Francis, and he leads his musicians—with a drum. Can you beat it? Anyway, the Rose Room now has the greatest dancing vogue San Francisco has known. When Joan Sawyer was giving her exhibitions in the St. Francis her manager protested that Art's inability to read music made it impossible for him to do justice to Joan's new pieces. But "Art" tried it over once by ear, and after that Joan would stand for nothing else but his seductive barbaric measures. Efforts have been made to emulate "Art's" success, but they always degenerate into mere music. "How does he do it?" repeated an old-time orchestra leader. "He doesn't do it. No man leads an orchestra with a drum. He gets away with it."

—Mrs. Bilton—I think you're the dearest, sweetest man that ever was. Bilton (suspiciously)—Were you at some millinery opening to-day?—Judge.

—She—Dancing is fine for people, don't you think? He—Yes; it exhausted Smith's wife so that she's gone into a sanitarium for a year.—Life.

FASHION'S FADS AND FRILLS

With the first sultry days of summer, one naturally turns to white, or the pale-toned linens and cottons. Owing to the popularity of stripes and checks, it is safe to say that it will not be an all-white season, but all-white is to be very popular, nevertheless.

Wash Satin in Suits and Dresses.

One of the coolest and most novel of the new summer materials, both for suits and dresses, is wash satin. This comes in the plain flat tones and also in white. It is a practical fabric, too, as it sheds dust, does not wrinkle readily and launders perfectly. Coats and blouses, too, for wear with skirts of linen, the corded cottons, or the regulation suit skirt of serge or gabardine, are being fashioned of wash satin, most effectively. A tennis coat, in Norfolk fashion, a belted Russian, or one of the various other peplum models, developed in a soft tone of satin, may be worn for morning, sports wear, or for afternoons.

The sheer linens, cottons and silks are all very popular for frocks and blouses. Pale tones and white predominate. Organ-dies and voiles are dainty and cool for afternoon frocks, and net and taffeta are combined effectively for evening and the more elaborate afternoon dresses.

Separate Coats and Skirts.

How the separate skirt could ever have been laid aside for a season or two, as it was, is indeed a mystery when one considers how very practical it is. Its popularity this season, however, is quite making up for the year or two of indifference. Separate skirts of taffeta, satin, faille and similar silks are being worn considerably for all daytime purposes, combined with blouses of Georgette, chiffon and the other sheer silks. For sports purposes, striped and checked linens, canvas weaves, cotton velours, corduroys, and the various white corded cottons are favored, as well as the novelty wash satins and jersey silks; wool jersey in bright tones of rose, green, gold and like shades is also popular.

The separate skirt and the contrasting coat are particularly smart for sports purposes. Some of the good shops are showing cream-white serge skirts, combined with wash satin blouses, and coats of blue serge, or the novelty striped silks or linens, for tennis, golf and the like. This combination of white skirt and blue coat is not new, of course, but it is unusually effective.

Handkerchief Linen Blouses.

Organdy, voile, crepe de Chine and the wash satins are practical and popular for blouses this summer, and a particularly dainty revival is handkerchief linen. Although one expects linen to crush more easily than almost any of the other materials, it is nevertheless cool and fresh for summer wear. There are some especially pretty stripes and patterns in these linens, combinations of rose, French blue, pale greens, and the various other pastel shades, now favored in the crepes, voiles and other sheer cottons and silks. Two effective peplum blouses are illustrated here; one is of pongee, a slip-on model, finished at the normal waist with the new elastic shirring, and the other is of pale pink organdy. The pongee blouse is worn with a pongee skirt, making a frock for mornings or informal afternoon purposes. The organdy blouse, which closes down the front with loops and tiny crystal buttons, is belted with a narrow black grosgrain ribbon belt, and is worn with one of the new black satin skirts. This is one of the novel combinations of the season for afternoon wear.

Neck finishes and cuffs offer particularly interesting possibilities this season. A well fitting cuff has much to do with the success of the gown, and may be flattering or decidedly unbecoming to the hand. Although one sees but few short sleeves, as the season advances they will, in all probability, be as much favored as in seasons past. High collars seem to have entirely given way to the open throat, which proves that Dame Fashion has more of common sense to deal with just now than ever before in her reign.

The Hand-Painted Fad

Having reached its height, it is said the hand-painted notion is on the wane. Perhaps the last thing to be talked about is the painted shoe-top; black patent leather shoes, with white tops, are finished with a delicately colored fleur-de-lis or orchid, and canvas shoes also are stenciled effectively to carry out the sheer color scheme of the frock. For low shoes and pumps the stenciled stocking is the thing.

Pink Organdy Blouse, Black Satin Skirt

Pongee Frock with Slip-On Blouse.

PERSONAL ADVENTURES IN THE PAINTED WORLD

Critical Review of Audience at "Lady Frederick" and Audiences Generally

BY HENRY McDONALD SPENCER

Although a hired fault-finder, I have a sense of fair play, and therefore feel it my duty to distribute disesteem impartially. In addition to criticising plays and players, I have had occasion to comment adversely on the pernicious activities of that merry troupe of flag-wavers—the journalistic-reporters who exhaust the synonyms of eulogy in indiscriminate and fulsome praise of every theater production.

Therefore, it appears to be about time to sting the audience, it being the only factor of the playhouse hitherto immune.

I protest against the barbarous custom of disturbing the action of the drama by applause, especially on the entrance of a star or a favorite. The thing is senseless, inartistic, an unwarrantable invasion of the rights of others, and as I hope to be able to prove, utterly useless.

A modern drama is a closely woven, organic whole; every word spoken has reference to something before or after, and there is no more reason why—until the curtain falls at the end of an act at least—the action should be interrupted than there is in the case of a symphony or in the middle of a song.

Furthermore, and what is still more important, applause destroys the sense of illusion, perhaps never to be recaptured; it throws the performer out of his stride; or, again, it necessitates the author writing in some purely irrelevant matter, that can well be missed, to provide for the first entrance of his star, or to cover up after some telling point which will excite enthusiasm.

In the tense play of to-day, in any play worth while, the spectator lives in the action of the play. He feels what the characters are supposed to feel, and his consciousness, as it were, is projected on the stage. The phrase, "getting the play over the footlights," is wrong; it should be: "Drawing the audience over the footlights."

How, then, can this illusion be preserved if the actor steps out of his play personality and into his private personality even for a moment—the very constraint and awkwardness of the acknowledging bow is evidence of how the performer is affected.

It is argued that applause helps the actor, and through reaction stimulates the mood of the audience. If this is altogether true, all I can say is, that in the interests of the true art of the theatre the players will have to do without this assistance.

But the greatest tribute which an actor can receive in a really serious piece is a tense silence, a silence that almost can be heard, and believe me, the actor is very sensitive to this kind of reception. Furthermore, if he knows that silence on the part of the audience during the act is a convention, like the removal of a woman's hat, he will not expect it, and will not suffer in consequence. And that is an analogous case. If the theatre managers recognize the right of all of their patrons to an unobstructed view of the stage, why should not all be entitled equally to preserving their illusion unshattered. Of course the foregoing does not apply to vaudeville, musical comedy or other performances not depending on a definite nexus.

The time for applause, and the only time for applause, in the serious theatre is after the fall of the curtain ending an act.

Lady Frederick at the Alcazar

The foregoing is apropos in a measure of the performance of "Lady Frederick" at the Alcazar. Not only the star, Miss Chrystal Herne, but half a dozen of the favorites, were given a "reception," which made "Lady Frederick" a joke at times. This was in addition to the applause throughout the piece occasioned by the acting or lines.

Somerset Maughn belongs to the Pinero-Jones-Wilde period or school of English playwrights, and is not in the modern movement of intensive drama as exemplified by Galsworthy, Barker, Houghton, Cosmo Hamilton, Masfield, Synge and St. John Hankin, to say nothing of Shaw, Barrie, Bennett and a number of others.

He lacks the artistic conscience and sincerity, and the poetic vision of the new school; therefore is hardly to be criticised except in reference to his own type.

The play is witty and ingenious, and, so far as the author's work is concerned, has very much the atmosphere of the great world. That the ending is absolutely inartistic and lacks inevitability, doubtless is due to the play belonging to the period of the happy-ending fetish. However, as this fetish is no longer bowed down to by the best men, it is hardly worth mentioning further.

I was very much pleased with Chrystal Herne, who conveyed the illusion that Lady Frederick was a real person, if not quite enough of a vampire, and not merely an actress going through a role; in fact, she is the most accomplished of the leading ladies who have appeared at the Alcazar during the present wheel system in vogue there. Her personality is attractive, and while she is not so obviously handsome as her immediate predecessor, she will never fail to charm.

And after all, that is the main thing with a woman, especially an actress, isn't it?

The company was not so successful as in the previous play—which was purely American—and I cannot say that the performers other than Miss Herne conveyed in any degree the atmosphere of the fashionable English world. Jimmy Gleason, who is so popular in the clowning roles, was particularly out of place as a kind of male ingenue, a lovelorn marquis of twenty-two with a rent roll of fifty thousand pounds a year.

Pantages Presents Meritorious Musical Comedy

This week at Pantages there is a half hour of musical comedy every bit as good as what you would pay two dollars for in the ordinary theatre, and I am astonished that the house has not made more of a fuss over this week's bill. Believe me, if you feel the way I do about gazing on the talcumed charms of the show girl you should not fail to visit this show; although I cannot speak so well of the stage setting, which shows lack of imagination, and co-operation on the part of designer and producer. However, this should not be criticised severely, as most of the more pretentious performances are equally lacking in taste.

Patricola, "The Queen of the Cabaret," was another act to write home about, and she is a most winsome and attractive entertainer.

Gertrude Clegg, the young lady who did such fearsome things on a bicycle, took my eye, and when she loses her nerve for

Why do not the producers learn something occasionally and take lessons from the modern art of stage setting as exemplified by Gordon Craig, Max Reinhardt and Leon Bakst? Then we would not have such an inartistic horror as a wood set of the mid-mutton chop whisker period for a background of the Egyptian dance given by Anita Peters Wright's Classical Dancers. If the dance has any value at all as a work of art, it is purely as a sensual appeal, and the senses cannot be gratified unless all within the range of vision is pleasing. The dancers themselves were acceptable, but at least two-thirds of the merit of such a performance is in the hands of the producer or designer. Among the young ladies who constituted "ensemble," the Misses Grace and Ruth Stewart shone for their pulchritude and grace. Which ones are they?

Grace La Rue is winsome and a trifle pathetic, but she has that mysterious thing called personality, and consequently made a hit with her audience.

The playlet of the week, "When the Tide Turned," with Maude Fealy, was a rather colorless vehicle for a capable actress, and again was vieux jeu. These are the important newcomers, aside from Dan Casey, who evidently is a "favorite son," and therefore is not judged on his merits as an entertainer.

I was disappointed that Mrs. Cisneros was so far affected by the remarks of a critic as to omit "The Star Spangled Banner" this week. We all know that the song has no particular merit musically, and patriotic songs generally are more noted for sentiment than melody. But if the vaudeville houses do not make a patriotic appeal occasionally, we will have no outlet for our enthusiasm. In England, "God Save the King" closes every theatrical entertainment.

Advance Notices

"The Argonauts" at Columbia Theatre. It was quite natural that Edward L. Grafton, producer of "The Argonauts of California," should have selected San Francisco as the place for his premiere, the story told in this great ten-reel cinema master drama, being essentially that of early San Francisco. The splendid, romantic period of '49 lends itself admirably to the imagination, and no more fascinating chapter has ever been written into the life story of the human race than that of the gold discovery at Sutter's Mill, and the tremendous migration of adventurers which followed it. As an outgrowth of the wild spirit of the time, lawlessness reigned for a considerable period, and it was only with the organization of the famous Vigilantes that order was restored. "The Argonauts of California" is one of the most pretentious film dramas ever screened. In the making, which are declared to be the greatest ever cameraized, seven thousand people were used, and the whole production is on the same elaborate scale. The opening performance at the Columbia Theatre this Sunday afternoon, June 18th, should command the widest attention from the people of this city.

Orpheum.—The Orpheum announces for the coming week one of the best, most novel and most varied programs ever offered in vaudeville. Nat M. Wills, who has made countless thousands roar with laughter, will present his comedy classic, "The Happy Tramp." His monologues and songs are all new this season, and as timely and bright as ever. There is but one Nat Wills, and the only complaint San Francisco audiences can urge against him is that his visits are too few and far between. Willard Clarke ranks among the few farceurs who have a thorough and judicious appreciation of the true spirit of comedy. His contribution will consist of a farce by Lawrence Grattan entitled "Who Owns the Flat," which is rich in humor and surprising complications and deals in the most diverting manner with a friendly dispute as to the right of possession of a flat. The American Grand Opera Singers, Miss Ethel Albright and Mario Rodolf, who have sung in the leading opera houses of Europe, will be heard in a program which includes a number of their greatest successes. The Gladiators, two men of superb physique and the attire of Roman Gladiators, will give a remarkable exhibition of strength and gymnastic ability, performing in a manner of cleverness and astounding feats. "Her Decision," a dramatic sketch by Marie Fealy, of which Eastern report speaks glowingly, will be presented by Marie Fealy and company. Grace La Rue, the International Star of Song, who has made one of the greatest hits in the history of vaudeville, will enter on the last week of her engagement, and will sing new songs. The Werner and Amaros Company, and the popular Dan P. Casey will also close their engagements with this bill. An entirely new motion picture, entitled "Seeing Yosemite via the Desmond Service," in which are presented the crags, domes, cascades and tallest and the oldest thing in the world, "The Mariposa Big Trees," will be an incident of this fascinating bill.

Pantages Theatre—"The Six Stylish Steppers," one of the fastest dancing acts in vaudeville; the Empire Comedy Four, one of the standard harmony quartets of vaudeville, and "The New Leader," a comedy playlet, with Jack Delman and his players, will be a strong trio of attractions which will top the new eight act show opening at the Pantages next Sunday. General Pisano, an ex-army officer in the Italian army, and his company of sharp shooters, will offer a genuine novelty. Morris and Sherwood, Those Southern Folks, Stephens, Bordeau and Bennett, in a comedy skit, "The Boy from Home," with the Fourteenth Chapter of the "Iron Claw," round out one of the best balanced bills of the season.

Beringer "Hour of Music"

At "An Hour of Music," given last Saturday afternoon by pupils of the Beringer Conservatory of Music at Kohler & Chase Hall, the following students participated in a well-rendered program: Miss Emily Muller, Miss Selma Gutfeld, Miss Dorothy Mayer, Miss Flora Flynn, Miss Dorothy Tiernan, Miss Lillian Lerche Smith, Miss Vernita Fellow, Miss Eleanor Alberti, Miss Monica Heffernan, Miss Charlotte Ibscher and Miss Zdenka Buben.

ART EXHIBITION OF CALIFORNIA ARTISTS.

The forthcoming exhibition of the work of California artists to be held in the Palace of Fine Arts at the Exposition Grounds opens with a private view and reception on Monday afternoon, June 19th, at three o'clock, at which a number of persons prominent in the world of society, as well as art, are expected to be present. Among these are: Mayor and Mrs. James Rolph, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. VanDerlynn Stow, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. H. Crocker, President and Mrs. Benjamin Ide Wheeler, Dr. and Mrs. David Starr Jordan, Mrs. Phoebe Hearst, Mrs. Emma Shafter Howard, Mr. and Mrs. Louis C. Mullgardt, Mrs. William Keith, Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Moore, Mr. and Mrs. John D. Trask, Mrs. Eleanor Martin, Mr. and Mrs. Frank C. Havens, Dr. Wm. S. Porter.

TWO DREAMERS.

In the mountains of Colorado some thirty years ago a freight train waited on a siding for another train to come and pass, and, as it waited, the locomotive engineer leaned out of his cab window gazing at the far-off mountain tops and dreaming. The fireman sat upon the tender, gazing into the purple haze, and he, too, was dreaming.

"What you dreaming about, John?" asked the fireman.

"I'm dreaming that I'm going to have a million dollars some day. And what's your dream, Cy?"

"That I'll write a real book some day and have it printed," answered the fireman.

Cy Warman, the fireman of the locomotive, became a poet and author, a writer of many books, and a singer of songs that touched the hearts of a whole continent. He died two years ago.

John A. Hill, the engineer, made his million as founder and publisher of the trade papers, Power, The American Machinist, Locomotive Engineer, Engineering and Mining Journal, Engineering News and The Coal Age. He put up a great building in New York, and was one of America's captains of industry. He died in January.

The dreams of both came true. Each saw the fulfillment of his wish. Each served in his own way the needs of his age.

SPORTS AND PASTIMES

Canadians Beat Olympics at Ice Hockey

Aside from lacrosse and possibly polo, ice-hockey unquestionably is the fastest game in the world, and it possesses greater interest for the onlooker than the former, as the playing field is small enough to be within range of the spectators' vision. The management of the Techau Tavern Ice Palace, therefore, is to be thanked for introducing this sport into San Francisco. Some one said that the inventor of a new dish was greater than a poet, and, perhaps, we should rank in the same category the introducer of a new sport.

Newly made ice-hockey fans, as well as old followers of the pastime who watched the Canadians defeat the Olympic Club men by six goals to three, last Monday night at Techau Tavern Ice Palace, realize there is a strenuous side to the ice sport. What happened when the San Francisco clubmen and the Polo Club cantered through the first game in California several weeks ago as compared to Monday night's session is as a fire-cracker to a 42 centimeter gun.

It is not that there was unfair play, for there was nothing of the sort in evidence, but it was a rough contest, as ice-hockey games naturally must be; there was speed that had not been in evidence when the game was first introduced, and there was a fighting spirit that caused the crowd filling the Palace to cheer for their favorites.

The Canadians, doubtless due to a long acquaintance with the pastime, outclassed their opponents in every department of the war that was waged. They showed far more speed; there was more perfect team work, and their play was the smoother.

Condition as well counted for the almost hour of play, and the ultimate winners were forcing the contest for most of the journey. W. R. Archibald, left wing of the Winged O boys, stood out as the best man on his squad, but with the Canadians it is hard to name one who overshadowed his fellows.

The forwards worked so well in unison with their backs, and both Wells and Thompson of the Canadians are entitled to credit. Due consideration must be given W. C. Clark, goaltender of the "Allies," who saved on many an occasion and did valiant work when the Olympic boys were pressing the hardest.

The Post-street men started off like winners, and with a rush that was almost bewildering to the spectators scored two goals within four minutes of the whistle. Archibald was responsible for both of them, and one was a pretty winging shot that followed a long rush from more than half the distance of the rink.

This setback served to arouse the Canadians, and for the remainder of the twenty-five minutes of play in the first half they came with a rush that threatened to sweep the Olympic men off their feet. Wells, opposing left wing, took the first score in seven minutes; Thompson, the other wing, registered four minutes later, and with an even score it remained for Demers, cover point, to break through the O. C. Guard for two more goals and a clean lead.

The first part of the second half saw the play slightly slower, but there were some fierce scrimmages that set the blood to tingling. Fred Burden, Olympic, drew first blood in two minutes with a nice goal, but the Canadians came tearing back, O'Malley and Thompson each registering to increase the lead.

The second half goals were scored in the first ten minutes of play, and thereafter there was some pretty blocking, with both goal tenders cheered for their defensive work.

More than anything that has happened in ice-skating circles has this game served to sharpen the appetites of the spectators for more hockey of the same sort.

The line-ups:

Goals scored:

First half—Archibald 2 (Olympics 2); Wells 1, Thompson 1, Demers 2 (Canadians 4).

Second half—Burden 1 (Olympics 1); O'Malley 1, Thompson 1 (Canadians 2).

Final score—Canadians 6; Olympics 2.

GO TO LOCAL BUNKER HILL CELEBRATION.

The 141st anniversary of the Battle of Bunker Hill will be celebrated this year at the Golden Gate Park. Prof. Charles H. Cassasa, leader of the Golden Gate Park Band, under the auspices of the Park Commissioners, will arrange a special patriotic program, beginning at 2 p. m, Saturday, June 17th. All citizens and patriots are invited to attend the exercises. For over 60 years the anniversary of the Battle of Bunker Hill has been appropriately commemorated by the Bunker Hill Association in California. The association took its growth from the Sanitation Committee which organized during the Civil War, and which corresponds to our Red Cross Committee of the present time. Mr. Wm. G. Badger was its president for over forty years, until his death in 1904, since which time S. M. Holladay has acted as president. He has been succeeded by his son, Burke Holladay. Many prominent Californians have taken part in the exercises, Hon. W. L. Barnes and his son, Wm. S. Barnes, Samuel M. Shortridge, Senator Geo. C. Perkins, Walter Leman, veteran actor, Joaquin Miller, Professor Knowlton of the School Department, and Alfred Wilkie. Most of these patriots have since passed away, but their patriotic spirit still lives, and the memory of our brave forefathers is still revered, and it is hoped that all who can will attend the exercises.

—Los Angeles showed certainly how secure is its culture when she displayed herself in her true colors last Sunday afternoon, on the occasion of the memorial services for the late Lord Kitchener. It was a solemn religious ceremonial, but the British Red Cross Society, with true British capacity for blundering, invited a Methodist parson of the name of Charles C. Selecman to orate, and he did orate. He gave a Fourth of July oration. He flung his mane over his shoulders, and he bawled and bawled. Britishers of sensibility left, and a wild and a cheering mob shouted itself hoarse over this preacher's vociferous shouts against "militarism." The British Red Cross Society of Los Angeles should be ashamed thoroughly of itself for having selected Selecman to orate. Heavens, what a name to adorn a British memorial service!

THE BETROTHAL.

This ring upon my finger, where the moonlight
 Mingles with a glow like firelight, both in one;
 With its flashing iridescence, like the starlight,
 And its hues of blended rainbow, rain and sun—
 Much I wonder when my glances fall upon it,
 And its beauty holds my spirit in its thrall,
 If I heard aright his whisper, yester-evening,
 Or was it just the moonlight after all?

White moonflowers were abloom upon the terrace,
 Where the jasmin-scented air was cool and sweet;
 We could hear the distant night-bird's tuneful wooing
 While we lingered by the rustic garden-seat.
 The silver tides embraced the sandy beaches—
 But O, the moon, the moon bewitched me quite;
 Perhaps it was that pulsing, madd'ning glamor
 That made him say such daring words last night.

My grandma oft has told me that the fairies
 Try such tricks on the unwary, nights in June;
 They play their harps, all strung with lucent moonbeams,
 Till our hearts are wildly dancing to the tune.
 O, did I feel his arms close 'round about me,
 Feel his breath upon my cheek, and in my ear
 Did he whisper low life's rarest, sweetest message?
 Was it: "I love you, sweetheart, love you, dear?"

Did the fairies leave this jewel in my keeping?
 Now I wander down the path we trod last eve
 With my head so full of questionings and fancies—
 What can a little maid like me believe?
 O, I see him coming, striding o'er the headlands,
 Like a fair-haired good-god, stately, strong and tall;
 Coming now to tell again that tale of rapture,
 And it wasn't just the moonlight, after all.

—L. Adelaide Sherman.

—Finally it has come upon us. I mean the latest novelty vogue of the early Parisian summer season. It is the Perfume Dance. The idea is now in full swing at the Techau Tavern. After each dance a beautiful cachet of La Boheme Perfume is presented to the favored dancer. Every afternoon at 4:00 o'clock a $4 cachet of La Boheme Perfume is given away without dancing or competition. These little "danse de jardienners" are much sought as souvenirs and favors apart from the delicately blended scented abstracts contained therein. The Perfume Dance is indeed one of the prettiest cafe features ever introduced in this city. Talking of the Techau Tavern, where else in the land may one enjoy a better served or more delicious mid-day luncheon than the Hurry-Up Lunch at the Tavern for business men? The dancing during the dinner of the evening begins at 7:00 o'clock. It continues right through the After-Theatre Supper period to the end of the night.

BUSINESS SITUATION THROUGHOUT COUNTRY.

It is evident that the whole country is doing business with a full appreciation of the fact that conditions are extraordinary and subject to change, and yet with a large degree of confidence in the future. There has been over-buying prompted by rising prices and fear of inability to get goods later, and this in some degree explains the unprecedented demand. Some of these purchases have come back upon the market, and more may do so as the time to take deliveries approaches, but the consumption of all staple articles of comfort is on a scale never equaled before. In lines in which production is being increased to take the place of foreign supplies, prices are tending downward, and in some lines in which high prices have ruled upon the public market regular customers are being served at but little above normal figures. There is general recognition of the probability that a readjustment of prices will have to be made at a lower level after the war is over, and nobody intends to enter that period with heavy stocks if he can help it. If stocks are moderate it is believed that the readjustment will not be hard to make, for nobody expects prices to fall below the pre-war level, or even quite to it. The stocks of staple goods are low all over the world, and there can be no long-sustained cessation of buying. In this country it is evident that a large amount of construction work is being delayed by the high prices. The railways are still spending as little as possible, for either equipment or development, owing to the scarcity of labor and high price of steel, but they are assured of good earnings for a considerable period, and must eventually disburse large sums to make good the wear and tear of this heavy traffic and to enlarge their facilities to meet the growing requirements.

—Exports of the United States in April were $399,000,000, and imports $217,000,000, as compared with exports in April, 1915, of $294,000,000 and imports of $160,000,000, the bureau of foreign and domestic commerce announces. Manufactured articles exported ready for consumption amounted to $197,000,000 in April, compared with $90,000,000 in the same month last year. Crude foodstuffs and meats exported were $36,000,000, a reduction from $59,000,000 last year. Crude materials imported amounted to $95,000,000 in April, 1916, and $61,000,000 in April, 1916. Most other imports showed only slight increases.

—Oatman stocks showed more general strength than at any time during the last few weeks, with Big Jim leading in point of activity and in firmness. Big Jim rose to $1.10 and stayed there on news that ore on the 485 level gave assays averaging over $80 per ton. Black Range had a sudden recovery from 15 cents to 30 cents on the execution of a few orders, and the advance was maintained with a marked degree of firmness.

—The country's express companies, which operated during February, 1915, at a loss of $414,000, made net profits last February of $386,000. Interstate Commerce Commission figures also show that the total net profits for the eight months ending with February last were $6,691,000, as compared with a loss of $596,000 for the corresponding year.

—Of the 22 largest common carriers in the State, 13 will pay less revenue to the State than in 1915 because of jitney competition.

—The second clean-up of Round Mountain Mining Company from the sluice boxes from May 15th to June 8th, netted $25,000. Up to May 18th, the extraction for the season from the upper section of sluices totaled $40,000. No effort has been made to clean up the bed rock.

—The Ship Owners' Association of the Pacific Coast, representing 150 steam lumber schooners, have issued a statement that under no circumstances will they recognize the closed shop.

—Talk is heard of $75,000,000 earnings for United States Steel for the quarter.

—The mortgage loans of last week in this city aggregated $980,607.

—The Du Pont Company is preparing to manufacture dyes after the war.

—Raw sugar sold in New York this week at 6.40 as compared with 6.14½ a short time ago.

BY THE WAY.

The latest device of insatiable "business" to make every moment count is an adaptation of the dictagraph to automobile transit, so that—to quote the eulogist of the plan—"business men living in the suburbs who motor into town to their offices daily may transact some of the routine office duties while a chauffeur speeds them to their destinations." In short—to quote the same authority—the day has come when a man "can use his car as an office on wheels." Yes, and he can go on becoming more and more oblivious to Nature, to "sea, sky and brook," and to anything but toil and profits; and the irony of the situation is that it is not those who have to reckon the value of every minute as an income producing asset who are most slavish in their fealty to the time-consuming Moloch of "business."

James J. Hill, of the Great Northern Railroad, never drew large salaries for the work he did. In fact, he drew no salary as president of the 7,000 mile system that, in due time, he came to operate. He got his pecuniary returns out of the valuations he created for his own investments in the road in which he believed, and in which he found it easier to get others to believe if he seemed to be willing to take his chances with them. Long before other administrators of similar properties knew the "cost" of doing business, he knew his. Where he rose superior to Morgan, Harriman, Gould, Vanderbilt and all his contemporaries was in the essentially constructive quality of his policy, and his refusal to be dependent on Wall street, on the one hand, and the government on the other.

The punctiliousness of the British government office as to detail is, of course, well known, but the following incident, recorded recently in Liverpool, is narrated without any comment as to its authenticity. A British officer, on a special mission, showed amongst his expenses in his return to the War Office an item, "porter sixpence." The War Office promptly inquired of the officer what the item meant, and on its being explained that the sixpence was "on account of a porter at Lime street station," pointed out that the correct expression was "porterage." The officer at once made the required emandation, and on looking over his return to see if by any chance there were other items to which similar exception might be taken, he found "Cab 2s. 6 d." This he at once altered to "Cabbage 2s. 6d." and returned his statement. He received a check by return of post.

Although it may convey little to the man unversed in such matters to be told that the planet Venus is, to-day, some 18,000,000 miles nearer to the earth than it was at the beginning of May, still every one may note the strange and unwonted brilliance of the great planet in the Western sky. At the beginning of May, Venus was estimated to be about 60,000,000 miles from the earth. To-day she is said to be little more than 42,000,000 miles distant. She may be clearly seen in broad daylight, being as bright as 120 stars of the first magnitude.

PATENTING COAT-TAILS.

Sometimes a Congressman introduces a bill "by request," which means that he does it as a favor, but without enthusiasm.

Representative Morrison, of Indiana, introduced a bill "by request" that illustrates how laws are being urged that will apply to every nook and crook of commercial activity.

It is House Bill No. 6458, to enable clothing manufacturers to patent styles. If a style dealer produces a coat-tail that catches the popular fancy is there any reason why he should not have exclusive rights to that coat-tail?

If you want to know what a nation of money-struggling neorasthenic noodles we are becoming, read this latest effort to extract royalties from button-holes, pleats, gussets, gores and drappings.

A lot of other things "not now registerable nor patentable under the copyright act" also come under the provisions of this bill. Just to mention: bottles, borders, jewelry, plumbing fixtures and bric-a-brac. To prove that the design is "new and original." Ah! that would be fun for the lawyers, and that is what laws are for.—Art Young in the July Metropolitan.

Annual Road Congress Urged by Chairman of Good Roads Board

"Unquestionably the time has arrived for a great National Road Congress to be held once a year in the National Capital under Federal government direction," asserts George C. Diehl, chairman of the A. A. A. Good Roads Board.

"This gathering in Washington would be under the auspices of the U. S. Office of Public Roads and Rural Engineering of the Department of Agriculture," continues Mr. Diehl, "and the event could be made most comprehensive in its scope; there could be a complete exhibit of road machinery and road materials; there could be sample construction of various kinds of highways; road schools could be conducted for State, county and town engineers; and various technical phases of the work could be set forth by trained experts who would gladly attend such a great good roads event.

"Then there would come the inter-related phases of road travel and road transportation. Undoubtedly the Department of the Interior, because of its national parks, would set forth the scenic attractions which are under government supervision. Various States would be given opportunity of advertising their attractions. All around, an assemblage could be brought about which would prove exceedingly effective.

"The Good Roads Board believes in State highway conventions which are generally called for a specific purpose in the endeavor to concentrate the efforts for road enthusiasts for definite ends. These State meetings are of incalculable value, for the State is the political subdivision which must carry on by far the greatest burden of future road construction and maintenance.

"With the vast amount of funds being expended throughout the country, the government of the highway departments is becoming largely a question of scientific management, and it is believed that if the county were the smallest unit of administration that greater efficiency would result. The numerous State good roads meetings converged into a great national congress once a year, held in the National Capital, it is believed would be the best way of handling the changed highway situation, and the government could properly assume the obligation resulting from the management of this great national event.

"The time has arrived when highway conventions should have more of an official character. There should be a good roads meeting in every township in the United States at least once a year, held under the charge of the chief highway official of the township. There should be at least one county meeting held every year in each county, under the charge of the county engineer or the chief highway official. There should be one State meeting in each State each year, under the charge of the State Highway Commission. Then the local automobile clubs, the good roads associations and others could cooperate in these conventions as their interest and location warranted. The township, State and county meetings should be held before the national meeting, so that at each of the smaller gatherings delegates could be named to go to the national convention, which in reality would be a great good roads school, lasting for one or two weeks, in the City of Washington, under the charge of the most important highway official of the country, namely, the Federal authority in charge of governmental expenditure."

Oil Company Appeals to Courts

In an effort to protect its patrons and also to check the heavy inroads made in its own business, the New York Lubricating Oil Company, makers of the famous Monogram oils and greases which for years have been among the most popular motor lubricants, have started legal action against many unscrupulous garage and supply men who have been substituting inferior grades of oil for Monogram.

Through the firm's attorneys, Chickering & Gregory, suits have been filed in the Federal courts against several of these substitutors on the grounds of unfair competition, and it is the plan of the New York corporation to vigorously prosecute the offenders who have been wantonly marketing poor lubricants under the Monogram brand, and naturally materially injuring the corporation's business.

George P. Moore, Western representative of the big oil company, whose headquarters are in this city, in speaking of the action of his firm states: "The oil trade has always suffered from the methods of unscrupulous garage men and supply dealers who made it a practice to always offer 'something just as good' for the brand desired, and we have worked hard to correct this evil. In justice to ourselves and our customers, we must endeavor to put a stop to the methods used by substitutors by an appeal to the courts.

Superintendent H. A. French of the State Motor Vehicle Department gives the following figures to last Saturday for 1916: Registrations—Automobiles, 182,828; motorcycles, 24,554; chauffeurs, 9,223; automobile dealers, 1,241; motorcycle dealers, 193. Receipts—Automobiles, $1,854,841.55; motorcycles, $47,077.00; chauffeurs, $16,915.50; automobile dealers, $31,339.75; motorcycle dealers, $849.50; miscellaneous, $1,729.50. Total, $1,952,752.80.

Moving Picture Safety Crusade

A plan to promote traffic safety in Denver, Colo., by means of motion pictures is being worked out by Commissioner of Safety Alexander Nisbet. He intends to prepare a special film showing how the most common accidents are caused, illustrating the purpose of the most important traffic rules, and showing the right and wrong way for both vehicles and pedestrians to deal with traffic conditions. The city will supply this film to all the moving picture theatres in the city. There were 272 arrests of motorists in Denver during the month of March for violations of traffic laws, and Commissioner Nisbet is seeking to remove causes for arrest by educating the public to work together for law observance and safety.

Pennsylvania Registrations Show Gain

Revenue from motor registration this year in Pennsylvania has passed the $1,700,000 mark, and officials of the motor vehicle division of the Pennsylvania State highway department are of the belief that the $2,000,000 mark will be reached. The total revenue for 1915 amounted to $1,665,276. The number of registrations up to date are 161,564. It is believed that the total number will reach 250,000.

If it takes our last dollar, we are going to stop the illicit practice of palming off inferior oils as Monogram Oil. We are now starting suits against such "substitutors" and will punish to the full extent of the law these unscrupulous dealers.

Ignorance of the law excuses no one and employers are liable for the acts of their employees—

MR. DEALER, see that your employees commit no illegal acts.

MR. OWNER, in justice to honest trading, advise us if you have a doubt as to the genuineness of the oil you are using.

Extraordinary Showing of Ford Motor Co.

One of the most spectacular of the balance sheets of the automobile industry, or any other, for that matter, is that of the Ford Motor Co., Detroit. The sheet of last year, as of July 31st last, has just been issued, and is even more startling in its figures than ever before. It shows cash on hand and in banks totaling $43,788,151, as compared with $27,441,469, an increase of 59 per cent. Outside of the cash the largest item on the asset side is $14,335,768, merchandise inventoried at cost. Buildings and building fixtures are carried at $12,931,884. Patents are carried at the extremely modest figure of $61,473, which is in sharp contrast with the large book valuations that many other companies give to the patent holdings. Moreover, the liabilities side of the balance sheet has an item, "Reserve for depreciation of patents, $61,473," so that far from inflating the assets the patents are amply cushioned against impairing them.

In addition to carrying the patents at a figure that is merely nominal, the company does not capitalize the value of its name under "good will," despite the fact that the name is so widely known as to justify a valuation of many millions. Patterns and patents are the only assets listed that are not tangible, and they total together only $104,471.

The company still has only $2,000,000 in capital stock, and its surplus is $59,135,776. The "book value" of the stock is $3,445 per share, and there are net quick assets of sufficient amount to give each stockholder $2,600 per share should the company suddenly decide to dissolve. The growth in cash resources has been remarkable. One of the reasons for the success of the company may be found in the significance of a $3,511 "reserve for bad debts," a fund created in 1913 and apparently untouched since, for it does not appear in the balance sheets of 1914 and 1915. The company now is carrying a reserve of $2,885,189 for depreciation of its assets.

Federal Rubber Mfg. Co. Taken Over by New Corporation

The latest and most important development in the pneumatic tire and mechanical rubber goods industry is the recent incorporation of The Federal Rubber Company, a Massachusetts corporation, capitalized at ten million dollars, and which has acquired the property and business of The Federal Rubber Mfg. Co., located at Cudahy, Wis., known nationally as manufacturers of Federal Tires and a full line of mechanical rubber goods.

The policy of the new company as announced by Mr. H. T. Dunn, president, is to be one of general expansion in the production and selling departments of the business. To this end several new buildings are to be added to the present large Federal plant, and through a most attractive proposition, the present heavy demand for Federal products will be augmented to a volume commensurate with its capitalization and the increased production of the plant.

Contracts for three of these new buildings have already been let, and the work will be pushed to completion as fast as possible. This will give the company approximately twelve acres of floor space, and increase its present output of automobile casings and tubes, motorcycle and bicycle tires, mechanical rubber goods, horse shoe pads, rubber heels and soles, approximately fifty per cent.

New York Auto Accident

Some illuminating figures are contained in the classified tables of highway accidents soon to be published in the annual report of the police department of New York for 1915. The tables show that 10,653 accidents, of which the causes were given, 8,661, or more than 81 per cent, were due to the fault or incapacity of the injured person, and only 700, or 6½ per cent, to the fault of the driver.

Horse drawn trucks and wagons caused 100 fatalities and injured 2,341 persons, while motor trucks and delivery wagons killed 105 during the year and injured 1,107. Passenger cars caused 117 fatalities and injured 4,688.

The total number of persons fatally injured during the year was 649 and the number less seriously hurt was 21,891. These figures, however, include 4,401 persons who sustained injuries in no way related to vehicles, such as falls on the sidewalk, hit by fallen objects, bitten by dogs, etc. They also include 955 persons hurt by running into or in front of vehicles, 1,290 injured were improperly boarding or alighting from street cars, 417 when stealing rides, 1,271 when skating or playing in the street, 330 while intoxicated, etc.

There are many garages in town, and the motorist is often in a quandary as to where to go, especially for permanent service. There are very few who give you the QUALITY of service of Dow & Green, in Taylor street, between O'Farrell and Geary. Here your car will receive something more than the "once over," and the prices are moderate.

Premier Performance in Indianapolis Classic

Next to Dario Resta's Peugeot, which won the 300 mile race at Indianapolis, the most talked about cars on the Hoosier Speedway, May 30th, were the three Premier Specials. These cars, built from the blue prints up in ninety days, probably hold the world's record for quick construction. Ninety days ago E. W. Steinhart, vice-president of the New Premier Motor Corporation, learned that, owing to the European war, there would be a shortage of cars for the big Indianapolis classic. In three days complete arrangements had been made to build three special race cars in the Premier factory. The cars raced under the numbers 27, 28 and 29. When they faced the technical committee of the A. A. A. Saturday before the race to make their qualification trials, not one of them had been given even the slightest test, and each registered less than 25 miles on its speedometer. Number 29, which won seventh place in the race, had been "turned over" for the first time Friday morning at 2 o'clock. The fact that each of the Premier Specials showed better than ninety miles an hour in the qualification test astounded those who were in on the secret of the Premier race against time. Some of the more conservative urged that such green cars had absolutely no chance of sticking through the grind, no matter how well they were built, it being well known that any car should be limbered up before being subjected to high speed. In spite of theory, the three Premiers started.

Number 27 was running perfectly, when she blew a tire, and after skidding into the concrete retaining wall turned over in the 49th lap. The accident was due to no mechanical defect. Number 28 went out with a broken oil line in the 76th lap. Number 29, the greenest car in the lot, finished seventh, and was the most perfectly running car on the track when she got the checkered flag. Gil Anderson, holder of the World's Speedway championship, was at the wheel of Number 29 when she finished.

Death of President Chinese Republic Affects Auto Staff

As a result of the death of President Yuan Shi Khai, the Chinese government has cabled C. C. Fu, a young Chinese engineer, who has been taking a course of instruction in the Kenosha works of The Thomas B. Jeffery Company, to return at once to his native land.

Mr. Fu, a graduate of the University of Michigan, was sent to the Jeffery Company last February. He donned overalls and jumper with the same willingness characteristic of the race, and started to work his way through the various departments. A few weeks ago he was transferred to the export sales department, under J. A. Rose, and was demonstrating there, equally as well as he had in the shops, his ready grasp of things.

Just why his government should be in such a hurry for his return, Mr. Fu doesn't pretend to know. He will go to San Francisco at once and take passage from there.

Mr. Fu is but one of a number of Chinese students who have been working at the Jeffery factory in the interests of their country. The last was J. K. Wong, a graduate of an engineering institute in North China, also of the Armour Institute of Technology of Chicago. He served in various capacities in the plant and the main office for nearly a year, and left to take the post-graduate course in the University of Minnesota before going back to China.

A Handbook of Coast Artillery Materiel

Now that the eyes of the nation are turned towards preparedness and people more than ever are recognizing that a soft answer does not turn away wrath—national wrath at least—and that righteousness does not begin to compare with cannon as measure of protection, a short and comprehensive treatise on ballistics is sure to be eagerly welcomed, especially by the officers and men of the National Guard whose civilian duties prevent them taking the time for a full course on this most interesting and important department of military science.

To inform these citizen soldiers how best to equip themselves in the limited time at their disposal, Captain W. P. Platt of the Coast Artillery Corps, U. S. A., has written a little brochure called "Coast Artillery Materiel," which combines the principal matter of some twenty odd books on the subjects covered.

In a simple and comparatively untechnical manner, Capt. Platt has digested an enormous mass of data and instruction which is absolutely essential to this branch of the service. After a fashion, infantrymen can be made in a comparatively short time, but generally it takes years to perfect the artillery, especially in conditions of modern warfare. So ably and with such just apprehension of the essentials has the author done his work that any man with the ordinary training of a guardsman may advance himself fully two years by the diligent study of this little work of 170 pages.

Among the subjects treated are: Organization and coast defense; gunnery and ballistics; ammunition; guns and carriages; fire control; drills and inspection; searchlights and signalling; cordage; warships; preparation for and conduct of target practice, and reports.

"Sylvia of the Hill Top."

This is one of the delightful series of Sylvia stories, cheerful, witty and mirrored in the happiest period of girlhood, with a chain of incidents that prove of absorbing interest to all lovable, healthy minded girls. Sylvia is girlhood itself in the most charming and attractive period, and her kindly heart and intent glows on all her companions. She is the good fairy on the hill of roses where the various families connected with the story make their summer homes. Threads of appealing romance and philanthropy run their course among the interesting characters, and as the chapters develop they weave something more stimulating than mere romance in their subtle, spiritual meaning. Illustrated with a frontispiece in full color by Gene Pressler. Price, $1.25 net. Published by The Page Company, Boston, Mass.

"Blue Bonnet House."

Romance and charming surprises quite naturally follow the course of an adventurous, gentle-hearted girl in her teens who leaves her home on the big ranch in the West to visit the East. Incidentally, as a part of that trip, Blue Bonnet in the fullness of her good heart determines to find, if possible, the parents of a little castaway boy that has been brought as an invalid to the ranch. Extremely interesting and surprising discoveries develop in this search. Surprises that touch the heart and rouse the best emotions in girlhood. Caroline E. Jacobs and Lela H. Richards, the authors, have a sympathetic touch that has appealed to all girl readers of the "Blue Bonnet" series and made them so popular with girlhood. Illustrated by John Goss. Price, $1.50 net. Published by The Page Company, Boston, Mass.

Anne Douglas Sedgwick, author of "Tante" and "The Encounter," (The Century Co.) says that she is always being upbraided by her American friends for choosing so many "funny" Americans to draw in her novels; but she thinks that any novelist interested in international contrasts and clashes will understand that. It is the type that still embodies the racy, primitive flavor, now so rapidly fading out, which gives the novelist his telling oppositions. "I wish," Miss Sedgwick adds, "that other countries with the 'funny' of a Mrs. Talcott or of Franklin Winslow Kane, could give one as much lovable-ness; for I think that, of all my characters, these are the two that I love best."

Harper Books to be Reprinted.

Harper & Brothers announce that they are putting to press for reprintings two of their new novels, "The Border Legion," by Zane Grey; and "People Like That," by Kate Langley Bosher. They will reprint soon "The Story of a Pioneer," by Dr. Anna Howard Shaw; "The Sowers," by Henry Seton Merriman; "Land Ho!" by Morgan Robertson, and Volumes 7, 10, 19 and 25 of "The American Nation. A History."

SPRIGHTLY MR. BIENIUS

BY MARSHALL BREEDEN

Special business and advertising service manager for the News Letter

The Plan—The Copy—The Lay-out—No Charge.

Sprightly Mr. Bienius says:—

If I were a retailer and dealt in Office Equipment I would feature a "Moving Service Department.

I would offer to supply free, the names of reliable moving concerns, safe movers, office furniture makers, wiring experts, carpenters and sign makers.

Supplementing this, I would offer to secure estimates on all matters involved in changing locations and make all arrangements, including laying out new floor plans.

I would advertise this service in the News Letter and also insert little printed announcements in my outgoing mail and packages.

My profit would come in sales of office equipment due to an intimate knowledge gained of just what the customer might need and the chance to be the one to make the suggestions.

I would have one man in charge of the real estate and to secure names of prospects, and he would also keep in touch with all firms who specialize in moving.

Sprightly Mr. Bienius is at the News Letter Office. His advertising and consulting services are for you, call for him because he has many ideas, and ONE for your business.

INSURANCE

The Insurance Federation of California, through its secretary, Joseph J. Scott, makes the following announcement: The work of organization is going forward rapidly, and the membership is growing beyond all expectations of the officers and directors. All classes of insurance have welcomed this common movement for the protection of the business in which so many thousands of men and women are interested in the State of California. It is known that thousands of application cards have been signed in various parts of the State, and have been held by those who have obtained the applications until definite instructions should be received regarding their disposition. These instructions are now possible in view of the progress of the organization and the opening of permanent headquarters. All persons who have secured from others applications for membership should send such application cards, accompanied by remittance for amount of dues, at the earliest possible date to the San Francisco headquarters of the Federation, Merchants' Exchange Building. There is already evidence of a keen rivalry among insurance men to see who can turn in the largest number of memberships. Some of the larger offices in the State have already organized their offices and field employees and are urging them to secure members that may be credited to the office. Due credits are to be given to all those who obtain members for the Federation, and a number are endeavoring to win first place.

At the University of California, during the summer session, one of the new courses of lectures will include "Social Insurance in Relation to the Public Health," to be delivered by William Leslie, and a course of five lectures on insurance in relation to sickness, unemployment and old age, by Dr. Isaac Marx Rubinow.

Insurance men are interesting themselves in the preparedness parade set for July 8th. Fraternal organizations will co-operate with life, fire and casualty underwriters in an endeavor to make the demonstration second only as an insurance feature to the great parade of Insurance Day in the early period of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition.

The burning of the recently constructed $250,000 pier at San Francisco should afford a salutary lesson to the State of California. Under the provisions of the State laws it was impossible to secure more than $40,000 on the structure, and the consequent loss to the State was $210,000.

The admission, by Insurance Commissioner John E. Phelps, that he has received from Governor Johnson no intimation that he will be appointed to succeed himself at the close of his present term of office on June 30th appears to confirm the rumor which has persisted for months that another has been selected to fill that important office. These rumors have as a basis the indisputable fact that not only has the administration of Mr. Phelps failed to meet with the approval of the underwriting element, but has proven itself a disturbing element, both with the Governor and politicians of the Bull Moose persuasion. It is no secret that these politicians have joined forces with numerous insurance men in a campaign for Phelps' removal. It was the almost united opinion, one shared by the commissioner himself, that no change in the personnel of the office was contemplated until after the election, but the belief now is that a new man will fill the place on July 1st.

After having deliberated for six hours, a jury in Judge Flood's court was discharged, being unable to agree as to whether Phillip Kahn, a Los Angeles merchant, had met his death from ptomaine poison or through a combination of heart and kidney trouble. The jury was sitting in the case of the widow to collect $7,500 from the Standard and $5,000 from the Royal Indemnity on accident policies held by the deceased. The case will be re-tried.

—May the best man win—and the best man, of course, is Wilson.

—Of course the campaign will not really be on until the Socialists and Prohibitionists make their nominations.

—Peacemaker who interfered in a hoodlum fight Sunday night was badly stabbed. Another argument for neutrality.

—That the country is prosperous and that it has been kept out of the world horror is as good a campaign slogan as the Democrats need.

—"Walkin' the Dog" is the name of the latest popular dance. It will not be surprising to find that the dance is as idiotic as the name.

—The Chicago man who got his name in the papers by voting against Wilson at the St. Louis convention has reached the apex of his fame.

—Hughes, according to all accounts, is beginning to thaw out. The campaign promises to be warm enough to melt his icy reserve completely.

—It is conservatively estimated that at least one person in every million in the United States has read all the political platforms clear through.

—The Progressives may have no candidate—but they at least enjoy the satisfaction of having both the old parties bidding frantically for their support.

—"Toot your own horn" is a good rule for San Mateo County, where traffic officers are arresting motorists who come around curves without giving warning.

—Police Chief White offers a dozen solutions of the jitney problem. The only one he submits that would be really effective is: Entire elimination of the jitneys.

—Dentist's wife gets a divorce because her husband was sober only one day in a year. She should have enlightened the public by explaining how this accident happened.

—The Prohibitionists want the Progressives to affiliate with them. Haven't the Moosers been heckled enough without somebody trying to spring jokes like that on them?

—It has again been demonstrated that hugging the shore in a fog leads a ship to wreck. But that will not prevent other ships hugging the shore and piling up on the rocks.

—Iowa man says he has discovered a gasoline substitute that can be sold for four cents a gallon. And if it becomes so popular that the price goes up to six, what a howl there will be!

—Wilson can say to the voters: "See what I have done." The best Hughes can do is to make promises. And the public is always more taken by performance than by promise.

—Roosevelt has been X-Rayed because of a broken rib. Some of the Progressives would like to have an X-Ray of his brain to see if they could locate the little kink that stands for desertion.

—The British have ordered twenty-five million quarts of Irish stew from the United States for their army. England always has been in the habit of calling on the Irish in an emergency.

—According to newspaper account, all of California's national guardsmen are just panting to get to the front. We will venture just a moderate-sized bet that some of them are scared blue.

—The United States pension roll for the next year is only $158,065,000, which is $6,000,000 less than last year. But Mexican developments threaten to provide for a tilt upward a few years hence.

—Former Senator Kearns of Utah writes at great length in support of the theory that the Panama Canal slides were caused by gas. Wouldn't wonder if he were right—a politician should be an authority on gas and its effects.

—The Bear wreck has led to a government investigation. Any one with a reasonably long memory can recollect innumerable investigations of this character. But who can recall that one of them ever went beyond noise and fuss?

—It is estimated by a Boston publication that at least one million persons in the United States are writing for publication. Then there are the millions who fondly imagine they are writing for publication until it comes back with the rejection slip.

—Uncle Joseph Cannon indignantly declares that President Wilson is the biggest czar that ever occupied the White House. It is better to have Congress dominated by a patriotic czar than by a lot of lobbyists and self-seeking politicians.

—Colonel John Jacob Astor's young widow loses the income on five million dollars by re-marrying. But as the second husband has about three million, it is believed that they will be able to struggle along even at the present high cost of living.

—Hughes didn't seek the nomination and apparently didn't want it; the leaders named him against their will; and Fairbanks tried his best to keep off the ticket. So the Republican campaign promises to be about as joyously enthusiastic as a funeral.

—Hetch-Hetchy laborers who formed companies and took grading contracts lost money on the job. Now Paul Scharenburg, of the State Industrial Accident Commission, has written a wail because the men are not making the ware locally set for public work. Scharenburg can congratulate himself on having gone considerably beyond the limit in absurdity.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

FIST FIGHTS AND SOME CONTEMPSTUOUS OFFICIALS.

Is it a huge joke being practiced on the citizens of San Francisco, or is it a bit of holiday irony on the part of the Police Department that organizers of so-called boxing contests are permitted to exhibit pugilistic contests in the ring which go the limit to the knock-out? At a regular election, not long ago, the people of this city specially voted to prohibit such ring fights. These fights are now regularly advertised and exhibitions given right along, just the same. To add a playful bit of irony to the situation a file of police is regularly detailed to the ringside of these fistic exhibitions by the authorities "to preserve order." What a contemptuous slap in the face of the law, as intended by the voters. Could the authorities more derisively express their indifference for the law and the will of the voters as expressed in the ballot box? An organization of substantial and influential citizens should be formed, immune against the usual political spy pests, to emphasize the fact to the head of any lax department in the city's government that he should properly attend to his duties or suffer recall.

CHANCES OF THE NEW SHIPPING BILL.

Shipping interests throughout the country are keenly interested in the new Alexander bill, a composite affair which covers the salient features introduced, referred, considered and made up of the most important ideas of that character that were accepted under the present administration, and especially since it was proposed, tentatively, to purchase the German merchantmen lying in United States harbors, and thus gather a fleet that would form the nucleus of a new American merchant marine. Reports from the South American republics are to the effect that unless such a merchant marine is provided quickly, all hope of securing the trade of those southern republics will be lost. The capital idea of the Alexander bill is, of course, the provision of a $50,000,000 corporation to be controlled by the government to encourage and develop a naval auxiliary and naval reserve and merchant marine to meet the requirements of the United States, and also to regulate carriers by water to engage in the foreign and interstate commerce of this country. Numbers of Republicans filibustered vigorously against these ideas, as they were introduced in Congress. Most likely they will continue their attacks against the new forms presented by Alexander. Several leading Republicans have been reported as having changed their minds, but just the same aggressive attacks will be made against the bill. Out of these contests some compromise may come which will materially improve the shipping prospects of this country. Certainly the time has arrived when something essentially constructive must be done to establish American shipping on a broader and more extensive scale and give the American flag its proper high standing among the carrying fleets of the world.

FOREIGN TRADE MORE STABLE.

England and France largely, and a smaller increase with other European nations. This new position is generally regarded as encouraging. It indicates that manufacturing plants of the entente nations are rapidly recovering from the tremendous pressure and abandonment occasioned by the opening of the war. April's credit balance in the foreign trade of this country shows a total of $186,542,000, compared with $197,200,000 for March, and $215,901,000 for February. February's balance was the largest in the record of that month in any year. The declining balance was largely brought about by increased imports. Indications tend to a more even balance in imports and exports, a condition which signals in a measure a more evenly settled trade on a longer and more stable balance. Lack of deep sea tonnage in this country has been a large factor in restricting exports from this country. The prospects seem unusually good that the foreign trade of this country will materially expand with the close of the European war.

MILITARISM VS. MEXICO.

Residents in Mexico City some weeks ago asked King Alphonso to use his interest to prevent war between Mexico and the United States. This may be taken as further evidence that General Carranza bird-limed his letter with strenuous phrases for the purpose of impressing these residents. At any rate, of late there has been a somewhat sterner note and more insistence in his statements to Washington. At the same time, the ordinary non-partisan on this side of the border must recognize that Carranza is sorely handicapped with an infinite lot of prickly troubles in his endeavors to bring peace out of the present demoralization in Mexico, occasioned by the years of guerilla warfare. His position throughout the interchanges of government communication during the past several months has been productive of a practical show-down of this country's position as regards Preparedness. Numbers of weaknesses in equipment, commissariat and munitions came to light shortly after the United States troops crossed the Rio Grande in the initial sprint to overtake the fleeing Villa. These weaknesses and mistakes were quickly recognized and most of them have been corrected.

The calling out of the militia of the States of the Union "to patrol the Rio Grande border" is a step fraught with great consequence, and is only conceivable on the basis that the administration had information that a force of that character is absolutely necessary on the border for adequate protection. There are secretive and implacable forces afoot in Mexico which are determined to overthrow Carranza at any cost. These same forces are exercising every effort to drag this country into the Mexican mess and create sufficient irritation to provoke an invasion of United States troops in an effort to "pacify" that country. Under these conditions any imprudent movement on the part of the militia patrolling the border may start a blaze that might set aflame the resentment of Mexico. Then the fat would be in the fire. War is rampant the world over, these days, a catching disease occasioned by the European outbreak. Some lines of trade are making enormous fortunes by pushing it along so that they may gather the ultimate dollar before Peace has a chance to intervene. President Wilson and his cabinet are in touch with all these intricate ramifications regarding the situation, and in him we must trust to save the situation according to his lights.

—Grim-visaged war stalks the earth these days rapping at divers doors, and sets at each others' throats those inclined to wrangle. Hell threatens to pop in the precincts, and any one of such local blazes carries all the necessary passions in industrial and social contentions. A local blaze of this sort burst out suddenly in Richmond across the bay, this week, when one wing of the police department charged the methodist minister with grafting on a woman of the underworld there through threatening her with an execution of the Red Light Abatement act. It is significant that the chief of police of Richmond would have nothing to do with the arrest of the pastor. Taxpayers familiar with "the bleeders" who join police departments for purposes of graft will grin ironically at the charges preferred in this case. The pastor had threatened to exercise the abatement act to improve certain notorious conditions in Richmond, and the police program to trap him followed. A hot fight is now on between the leading residents, who are backing the pastor against the police clique. A grand jury inquiry is on, regarding the big blaze mentioned above. It could readily start under the present situation in Richmond if the pastors in other sections of the State joined to protect the pastor in Richmond, and organized to demand the execution of the Red Light Abatement act in their localities. In the hands of a zealot that act easily becomes a torch in the present frame of belligerent minds.

—Quite a fleet of catafalques carrying grisly political reputations are sailing up Salt River these gruesome days. What is to become of Governor Johnson, the irrepressible Roosevelt, the steadfast check feeder, George Perkins, and the other gifted chieftains of radicalism, who have punctured the atmosphere with their fulminations for the past four years? Miss Ida Tarbell, who was a martyr in the cause, pens an epitaph as follows: "It was a great noble-hearted body, and its tremendous fight deserves a better end than the cowardly stab its leader gave it in the message which its chairman mercifully and wisely withheld," until almost the moment of adjournment. The radical movement began with Bryan and ended with Roosevelt. The one is now better known as a Chautauquan speaker and the other as a contributor to magazines. Johnson will rouse all the resentment of Southern California if he attempts to capture the toga of U. S. Senator. Los Angeles insists that the honor belongs to that section of the State, this election. The only political bung starter of any consequence that Johnson possesses at this juncture is his appointment of a Lieutenant-Governor, a card that he has judiciously kept up his sleeve for many months. How often his old-time saying will come home to him: "A man must eat."

—Fancy! Since it was announced that some 7,500,000 gallons of superior whisky have been produced in this country so far during this fiscal year than ever before, the Russians have forced an advance of several hundred miles on their western front in the direction of America; President Wilson has called out the militia of the U. S. A. to line up on the Rio Grande front in order to defend it against the mad rush of the Mexican population who seem determined to tap those casing heads of golden liquor or know the reason why; Canadians are taking advantage of this movement to worm their way south across the border and squirm closer in the direction of this bonded nectar. Bryan is raving over the situation, and the only calm place in the city is the resting room of the Board of Supervisors, where the fashion of drinking tea during the afternoons has been substituted for "going across the street." Safety first—and those 7,500,000 gallons next.

—Numbers of the Old Guard have importuned Samuel M. Shortridge to get into the running for U. S. Senator this year. He has a big following in the State, and knows every political leader of consequence in the West, as well as the sagas of his party in the East, but Shortridge, like Root, has laid aside all ambition for higher distinction, and is content to remain the Ulysses of his party in this field. However, his oratory will be as strong as ever for Republican principles and Republican prestige.

If the new bond issue of $15,000,000 is carried at the next election, one of the most important roads to the bay vicinity that will be constructed is that of the Pacheco Pass.

At present this is only a dirt road, and is the only one between Coalinga and San Francisco connecting the valley and the sea. This road intersects the State Highway on the coast at Gilroy, and with the State Highway through the valley at a point about midway between Merced and Madera. The distance between these points is approximately 120 miles.

This will be one of the most popular roads to be improved under the new bond issue, as it connects Monterey Peninsula, Santa Cruz and the center of population on the coast with Fresno, Merced, Madera, Modesto, and, practically speaking, the center of population of the valley.

The Architecture and the Gardens of the San Diego Exposition.

This is a pictorial survey of the aesthetic features of the Panama-California International Exposition at San Diego, described by Carlton Monroe Winslow, A. I. A., together with an essay by Clarence S. Stein, illustrated from beautiful photographs by Harold T. Taylor, with an introduction by Bertram G. Goodhue, F. A. I. A., advisory and consulting architect of the Exposition.

San Diego was most fortunate in possessing an unusually attractive historical setting for the inspiring artistic beauties of her Exposition, and the Exposition artists strengthened her position by the display of rare discrimination in displaying a few things well chosen and well related on to the other. In the background lay the old Indian and old Spanish traditions, and the Exposition expresses itself triumphantly in the Spanish Colonial style. The leading expressions of the spirit of this Exposition, still under way, is shown in the 130 exquisite photographs illuminating the book. Facing each photograph is a description of the art setting in the picture by an expert.

The Spell of Egypt.

Archie Bell has painted in oriental colors Egypt as it is today, and the reader will gather an intimate acquaintance with its people, social forms and relations of the people there as they live to-day. He traveled with them, discussed various domestic and government subjects with them, and found ample time to examine personally the most interesting ruins of that ancient land, the playground of the present. His cruise up the Nile on board the dahabiyeh "Seti" took him into a new world, as it were, and in the characters and people he met he went back centuries of time. In the fellaheen he discovered a being unlike anything in humankind outside Egypt.

Zane Grey's New Novel.

"The Border Legion," a new novel by Zane Grey, is published by the Harpers. The border is that of Idaho, in 1863; the legion a band of bandits who rob miners of their gold and are the terror of the law-abiding element in that rough region. A lover's quarrel sent the hero to the outlaw's camp, and his repentant sweetheart in search of him. She was captured by the head of the bandits and held prisoner. To add to her own personal dangers was her fear for her lover, for his life, and for his future in this den of thieves. And there was danger on every side—gun play, gambling, robbing stages and murder. Yet through it all, the presence of a brave, good woman made itself felt.

The Prose of a Poet.

Professor Brander Matthews, in his preface to the new edition of the stories of H. C. Bunner (Scribners), says of Bunner: "His prose was the prose of a poet, pure and pelucid; his style had both clarity and color. He became a master of the art of the short story, finding his profit in a loving study of Boccaccio and Maupassant. Even those of his longer tales, which stretch out almost to the dimensions of a novel, were only short stories writ large; they had the unity, the swiftness, the singleness of purpose which is the distinguishing characteristic of this form of fiction."

Some time ago it was announced that the publication of the second volume of Maxim Gorky's autobiography would be indefinitely postponed, owing to the fact that the English translation and printed sheets of the book were interned in Berlin for the duration of the war. But the Century Co., which published the first volume, "My Childhood," has just received word that the second volume is now running serially in a Russian magazine. Hopes are entertained that a fresh translation may be undertaken immediately, and that the book may appear sooner than had been supposed possible. It is to be called "In the World."

FASHION'S FADS AND FRILLS

Just at this time of the year, when we are all of us finding the coat very irksome indeed, one-piece frocks play a most important role. Of course there never is a closed season for them, but at this time their real charm is best appreciated.

Fabrics Important Considerations

Aside from the simple, trim models of serge, gabardine, faille and taffeta, which one meets everywhere on the avenue these bright days, the shop windows are gay with voiles, nets, figured organdies and the dainty imported cottons, fashioned into frocks which are wonderfully appealing. Each day new models appear, no two exactly alike, though obviously of the same family, each seeming, if possible, daintier than those launched before. Frills, narrow and wide, cobweb-like laces and embroideries, and layer after layer of the sheerest of fabrics, are used to create these full-skirted, fluffy frocks, for summer dances, country club afternoons, and the thousand and one other requirements of the summer playtime.

Russian Blouse of Embroidered Batiste with Plain Tussah Skirt

Interesting Tub Frocks

Of course, many of these dainty, lace-trimmed, befrilled lingerie frocks are anything but economical when one considers that they will not launder, but must be cleaned each time they are soiled. However, there are very many dainty materials which will launder and make up quite as effectively—figured voiles, colored handkerchief linens, crepes, many of the organdies and most of the imported novelty cottons, when simply trimmed.

A particularly effective summer frock, suitable for almost any daytime occasion, illustrated here, is developed in a dotted voile, a white ground embroidered with a soft pink dot; the flounce is of embroidered batiste, just tinted to match the dot. The satin girdle, which is in a darker tone, affords the necessary touch of sharp contrast.

Embroidered Voile and Tinted Batiste Flouncing

Color Combinations

Colors, more, perhaps, than anything, should be chosen, not according to the shades which are fashionable, but for their becomingness. There are certain tones which are more becoming than others, and these should be selected. It is not a difficult matter to do this this season, for, although we hear of the seriousness of the dye situation on every hand, there seems to be no dearth of beautiful shades. The many shades of gray are popular for muslins and silks; and the soft pinks and blues predominate in the cool, pretty waistings. Navy blue is always favored, and this summer it is as popular as ever for serge, taffeta and linen suitings.

Checks and stripes vie for favor with the plain colors, being used for skirts, combined with dark coats and for one-piece frocks. Pongees and tussahs, with the natural tan ground, figured or striped in soft tones of green, rose, tan, orange and like colors, are being used for the Russian blouse frocks, such as the one shown here, combining the figured and plain material as illustrated. The linen suitings are striped in the same colors, giving much the same effect. These Russian blouse suits and dresses are well liked for sports and also for more formal wear. For instance, the frock illustrated is developed in embroidered batiste combined with a skirt of plain white tussah, making a dainty, cool frock for summer afternoons.

PERSONAL ADVENTURES IN THE PAINTED WORLD

A Lovable Crook: Also the Spirit of Vaudeville This Week

BY HENRY McDONALD SPENCER

As an anti-social character, Raffles is Sherlock Holmes with the reverse English, but the protagonist of crime is more lovable if just as impossible as Conan Doyle's hero.

Indeed, there is every reason to suspect that at heart we all of us sympathize with the crook provided he shows courage in his wrong-doing; the Robin Hood ideal outlives our boyhood. Of course, when you come to know the criminal from first hand observation you realize that he generally is mean, unduly selfish, lazy, a parasite and a moron; and that he has not the courage to face life as it is, and stand or fall by the rules of the game (whether these rules are fair or not, doesn't matter). In other words, he doesn't play the game, but tries to load the dice.

But it is the best we can do, after all: "Play the Game." We didn't make the rules, nor did we have a voice in placing our handicap, and some of us think that the Handicap Committee put too heavy an impost on us, but it is up to us to set our teeth and play without whining. That is the only philosophy of life worth preserving, or at least is enough for any man.

Mr. Presbery, the dramatist, however, is hardly as much as a psychologist as the author, for he overlooks the feeling we have for the romantic crook, and rather switches Hornung's idea by suggesting that Raffles takes up the second-story work as a sort of sublimated hare and hounds. Of course, in doing so, the playwright is governed by the rules of the conventional drama, and seeks to create as much sympathy as possible for his hero.

As played by Forrest Stanley the character was very plausible, and I was glad to see this really capable leading man in a part which brought out many of his salient qualities: Romanticism, an air of mystere, charm, his mellow and sympathetic voice, to say nothing of his more obvious physical attributes.

As the play is all Raffles, Miss Herne rather was overshadowed by her co-star, but she intensified the impression of her excellent qualities and her winning personality.

Jimmy Gleason was down to play "Bunny," the Watson of Raffles, and so analogous are the situations in this respect of "Raffles" and "Sherlock Holmes," that you almost expect to hear "Quick, Bunny, the needle," but for some reason Gleason did not appear on Monday night. His place, however, was acceptably filled.

The other characters were all quite up to the very high standard which the Alcazar has been maintaining. Take my advice: "See the drama, now."

Orpheum Programme Not Good for People with Sore Lip

As unmoved as the orchestra players or the "grips," I sat through the Orpheum programme until "H" was started—remember the number, or letter, "H"—and then I commenced to laugh, and then I roared; and the Ex-Performer (lady, of course) who tells me what to say, she laughed and then—well, it isn't nice to speak of a lady as roaring, but she gave a very good imitation of a roar.

And this is all about Wilfred Clarke and Company in "Who Owns the Flat," which is the funniest skit I have seen for many a long day, or night either, for that matter, and will you take the word of a hardened—not necessarily depraved, but hardened—critic, that it was acted to perfection by every member of the company, including the boss who, I suppose, is Mr. Clarke himself. It is hard to analyze this little sketch: It was not so unusual in situation, and while the lines were witty and there were many unexpected turns, yet the author, Lawrence Grattan, is no Shaw or Wilde. Here is my summing up: It is the Spirit of Vaudeville. Just that; the spirit of vaudeville at its best. There is as much plot condensed into its twenty minutes as would stick out two hours and ten minutes of musical comedy.

The way the actors tossed the ball to each other would serve as a model of just how this sort of farce ought to be handled, and I can find no fault with them in any particular. It would be invidious to single out any one when all did so well, but being a mere man and a susceptible one, perhaps the charm, dash and sprightliness of Carol Gordon, as Dick's wife, made the most impression on me; but I realize this is purely personal.

Just one of the lines I brought home with me gives an idea of the whole:

Clara—But I don't know you from Adam.

Jack—Well, don't you think there is some difference in the clothes.

Then followed Nat Wills, who, again, is all that he should be, and has that mysterious thing called Vis Comica to a greater degree than any one on the American stage to-day. Harry Lauder, of course, is the chief exponent. It is this quality which will make even a commonplace saying sound funny, and while the Wills patter was fair enough, it was nothing to write home about. It is the Wills person that makes this—another example of the Spirit of Vaudeville. Anyway, he kept his audience, including the former Professional Lady and myself, in "gales of laughter."

It seems almost ungracious, after having had such a good time, to find fault, but I cannot refrain from suggesting that Maude Fealy is no better suited in her vehicle this week than she was last. The situation was hackneyed, and the lines banal. Fancy any one seriously getting off such a cliche as: "With a woman, the sin is not in what she does but in being found out." Also they substituted a piano-accordionist for Grace La Rue this week. Grace had been taken sick. I wish the piano-accordionist had been taken sick.

But remember what I say: Keep away from the Orpheum this week if you have a sore lip.

Italian General Pisano "Somewhere in Pantages"

At Pantages this week, General Pisano certainly made W. Tell look silly, and in conjunction with the blank rifle and the blank cartridges (the ad. doesn't get by here) did things to candle flames, lighted cigarettes in assistant's mouth, and other fearsome and spectacular tricks. He can shoot equally well apparently from any angle, with any rest, and with or without a mirror. He should be a good man for the trenches somewhere in Italy, to my way of thinking.

At the other end of the programme were the "Six Stylish Steppers" with an astonishing variety of clog dances. What they couldn't do with their feet, at least in the way of clog and buck dancing, I don't believe can be done by any living sole (I apologize, but I couldn't help it.) Then there are two amusing skits: "The New Leader," with Jack Delman and Co., being a skit on the stage itself, with the fake leader rushing out from the audience, and is well worth seeing.

The other: Sharon Stevens and Co. in the "Boy from Home," was an unusual version of the Hick story. In this instance the Rube turns the laugh on the sophisticated city lawyer, or rather calls him down. Otherwise the show had the usual diverse entertainers whose merits are purely matters of personal predilection, but judging by the packed houses and hearty applause the audience was well pleased.

Advance Notices

Orpheum—The Orpheum announces for next week a bill of headliners. George MacFarlane, one of the most famous and most popular baritone singers in light opera, will make his first vaudeville appearance in this city. Mr. MacFarlane not only knows how to put the dash and charm into a love song, but he is also a brilliant comedian. He was one of the stars of the Gilbert and Sullivan all-star opera company that recently met with such favor. He has also been the stellar feature of "The Heart of Heather," and other important successes. Harry Tighe, who is styled "The You-All-Know-Em" Comedian, with the assistance of the dainty ingenue, Sylvia Jasen, will present a sparkling and enjoyable act which gives Mr. Tighe full scope for the exhibition of a new brand of humor, which permits of extemporaneous wit and ad lib. foolery. Miss Jasen is a bright and vivacious actress, plentifully endowed with ability and good looks. Bert Clark and Mabel Hamilton, the favorite English comedians, will present a piano playing, singing, dancing and talking novelty entitled "A Wayward Concert." Libonita, the Ragtime Xylophonist, and a thorough master of his instrument, will furnish a most delightful quarter of an hour's diversion. Grace La Rue, the International Star of Song, who has scored one of the greatest hits in the history of the Orpheum, will be in response to a generally expressed wish retained for another week, and will introduce new songs. Wilfred Clarke and Company will appear in "Who Owns the Flat," and the Gladiators will exhibit their wonderful strength and prowess as gymnasts. Next week will be the last of Nat M. Wills, "The Happy Tramp," who will introduce new witticisms.

George MacFarlane, the favorite baritone, next week at the Orpheum

Pantages Theatre—Pantages will have a miniature rodeo of its own next Sunday afternoon, and continuing for a matinee and two shows every night. "Arizona Joe," a genuine puncher of short horned steers from the ranges of Cheyenne and thereabouts, with a crowd of ten yelping stalwarts from adjacent ranches, have banded an act which they title "Tastiness of the Plains." There is one lone female in the vest pocket Wild West show. Adele von Ohl by name, and she does some marvelous riding on a couple of untamable bronchos. Back again, but always welcome, comes Gus Edwards' "School Days," with the irresistible Tenton school master and his unruly tykes. Chester is the trainer of a collection of snow white canines, which he values at $10,000, and the dogs have a posing specialty, which is said to be a few notches above the average. Knapp and Cornalla mildly assert that they do almost everything that any vaudeville performer is expected to show to get regular money; Lillian Watson is a demure song bird; Press and Scanlon, late with Valeska Surratt, have new dancing steps, the fifteenth chapter of "The Iron Claw" will disclose the identity of the "laughing mask," and Ruhe Goldberg's "Boob Weekly" is funnier than last week.

Both the film fans and those to whom California and everything connected with her early days is in the nature of a religion, will be able to see a projected story on the screen at the Columbia this week, which leaves nothing to be desired in the way of completeness and perfection of detail. And certainly there is more color, romance and temperament connected with Californian history than with all the rest of the States of the Union put together.

The photo-dramatic spectacle of the days of '49, "The Argonauts of California," opened an engagement at the Columbia Theatre last Sunday afternoon, before two enthusiastic audiences. The film is a ten reel picture with portrayals of the dramatic climaxes, the romance and the violence of the "days of gold."

The prologue tells of Marshall, the man by the mill brook and the glittering bauble; of the gold he found and what befell the finders.

Then the scene is transferred to the Eastern States, and there is shown how the world received the news of the discovery and the adventures of those who ventured forth to search for gold.

With the coming of the gold seekers there is depicted their adventures in California, their wealth and poverty, their joys and sorrows, their loves and hates, their plots and counter-plots, their heroes and their villains.

The trials and battles of the Vigilance Committee to restore law and order are pictured, and through all runs a pretty love tale.

Reproductions of Portsmouth Square as it appeared in the early days, of Placerville where the first gold seekers went, and other noted places in the wealth of California's early history, enliven the picture to those who see it, and it should be missed by none.

Oakland Opera Season Opens in "Martha"

Last Monday night before a large audience the American Opera Co. presented Flotow's "Martha," and, as the first of the series given by the transbay operatic producers, it was watched with much interest.

It was evident from the start that the rendition is in the nature of a personal triumph for Paul Steindorff, the leader, and the chorus scored over the principals. And that, you understand, is not intended as a knock for the latter.

Mary Bernhofer, the soprano, in the role sung by Patti, by no means suffered in comparison with the greatest singer of the past generation, especially in the interpolated song: "The Last Flim-Flam Hero for Film Drama.

The story of Margaret Abercrombie and "Dr." Crawford puts the most sensational fiction on its mettle, and reduces the most stirring screen drama of "high life" to the commonplace.

For a week now we have gulped down our morning coffee and buttered our toast with the details of this affair spread in black face type over the morning newspapers.

And the wonder of it all almost outweighs the pity of it.

It's the same sort of wonderment that springs eternal in the human brain whenever the mind turns to the American girl and her affairs. She is given the longest rope of all girls, the wide world over the seven seas around, and to the amazement of all the world she seldom hangs herself with it!

But now and then comes a case like this, and makes us realize how lax we are in such matters. Miss Margaret Abercrombie lived at the Palace Hotel under the protection of her mother and step-father, George A. McGowan. Miss Abercrombie and her sister, Baroness Von Brincken, are indisputably two of the most beautiful young women in San Francisco, and they have both been admired and painted by most of the visiting artists of note who came this way during the Exposition period. They have wealth, excellent family connections, and in the few years that they have been here have built up a comfortable position in good society. They are not in the Burlingame set, but they belong to a coterie of social distinction.

It seems incredible that a man like "Dr." Crawford could have his flimsy credentials accepted even for a day by a family like this. The social exactions for the male climber are always negligible, and there is nothing amazing in the fact that a man as presentable as this fellow should get his passports into the pleasure halls of society, for he played a pretty hand at bridge, turned a neat heel to the dance measure, had a light conversation constantly on tap, and society often accepts such men without scrutinizing their records.

But this man did not come into the McGowan family as a mere filler-in for social utility. From the very day that Miss Margaret Abercrombie met him she evinced an interest in him that made her parents realize that her heart was involved. To be sure, they were not exactly pleased, for, in their opinion, he did not stack up with the procession of suitors which she had sent marching along. After the briefest acquaintance, pretty Miss Margaret announced to her parents that she was going to marry Crawford, and they reluctantly gave their consent—but the point is that, however reluctant, they did announce to the public the engagement of their daughter to Crawford.

The wedding date was set for September, but one fine morning there was a motor trip to Salinas, and the young couple were married. Twelve days later, the family put Crawford on the carpet, waved his record in his face, and now the girl wife wants her marriage, which is not legal anyway, annulled.

Why, in the name of all common sense, didn't they make a few inquiries before they announced the engagement. Five minutes' conversation with the head surgeon at the Marine Hospital, and they would have discovered that the man had no right to call himself a naval surgeon. A simple ride in a street car, a quick dash in an automobile, or even a telephone call would have given the family something definite on which to base their objections to the wedding. One feels sure that in no other country in the world could a man so easily walk off with a girl like Margaret Abercrombie.

Shattered Romance of the Sometime Ago.

Society is reminded of the affair of Miss Genevieve Goad (now Mrs. Robinson Riley) and the South African mining man who came to these parts sponsored by a well known New York and San Francisco society chap. The man won the hand of the beauty of the season, Miss Genevieve Goad, and their engagement was announced. Shortly before the wedding the story leaked out that there was a chapter in his past which he had not disclosed to his fiancée nor her family. To be sure, those who knew him best and knew of this closed incident in his career found many extenuating reasons for the affair, and the man who had sponsored him here continued to be his ardent advocate. But the Goad family insisted that the engagement must be broken, and the beauty of the season finally succumbed to the family pressure, and the wedding plans were sent into the limbo of the never-never land.

And the beauty of the season went to Europe with the S. G. Murphys, and on the steamer she met Robinson Riley, and the wedding bells soon rang without any discordant note.

And the South African went on his imperturbable way, still received in the best society, but matrimonially marked down as undesirable by appraising parents who had to be ever on guard, for while he made no effort to win their interest, girls just naturally turned toward him as the sunflowers turn toward their shining suitor of the high heavens.

The Truth About Gambling in Blingum.

There are so many and such varied tales of the gambling that goes on in the Burlingame set that the other day I asked a friend who moves and has her being in that crowd to give me the straight of it, and thus spake she: "We gamble with moderation. No one in calling off the names of the plungers would ever inscribe us in the list. Both my husband and I put up bets on our golf games, and play cards for money, and we keep books, so I can tell you just what it costs us.

"Last year between us we were over $3,000 in the hole. This year we will break about even, because we are putting up a much better game of bridge, are playing much better together, doing better team work. It used to make me terribly nervous to play with my husband, and I could never do myself justice. Of course, husband and wife usually play bridge together to keep the financial balance, and the married people who 'rag' each other give an advantage to the ones who do good team work.

"This year we've played with dove-like accents, and we'll probably break even, as I said before. But at one time we lost nearly $500 in a week—went out to dinner parties every night, played poker and lost. Of course, we play more or less with the same crowd all the time, which is the only way to square things up.

"There is one house down here on the peninsula where the host always insists on high stakes, and no one ever goes there without being prepared to write large checks if the Gods of Chance are grim. I heard of one night when $25,000 plus exchanged hands.

"I would say without fear of contradiction that no one who goes in our crowd can figure on putting up less than a few hundred a month when there is a run of bad luck. And sometimes the bad luck spreads over several months, and one is apt to be a few thousand to the bad. But in the long run it averages up if one plays with the same crowd.

"Of course, it's a questionable habit this matter of gambling, but we can't find anything else that's half so stimulating and such fun. To be sure, a lot of people that I know play for higher stakes than they can afford, and they keep their tradespeople waiting for money, which is unforgivable, I think, but I suppose that the trades people figure on slow pay from these people, and they overcharge them and square it up in that way.

"While I'm confessing, I might as well give you an example of how we do things down here in Burlingame. Last week I didn't play cards at all in the afternoon—but I had a few side bets on golf—and won! We had week-end guests who arrived on Saturday afternoon. We all went to a dinner given for the Walter Martins, and after dinner we played cards for several hours. We had played every night for a week, and between us were about $200 to the good, but in that one night I lost over $200, and my husband lost something like $75, which shows you how it goes.

Younger Set Dances.

In spite of the fact that the calendar shows that it is the closed season for town events, there have been a number of informal entertainments this week. A very pretty affair for the younger set was given at the home of Mrs. George Bucknall, in honor of her granddaughter, Miss Desiree Marriott, who is one of the attractive girls in that group of young people whose family connections and ramifications reach back to the best traditions of the old San Francisco families.

Mrs. Bucknall invited about twenty-five young couples to her spacious home, where dancing was enjoyed until midnight, when a delicious supper was served. The Knickerbocker Quartette, which furnished the music, played all the new dance music which bewitches the most jaded dancer into renewed enthusiasm. There are a number of new bits that have come out from New York, and with so much good music there is a revival of interest in the dance. The younger set has, of course, never lost interest, as was attested the other night when the wee sma' hours found them still making merry.

Mrs. Bucknall will entertain frequently during the winter for the young friends of her granddaughter.

Louis A. Schwabacher, for four years the honored and efficient president of the Concordia Club, was tendered a testimonial dinner at the club by the directors of the organization on regret of his seeking retirement. This mark of esteem was taken up enthusiastically by the appreciation committee of the club, Messrs. Sig. Greenebaum, J. J. Gottlob, Gus Brenner, Geo. Roos and Leopold Michaels, and he was subsequently tendered a delightful luncheon at the St. Francis. At this luncheon a testimonial was presented him in the shape of a beautiful leather portfolio, conveying the spirit of the testimonial in letters of gold, and a picture of the handsome new Concordia Club house on which President Schwabacher had spent so much of his private time in developing it into the present ideally attractive shape. Mr. Schwabacher also suggested the present very successful junior membership, so that the young folk would be able to enjoy the unusually excellent athletic privileges of the club-house, including the swimming pool and other benefits. Mr. Schwabacher will be followed in the presidency by Chas. Hirsch, a long and experienced member of the club.

On Thursday, June 15th, Mrs. A. S. Danforth of Los Angeles entertained with a tea party at the Hotel Oakland. The following guests were among the party: Mesdames Marnedel, Robert Bain, George C. Browne, F. Howard Seely, H. F. Mannhart, Arthur L. Duncan, Howard W. Bray, F. O. Erwin and Minnie H. Bayley.

A wedding breakfast was served on Monday at the Hotel Oakland for Mr. and Mrs. L. D. Swift, who were married at St. Francis de Sales, Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Bell, parents of the bride, Mrs. A. E. Swift, the groom's mother, Harold Swift, F. A. Conolly, Miss E. A. Swift, Mr. and Mrs. G. R. Stapleton, and Mrs. F. M. Davis.

On Tuesday, June 20th, Miss Vivian Armstrong entertained about fourteen of her intimate friends at a pretty luncheon at the Hotel Oakland announcing her engagement to Mr. Eustace Bell. A huge centerpiece of pink roses formed the decoration, and dainty cards bearing Cupids suspended in a ring were the place cards, while tiny bouquets of orange blossoms formed the favors.

One of the prettiest innovations of the social round in town these late June days is the Perfume Dance at the Techau Tavern—an idea that is not at all original to San Francisco, for it has held the interest of the early summer about the New York hotels. Shortly after the luncheon hour each afternoon at the Tavern, a small souvenir jardiniere of La Boheme Perfume is presented to the ladies dancing. Again at five o'clock the ladies coming from the Ice Palace or the matinees are offered the same opportunity, for the Tavern management awards at this hour three large $4 size La Boheme Perfume jars without dancing or competition of any sort. Yesterday afternoon I found the dining salon of the Tavern thronged with a merry set of dancers asking the question: "Did you get a La Boheme Perfume jar?" The noon-time Hurry-Up-Luncheon for business men is unsurpassed for quality and service. At the dinner hour one may begin dancing at 7 o'clock, when Gino Cerveri's baton falls for the Parisian Tango.

BAY COUNTY "GET TOGETHER" MOVEMENT.

An effective step towards fostering a finer "get together" spirit between business men of Oakland and San Francisco was taken this week when the Oakland Chamber of Commerce and the Rotary Club of Oakland both agreed to accept the invitation of the California Home Industry League to discuss ways and means of promoting the mutual good of the manufacturing and merchandising interests of both cities at a combined luncheon to be held in the banquet room of the Home Industry League in the Palace Hotel on Thursday, June 29th, at 12:15.

IT WAS THE FIRST TIME.

Jones was a pastmaster of the habit of carelessness. He dropped things around in any old place and afterwards never remembered where that place was. One night he rose from bed to get some medicine and swallowed his collar button in mistake for a cough drop.

"Mary," said he to his wife, when the awful truth dawned upon him, "I have swallowed by collar button."

"That's all right," responded wife in a tone of evident satisfaction. "There's nothing to worry about."

"Nothing to worry about?" returned father. "Do you—"

"That's what I said," interrupted little wifey. "For once in your life you know where you've put it."—Exchange.

—Medium—The spirit of your wife is here now; do you wish to speak to her through me? Widower—Ask her where in the dickens she put my summer underwear?—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

—“Won’t your mother be mad when she sees how you tore your clothes?” “I guess not so very. Ma’ll have lots of fun huntin’ up cloth to match an’ putting in a patch so people can hardly notice it.”—Puck.

—The Rector—What would be your idea of the best way to spread the gospel to the uttermost parts of the earth. Fair and Frivolous Parishioner—How would it do to put a Bible in every Ford car, doctor?—Puck.

—Making the geography lesson as interesting as possible, the teacher asked the name of one of our allies. “France,” cried one little boy. “Now name a town in France.” “Somewhere,” promptly returned the youngster.—Tit-Bits.

—Hawker—Buy a flower, sir? Billion—No, thanks. Hawker—Buy one for your wife, sir. Billion—Haven’t one. Hawker—For your sweetheart, then. Billion—Haven’t one, either. Hawker—Well, buy one to celebrate your luck.—Houston Chronicle.

—“I suppose,” said the timid young man, “when you recall what a handsome young fellow your husband was you wouldn’t consider me for a minute?” “Oh, yes, I would,” sweetly replied the window, “but not for a second.”—Weekly Telegraph.

—“Hints on courtship abound. Every magazine will tell you how to win a wife. Anybody will gladly post you on the etiquette of love-making.” “What’s in your mind?” “But after a man marries he has to shift completely for himself.”—Pittsburgh Post.

—“Any rattlesnakes around here?” “What’s your business?” asked the boy with the big straw hat. “What has that to do with it?” “Well, the last man who looked around here for summer board asked me a lot o’ questions like that, and when I told him there wasn’t any rattlesnakes or mosquitoes or anything, he said he was a naturalist, and he guessed the place wouldn’t suit him.”—Washington Star.

BUSINESS OUTLOOK THROUGHOUT COUNTRY.

It is too early yet to estimate the effect of the presidential campaign upon business and financial conditions. A great many things may happen to change the situation between now and election. But it is a fallacy to suppose that presidential years always affect business adversely. In both of the last two presidential campaigns politics had relatively little effect upon general business, which continued very good indeed. In neither of those years, however, were underlying conditions as favorable as they now are. The country's trade is still very active, although in a few lines there has been some slackening, due as much as anything else to high cost of raw material and the growing scarcity of labor; and both these factors are likely to have important influence during the next six months, according to Wells-Fargo National Bank. Foreign buying of American steel continues to be an important influence in that market, within the last month 50,000 tons of steel having been contracted for. Large orders for railroad supplies would probably be given out if American manufacturers were in a position to guarantee deliveries within a specified time. The output of new securities this year in the United States up to June 1st aggregated about $1,175,000,000. As compared with the flotations in the same period last year the present total shows a gain of nearly $500,000,000. This enormous increase is largely accounted for by the formation of new industrial companies engaged in the manufacture of army supplies and productions which were formerly purchased from foreign producers. Bank clearings in May were much the largest ever shown in that month, and advices from leading industrial centers reflected increased activity, with an excellent undertone to business. The country is doing an extensive trade abroad, although of a somewhat different character from that witnessed at the time that the largest orders for munitions were being given out. It is evident that after the war ends, Europe will have to depend upon this country for heavy supplies of food-stuffs as well as large quantities of merchandise and of lumber and other building materials, which cannot be purchased anywhere else.

—The Independent Producers' Agency reports for May an average daily production of crude oil of 249,167 barrels, as against an output of 245,749 barrels daily in April. Shipments from the fields in May aggregated 8,829,250 barrels, or a daily average of 284,814 barrels. The reduction in the stocks of stored oil last month amounted to 1,105,066 barrels, or a daily average of 35,647 barrels. Stocks on hand June 1st amounted to 51,917,764 barrels, as compared with 55,977,180 on January 1, 1916.

—Tonopah ore shipments last week amounted to 8,937 tons, valued at $186,126, as against 8,917 tons, valued at $185,766, during the preceding week. Belmont shipped 2,748 tons; Tonopah Mining 2,000 tons, Tonopah Extension 2,200 tons, Jim Butler 700 tons, West End 678 tons, Rescue 161 tons, Halifax 214 tons, North Star 58 tons, Midway 57 tons, and Montana 100 tons. Tonopah Belmont's net profits for May were $126,263. Net profits for May earned by Tonopah Mining were $26,330.

—The gross value of the ore extracted by Union exceeded $14,100 last week, including a considerable quantity that ran $71 per ton. The Ophir was reported to be proceeding in ore of low value in the north drift on the 2,700 foot level, and to have followed a stringer on the 2,400 foot level into eighteen inches of quartz that assays over $8 per ton. From the 2,500 foot level of Sierra Nevada the extraction continues, amounting to seventy-two tons that averaged $1.55.

—Union Consolidated shipped seven carloads of base bullion this week of an estimated value of $30,000. The management received $13,600 for three carloads shipped on June 9th.

OAKLAND OPERA SEASON OPENS

Rose of Summer," which Patti almost made her own, and which she first introduced into this opera. Miss Bernhofer sang with much feeling and expression; although like most American singers—Emma Eames, for example—she impresses more with brilliancy than deep emotional content. It is Puritanism working even in the theatre, presumably.

As Nancy, Louise Noe not only sang admirably, but acted her role to great advantage as compared with the others. Her enunciation was particularly clear, and the attention of the producers should be called to the fact that so far as the other principals were concerned, they might as well have been using a foreign language.

Joseph Fredericks, as Lionel, took both the singing and acting honors among the men; it is remarkable how much acceptable personality and acting will bolster up singing with the average auditor; and perhaps the soloists would have been more successful if they possessed that mysterious thing called magnetism, which, like the odor of onions, is easy to perceive but difficult to define.

Perhaps the most kindly thing to say about the stage and costuming is to say nothing; and it is to be hoped that the long waits of the first night were not repeated. No performers on earth could fight against that, so perhaps you will have to use reverse English with much of the foregoing.

SHIFTING METHODS OF SELECTING A PRESIDENT

Nothing was said in the Constitution of the United States about selecting candidates for president. That instrument instructs the nation how to elect a president, but not how to pick out the two or three persons from 100,000,000 who shall receive our ballot.

So we permit political parties to name our favorites. This practice was not always in use.

Nobody nominated Washington for president. There was no convention and no caucus. The legislatures of the States early in 1789 selected presidential electors, and these sixty-nine electors might have voted for anybody for president. There was no instruction of any kind. There had been no candidates.

However, it is significant of the popularity of the man who was "first in war, first in peace and first in the hearts of his countrymen" that all sixty-nine electors voted for Washington.

In 1792 every elector again voted for Washington. He was the only president who received a unanimous vote.

In that early day every presidential elector voted for two candidates for president. The one who received most votes was to become president and the one who came second was to be vice-president.

In 1796 the great fight for president was between John Adams and Thomas Jefferson. But no convention and no caucus and no legislature and no mass meeting had nominated either of them. People just voted for those two because they were popular leaders.

This will convince you that presidential electors at that time did what the constitution of the United States manifestly intended they should always do, namely, act as free agents in naming the president.

The vote for president at the beginning was trifling. Only 5,903 ballots were cast in Pennsylvania for Washington in 1789, and 4,576 three years later. The proportion of stay-at-homes was far greater than it is to-day.

The battle between Burr and Jefferson in 1800 resulted in an amendment to the Constitution. Voters had evidently intended that Jefferson should be president, and Burr vice-president, but Burr's vote equalled Jefferson's, and so the election went to Congress, where Jefferson won.

The amendment to the constitution was passed in time for the 1804 election, which was the first time that men voted for one man for president and one for vice-president. Up to that time nobody was ever nominated by anybody or any convention or caucus for president. Presidential electors voted as they pleased.

Then arose old "King Caucus," as he was called. Political parties in Congress would hold a caucus to select a standard-bearer. Congressional caucuses continued to name favorites for many years, or until they got to be a scandal, and then the national political convention was born. The first national party convention in America met in Philadelphia in September, 1830.

It was an anti-Masonic party, but its convention failed to nominate a candidate for president to be voted for two years later. The first national convention that really selected a candidate for president gathered at Baltimore in 1831.

It was the National Republican party—you will observe that it was not officially called Whig—and that convention nominated Henry Clay for president and John Sergeant, the celebrated Philadelphia lawyer, for vice-president.

AT DRUGGISTS AND DEPARTMENT STORES

BRET HARTE.

What wizardry is this? What necromance?
 These forest-aisles, these mountains grim and vast?
 These shadowy forms and faces that advance
 From out the misty past?

The old familiar faces, how they crowd!
 Like ghosts returning from the farther shore!
 These Beings without Being, yet endowed
 With Life forevermore.

Each in my own life-weft has woven part,
 Whether or grave or gay; unkempt or shorn;
 This one, "The Luck" they call him, stole my heart
 The day that he was born.

With these I sat beside the camp-fire's glow
 And heard, through untaught lips, old Homer tell
 The Tale of Troy, till with the falling snow
 God's last white silence fell.

I knew the cabin in the lone ravine
 Where she, the Fallen, far from mart and men,
 Watched by the stricken and, unknown, made clean
 Her garment's hem again.

And these, the Partners in world-storm and stress
 With faithful love, unknowing selfish aim;
 The friendship pure that grew not cold nor less
 Through good or evil fame.

These, too (I loved them!), reckless, debonair,
 That life and fortune staked upon a cast;
 The soul itself held lightly as the air,
 To win or lose at last.

I tracked the mountain trail with them; the sweet
 Cool smell of pines I breathed beneath the stars;
 The laugh, the song I heard; the rhythmic feet
 To tinkle of guitars.

I knew the Mission's fragrant garden-close,
 Heavy with blooms the wind might scarcely stir,
 Its little laughing maid—Castillian rose!—
 And saucy speech of her.

I knew them all—but best of all I knew (Who in himself had something of all these)
 The Man, within whose teeming fancy grew
 These wondrous histories.

I see him often, with the brown hair half
 Tossed from the leaning brow, the soft yet keen
 Gray eyes uplifted with a tear or laugh
 From the pen-pictured scene.

And hear the voice that read to me his dear
 Word-children—and I listen till I seem Back in the olden days; they are the near
 And these are but a dream.

O Prince of Song and Story! Thee we claim
 The first and dearest, still our very own!
 We will not yield the glory of thy name
 Nor dare thy laureled throne!

—Ina D. Coolbrith.

—The artist was painting,—sunset, red, with blue streaks and green dots. The old rustic, at a respectful distance, was watching. "Ah," said the artist, looking up suddenly, "perhaps to you, too, nature has opened her sky-pictures page by page? Have you seen the lambent flame of dawn leaping across the livid east, the mid-stained, sulfurous islets floating in the lake or fire in the west; the ragged clouds at midnight, black as a raven's wing, blotting out the shuddering moon?" "No," replied the rustic, shortly; "not since I signed the pledge."—Tit-Bits.

—The famous old financial district in California street is rapidly taking on a substantial, dignified and affluent appearance that indicates the advent of an unusually prosperous era for this city. The character of these changes supports the forecast that California street will eventually acquire the same reputation in finance and trade in the West that Wall street holds in the East. The splendid and substantial structures built there since the big fire are augurs of this character of development. Glance over the list of prominent firms and corporations there in finance, trade, insurance investments and professional life, and one will find the leaders in their respective lines. Plans for new imposing structures in that bee hive of big industries are already underway. A block distant is the U. S. Sub-Treasury.

The Union Steamship Company, under the expansion of its extraordinary world-wide trade, has been forced to move into more commodious quarters, where it can find growing elbow-room. It moved to 230 California street, and now occupies the ground floor of the Hind building. The China Steamship Company are on Montgomery street, just around the corner of California street. The Pacific Mail S. S. are now on California street, above Montgomery. The Royal Mail Steam Packet is at 310 California, the Kosmos line at the corner of Front and California, and the Dollar S. S. Co. in the Hind Building. The big Matson line of steamers are a block away from the Union Steamship offices. The city offices of the Union Iron Works are nearby; so are scores of other big shipping firms, whose growing fleets are adventuring into new seas in search of world wide trade. The big corporations are getting together in California street.

—Mrs. Richards has developed in her kindergarten at the St. Francis a surprising degree of juvenile talent. These youngsters of the wealthy families of San Francisco have exhibited such an interesting mastery of folk dancing and like performances that they have been invited to produce outdoor plays of a very interesting character at the Mt. Diablo estate. It is possible that many of these children will come as a result of this to appear in a pageant which is planned for the immediate future.

—The business men who are going into training camp at Monterey may find their quarters shifted to Mexico.

INSURANCE

The new industrial insurance commission of Washington have ordered radical changes in procedure under the workmen's compensation law. Hereafter all pensioners will be required to make affidavit every three months showing their condition. Advance cash payments to dependents of injured workmen will hereafter be discontinued except where shown to be absolutely necessary for the protection of property interests of the beneficiary. In case of injury to an employee engaged in county road work, the employer's report of the accident must be approved by a member of the board of county commissioners before the same is forwarded to the department for filing. All the bogus claims unearthed in the Gillies frauds were for accidents of this character.

Reform is running riot in the Washington State Insurance Bureau. The new commissioners demand a more efficient system of bookkeeping, reporting accidents and passing on claims.
The old system of collection is also severely criticised, and it is proposed to establish an arrangement by which the honest employer will not, as at present, be compelled to bear too large a share of the burden. It is proposed that each employer be given a report on his class, showing the experience, in order that he can know whether they are paying a just proportion of the premium, and that the different plants may be graded according to their accident experience.

The new California workmen's compensation manual, which is now in effect, shows an average reduction under all classifications of eight per cent. In cases where the new rates are raised, policies will be permitted to run to expiration without additional premium, while where rates are decreased, the companies and State Fund will make pro rata return of premiums, dating from June 1st, either upon demand or at the end of the policy year. The merit rating system is being revised by a committee appointed by the Rating Bureau, experience having shown the present working basis, which is modeled after that used in the East, not to accord with local conditions.

A movement is again being made to create a metropolitan department which shall include the downtown sections of both San Francisco and Oakland. A similar attempt by the Pacific Board last year to interest both board and non-board companies in bringing about such an arrangement failed to secure the cooperation of the non-boarders, and was consequently abandoned.

Thomas L. Miller, at one time president of the West Coast-
San Francisco Life, has disposed of his interests in San Francisco and taken up his residence in New York. Mr. Miller is a member of the board of directors of the Casualty Company of America, which recently took over the business of the Pacific Coast Casualty, of which he was also president.

George S. Kimball has been appointed State Superintendent for the West-Coast-San Francisco Life, with headquarters at the home office. His energies will be applied to the reviving of lapsed policies. Actuary Thompson has placed a series of old age income policies on the market at special low rates.

By the sale of 10,000 additional shares of company stock, to prominent men syndicated for the purpose, the Guardian Fire of Salt Lake increases its capital to $200,000, and its surplus to a like amount, and it is the purpose of the management to enter other States and to push for business.

Dan F. Carter has resigned as treasurer of the G. B. Sloan &
Company brokerage firm to become a broker on his own account. He will have offices in the Mills Building, San Francisco.

Claiming it to be the universal practice of casualty companies to settle claims to the disadvantage of employees, the San Francisco Building Trades Council has announced its intention to bring before the meeting of the California State Federation of Labor, to assemble at Eureka next October, a proposition to have certain amendments made to the compensation law at the next assembling of the California Legislature.

A. W. Nyblom, who last year accepted the position of underwriting manager for the Pacific National Fire, has resigned. He announces his intention of re-entering the field as a special agent.

Manager Saunders announces the appointment of George H. Page, agency director for the Western States Life at the Los Angeles branch office. He was formerly agency director for the New York Life in Alberta, B. C.

W. H. Jenks, of Fresno, who confessed setting fire to the Frank Hickman Clothing Store, will be retried on the charge of insanity, Judge Austin having refused to sentence him to prison while a doubt as to his sanity exists.

Edgar L. Martin succeeds Frank L. Wheeler as Southern California manager of the General Accident. He resigns the office of superintendent of agencies for the company at San Francisco to accept the appointment.

Manager Fores announces the appointment of J. C. Winterburn as metropolitan manager of the Scottish Union and National. Mr. Winter was formerly counterman for the California Fire, and also in the same capacity with the Aetna.

Manager Russell W. Osborn announces that the Pennsylvania Fire's Pacific Department headquarters will be moved from the Royal Building to the Daniel Meyer building, Pine near Sansome, on August 1st.

—President Warren Porter, of the Western States Life, has announced to the field force of the company that on his recommendation H. J. Saunders has been unanimously elected vice-president and general manager. This merited promotion indicates that Mr. Saunders has made good. He entered the service of Western States Life as the head of its agency department on June 1, 1911, since which time the company's paid-for insurance in force has increased from 684 policies for $2,266,850, to 9,762 policies for $19,336,456, a gain during five years of 9,078 policies for $17,069,606. The annual premium income has increased from $79,565.45 on May 31, 1911, to $715,126.11 on May 31, 1916, showing a gain of $635,560.66. The total annual income from June 1, 1915, to May 31, 1916, was $881,991.83, which was $675,354.28 greater than from June 1, 1910, to May 31, 1911. The admitted assets have increased from $1,337,113.74 on June 1, 1911, to $2,237,015.34 on June 1, 1916, a gain of $859,901.60. The reserve on deposit with the State of California has increased from $23,872.75 on June 1, 1911, to $981,173 on June 1, 1916, an increase of $957,300.25.

INDIANS WHO HAVE TURNED FARMERS.

Originally, so I have been told, the Omaha tribesfolk did not take kindly to the white man's way of enormous crop production; and of the faction most strenuously opposed to the new order of life was the famous old hunter, White Horse. What, was it ordered that he take to the plow—he, too? Well, he would do no such thing. Neither would he go to church.

At least, he had at first been so resolved; but seeing that Chief Iron Eye had commanded everybody to attend Sunday services at Father Hamilton's Mission, White Horse did not quite see fit to ignore the injunction. He grudgingly obeyed; he harkened scornfully to the pulpit-talk about the blessings of labor and how Sunday was set apart as a day of rest, a holy day. If you worked on that day you would not prosper; the devil would make you trouble.

Now White Horse, it is said, had never been known to work; but coming home from Sunday services at the Mission, he immediately seized a spade, flung off his blanket, and began to dig, laboring with patience, diligently, until the sun had gone down. Thus did he express defiance. Every Sunday he expressed it; he did nothing but toil and sweat.

Meanwhile he saw no devil, nor bad luck. He raised a better garden than anybody. And oh, the joy of that! Triumph unspeakable! So inordinately proud was White Horse of his achievement that he could not help developing agricultural ambitions. Afterward he farmed not only on Sunday, but on every day in the week; it is even said that among all the Omaha people there was not a field laborer more zealous than he, nor a farmer more successful.—Keene Abott in Harper's Magazine for June.

A FIRST-CLASS GARAGE

There are many garages in town, and the motorist is often in a quandary as to where to go, especially for permanent service. There are very few who give you the QUALITY of service of Dow & Green, in Taylor street, between O'Farrell and Geary. Here your car will receive something more than the "once over," and the prices are moderate.

TRAILERS OF ALL SIZES

A choice of five different models, both two and four-wheel, with capacities from 600 to 1,500 pounds, is offered in the line of trailers marketed by the Miami Trailer Co., Troy, Ohio. The use of Standard motor car parts and a shock-absorbing draw-bar coupling are designed to make the trailers reveal the use of Timken axles and bearings, solid or pneumatic tires, semi-elliptic springs, front and rear; electric tail light and a weight of from 300 to 600 pounds depending on the carrying capacity. The trailer is attached to the chassis of the car, not to the axle. Special bodies will be built to order to meet the requirements of any light hauling need.

DANVER'S BRAKE-ROD SUPPORT

A patent has been issued to Andrew C. Danver, Pawtucket, R. I., on a brake-rod support having as its essential feature a round bearing C, mounted against a spiral spring B, and a plug or stop with a convex face against which the brake-rod F rides, the rod being held firmly in position by the pressure of the spring B. The device may be attached without disconnecting the brake-rod, and is said to prevent rattling.

The Plan—The Copy—The Lay-out—No Charge.

Sprightly Mr. Bienius says:—

I want to talk to the man who is responsible for the dividend checks at the end of the year.

To him I want to say that my advertising service will materially aid him in fulfilling his obligations to the stockholders. Some things other than a good "copy" writer are needed to make a good advertising manager.

For instance, knowledge of buying and selling, real personal salesmanship ability, mental scope bounded only by the utmost limits of the business itself, and perhaps most important of all the inborn knack of being a "merchandise," or anticipating the whims and the pulse of the public.

Newspaper copy is important, but display advertising must be coupled adequately with direct publicity to get the ultimate results.

Ideas are important, but without the ability to put them into resultful execution, hook them up with the selling force of the business, ideas are hybrid affairs, utterly valueless.

To the man who is responsible for the dividend checks at the end of the year, then, I want to say: "Grant me a five minute interview;" then if you are not convinced, well and good, for I will have met another successful man, and perhaps you will have been slightly benefited.

When shall I call?

Sprightly Mr. Bienius is at the News Letter Office. His advertising and consulting services are for you, call for him because he has many ideas, and ONE for your business.

MOTORS MAGAZINE SECTION

RAILROADS USE MOTOR 'BUSES AND TRUCKS

Nearly 500 motor vehicles were owned and operated last year by the principal steam railroads of the United Kingdom. The number was somewhat less than in 1914, owing to the requirements of the War Office, which requisitioned some of the vehicles for army purposes, taking, for example, 32 of the London and Northwestern's fleet of 52 omnibuses. It is expected, however, that this year will show a considerable increase.

The British railroads, collectively, possessed 223 motor 'buses last year and more than 250 trucks and vans for hauling parcels, baggage and freight. The largest fleet was as follows:

Railroad—	Motor Buses	Motor Trucks
Great Western	109	95
London and North Western	20	75
North Eastern	43	17
Midland	2	38
Great North'n of Scotland	36
London and So. Western..	2	27

The Midland doubled its fleet of trucks last year, and the North Western increased its fleet 50 per cent.

These road vehicles are used principally as connecting links between the main lines and towns located some distance back from the railroads.

There is a big opportunity for similar use of motor vehicles by the railroads and interurban electric lines in the United States for serving communities too small to make the construction and operation of branch roads profitable.

ASTOUNDING GROWTH OF OUR AUTOMOBILE EXPORTS

Automobile exports continue to grow at an almost unbelievable rate, as shown by the latest monthly summary of the Department of Commerce. March shipments this year were very nearly double those of March, 1915—7,418 vehicles against 3,768. In the nine months' period ended with last March, 55,140 motor vehicles, valued at $72,900,346, were exported, as compared with 17,876, valued at $23,289,218, exported in the corresponding period one year ago, and 20,471, valued at $18,765,656 two years ago. This is an increase of 157 per cent in value in one year, and of 288 per cent in two years.

Exports of passenger cars more than tripled both in number and value in the last year, and those of commercial vehicles were more than 2½ times as great as in the nine month period a year ago.

For nine months' exports ended March 31st, the figures are as follows:

Passenger Cars
	Number	Value
1914	19,928	$17,904,002
1915	11,663	9,551,731
1916	38,795	29,261,446

Commercial Cars
	Number	Value
1914	543	861,654
1915	6,313	18,737,487
1916	16,345	43,638,900

The principal countries to which cars were exported in the last nine months' period and the value of shipments in round figures were: United Kingdom, $22,000,000; Russia in Europe, $14,400,000; France, $13,200,000; Asia and other Oceania, $5,180,000; Australia and New Zealand, $4,000,000; Canada, $3,780,000; West Indies and Bermuda, $2,070,000.

By comparison with exports, the imports of foreign automobiles were almost negligible. During the same period only 772 cars, valued at $477,412, were imported, and only 71 of these came from France, England and Italy, as compared with 191 a year ago. Most of the remaining 700 probably came from Canada for re-export, as their average value was only $457, and 462 foreign cars, of an average value of $565, were exported from the United States.

INTERSTATE RECOGNITION LICENCES

"It a State can collect taxes out of its autoists, and out of all the neighboring autoists from other States, that State, of course, will have more revenue; and every other State that does likewise will similarly have more revenue. But if the people don't pay out that money into all the other States, it seems to me that money is still in the States and may be used for other purposes."

Thus Representative William C. Adamson, chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives, refers to the automobile taxation situation which limits the crossing and re-crossing of State lines by the owners of motor cars. Recently Mr. Adamson's committee reported the measure which bears his name, and which would make a home State license good in all other States for indefinite periods, and which it is hoped will be passed before the present Congress adjourns.

Addressing the motorists of the country at the annual banquet of the A. A. A. held in Washington, D. C., Representative Adamson expressed a belief that the measure could be passed if the motor car owners could make their congressmen agree "on the good old American interstate ideas of communication contained in the bill."

Referring to the early days of the motor car, representative Adamson said: "I was not at all alarmed when the first horseless vehicles began to spurt around through the country. I thought they were great things. I had read in history that our predecessors on this mundane sphere had had some primitive, elemental ideas of vehicles, but that they had never exactly struck the proper chord to make them available. When they began to come into vogue, I foresaw that they were going to be universally used, that they were going to lead the good roads building, that they were going to overcome the prejudices of the country people by carrying the motorists out through the country and raising the prices of everything the country people had to sell and giving to the townspeople the reciprocal benefit of getting those things fresh in return for paying a little higher price for them. It has been genuine progress in the use of the automobile. Now cars are not confined as luxuries to the rich and the imitators of the rich, but are used by the masses of the people who really need transportation facilities, and self-propelled vehicles are being used by the millions."

VISITING FIVE MISSIONS IN A DAY

Three Hundred Mile Drive Over the Beautiful California State Highway in a Case Car on a Pilgrimage to Historical Monuments that Mark the Beginning of the State's History

By R. R. l'Hommedieu

The motor car is laying the world at our feet. So fast has been the strides in its development that time has been lost and the people of to-day take its possibilities as a matter of course, as a thing that has always been and not the development of master minds in the last ten years.

One does not really appreciate how this developed piece of machinery is thoroughly turning the conditions of the people of the world into a state where speed is the predominating factor.

Yesterday the press of the world would devote one or two columns to the most ordinary events, but so wide has become the scope of news gatherers not only with the telegraph and the wireless, but also with the motor car, that to give a concise report of the doings of the day space has had to be curtailed so that all items of importance shall be mentioned.

In the press, the motor car has developed a new department, and while primarily was set aside to segregate the advertising, the demands of the public for motor information, not only of the cars themselves, but of the possibilities to be achieved with it, has forced into the life of the press a consideration for the motor car possibilities that must be recognized daily, weekly and monthly.

There is nothing in the life of the press that absorbs so much space as this self-same automobile department. The demand for news, interesting items, etc., are limitless.

No sooner is one story and pictures delivered before there is a cry for another. It was to fill this aching void that recently Latham, Davis & Company, Northern distributors for the Case car, were requested to send out one of their vehicles in search of interesting pictures and descriptive data that might interest the motor car owners.

It was to supply this demand that the journey to five of the California Missions was planned. It was not to be a leisure, but one in keeping with the speed demands, and had to be carried out over a

Enjoying the wonderful view of Carmel Bay from Cypress Point

Sunday. Those who laid out the journey planned it to cover the road between San Francisco and Carmel-by-the-Sea.

The journey, which consumed less than fourteen hours actual running time, was in marked comparison to the time demanded in the days when the Padres first established the historical monuments of Christianity in California. It was doing in hours what took more than days to accomplish when these good old monks traveled from the romantic shores of Carmel Bay to the wonderful Golden Gate, which was thought then to be the northerly point of California that could be traveled on foot by man.

What a marked contrast the State Highway, with its smooth boulevard service, is to the trails beaten down by the "Foot-Prints of the Padre." Mankind with the steam shovel and roller has obliterated the high grades along mountain sides until to-day it is practically level as compared to what the Holy Fathers had to travel.

The first Mission which, while we passed it, we did not visit, as all were familiar with it, is what is known to-day as Mission Dolores in San Francisco, but which, in fact, is Mission San Francisco.

This Mission, which was established in 1776, was in reality a celebration of the re-discovery of San Francisco Bay. How this was and how the Mission was established can be gleaned from Nellie Van De Grift Sanchez, when she says ("Spanish and Indian Place Names of California, page 185): "In remonstrating with the Visitador-General because no Mission had been provided for St. Francis in Upper California, Serra remarked: 'And is there no Mission for our Father St. Francis?' Senor Galvez replied: 'If St. Francis wants a Mission, let him cause his port to be found, and one will be placed there for him.' By his port, Galvez referred to a port already discovered and named, but which has been lost sight of during the intervening years, and which he wished to have re-discovered. This is further carried out by the succeeding statements of Palou, in which he says that after failing to recognize the port of Monterey, 'they came to the port of St. Francis, our Father, and they knew it immediately by the agreement of the descriptions which they carried,' referring to descriptions obtained from the papers of the first discoverers."

From San Francisco our journey led down El Camino Real to Santa Clara. The only thing that limited our speed here was the uncertainty of the traffic officers, whether on this Sunday morning they were up early and doing, or whether, like most people, were taking the benefit of a long Sunday morning sleep. Not wishing to take chances, we held at a steady pace of thirty miles an hour, and inside of two hours were rolling into Santa Clara. It was here that we reached our second Mission on the journey, and it is one of the historical spots in Northern California.

Santa Clara was the eighth Mission to be founded ("California," John S. McGroarty, page 83.) In the original arrangement it was intended to found this Mission at the time of the foundation of the San Francisco Mission, but a delay was occasioned because of the jealousy that was then rampant in military circles. Consequently, the foundation of Santa Clara did not take place until January 12, 1777.

"It was conducted by Padre Tomas de la Pena Saradia, under the direction of Father Junipero, the Father President, who was then at his own Mission of San Carlos at Carmelo.

"The history of the Mission Santa Clara is splendid with achievements and glamorous with romance. It still remains a highly successful institution, although its physical outlines are greatly changed from the original, owing to many repairs and alterations. The original church building, however, remains quite intact, and a cross that was reared on the day the Mission was founded is still standing. But the Franciscans are no longer there. In their place are the Jesuits, their ancient rivals, from whom, as it was ordained, the Franciscans snatched the glory of Christianizing California. Standing in the heart of the deep, lush valley of Santa Clara, the old Mission remains a busy place. From its ancient walls issue, year by year, throngs of eager students whom the Jesuits train for the work of the world.

"If Junipero Serra could come back to earth, he might regret that his own brown-robed brethren have been supplanted in a well loved spot, but he would see much else that would satisfy him. He would not look upon ruin and desolation, such as would sadden his vision at San Diego, Capistrano and many other places sacred to memory and very dear to him in the days of his labor on earth. But, instead, he would behold life and energy and power, and that industry in both worldly and spiritual affairs which he taught and which he exemplified in his own restless, indomitable and self-sacrificing career. And he would see inclosing the ancient church, from whose altars he preached, not the adobe walls upreared by his neophytes, but the clustering roof-trees, the long shaded streets and the gardens of Santa Clara town, thick with roses the whole year round."

"When the Spaniards passed through this valley ("Spanish and Indian Place names of California," page 167), they were not slow to recognize in it one of those favored spots on the earth's surface where climate and soil united to produce the highest results. So here they founded two Missions, one at Santa Clara and one at San Jose.

"Santa Clara stands in one of the most fertile valleys in California, which is equivalent to saying in the whole world, and is about forty-six miles south-south-east of San Francisco. The Mission was founded by Padres Pena and Murguia, January 12, 1777. The buildings now standing are mainly modern, but a small portion of the original structure being incorporated in them. The ceiling over the sanctuary is original, and a small part of the adobe buildings.

"Clara de Asis, the sweet saint for whom this Mission was named, was the daughter of a nobleman. Her beauty and wealth brought her many offers of marriage, all of which she refused, preferring to devote herself to a religious life. She became the founder of the Order of Franciscan nuns, known as the "Poor Clares," to whom many noble ladies attached themselves. The rules of the Order were so strict that St. Clara's health finally became undermined, and she died in an ecstatic trance, believing herself called to Heaven by angelic voices. Her special symbol is the lily, peculiarly appropriate for the patroness of the ever-blooming Santa Clara Valley."

Passing through San Jose we took up the threads of El Camino Real, and was bound south for Gilroy, some thirty miles distant, over the level roads that were visible for miles ahead.

Passing through Gilroy, our journey led towards the foothills, twisting and turning around the approaches to the canyon until we came to the delightful spot known as San Juan. Here is located the romantic Mission of San Juan Bautista.

"The delightful and picturesque little valley of San Benito with its fertile fields and great abundance of water next attracted the attention of the missionary and civil authorities, who decided that a new Mission should be built there to administer to the spiritual wants and physical needs of its numerous Indian inhabitants ("California," John S. McGroarty, page 91). This Mission was, accordingly, founded and was named San Juan Bautista in honor of St. John, the Baptist. The date was June 24, 1797. This Mission, the buildings of which have splendidly withstood the onslaughts of time, is located in the quaint and historic old village of San Juan, only a few miles distant from the thriving and modern city of Hollister. San Juan Bautista had a long and prosperous career."

Of all the Missions in Northern California, San Juan Bautista seems to hold its place with Carmel as spots where the iron horse of commerce has not disturbed the tranquility of the surroundings. San Juan Bautista, while it makes some attempt at commercialism, yet is the quiet town of yesterday, and there is rest about the spot that makes the motorist from San Francisco and other centers of the "Marts of trade" long to lay aside his cares, and there rest for at least a day or two.

Leaving the Mission, we took up our course over the new State Highway over San Juan Grade. Little over a year ago motorists had to travel over the old grade, which was considered in the early days of the motor car one great test of its ability. The automobile that could negotiate the San Juan grade and arrive at Del Monte had achieved something, almost as great in its way as the performance of Duncan street of to-day.

This had been my first trip over the new grade, and I was very much interested to see just what this road was, as I had traveled it many times before, over the old grade, in the heavy winter adobe going and in the dusty summertime.

It was also the one test of the trip to which this four-cylinder Case had the chance of showing its ability.

Up the grade the car speeded, even a little beyond the limit of the law, winding, twisting, in and out of the canyon, going higher and higher, the engine purring with a rhythm that made one's heart glad to see how splendidly the machinery answered.

Never once during this climb to the summit did this model Case car hesitate; in fact, the whole journey was made from the floor of San Benito valley to the summit on the high, without the slightest sign of stress. While the surveyors have done wonders in reducing the grade, yet there are pitches that must demand of the car that has not phenomenal power a going back from high to at least intermediate, if not low.

Once at the Summit, it was a long coast down to where the new road meets the old one, a few miles out of Salinas. Passing through Salinas, we journeyed on to the delightful spot of Del Monte, where a stop was made for luncheon before going on into Old Monterey, thence on through the celebrated Seventeen Mile Drive to Carmel-by-the-Sea.

Leaving the hotel, it was just a couple of minutes before we arrived at Mission San Carlos. This Mission in appearance is a striking contrast to San Juan Bautista, which we left an hour or so before. It has been restored and has a more up-to-date appearance, and has lost thereby its romantic atmosphere, which is always an indescribable attraction to the tourist.

"June 3, 1770, was the first great day in the history of Monterey ("California," John S. McGroarty, page 72), a history destined to be filled with many great days. It was upon this date that Father Junipero Serra founded there his own Mission of San Carlos, with the celebration of the Mass, the singing of the Te Deum Laudamus, and all the stately ceremonial of the Roman ritual. On the same day the royal standard of Charles III, King of Spain, was unfurled and saluted by salvos of artillery and California claimed for the ancient throne of Castile and Leon.

"The presidio was named 'The Royal

Presidio,' and was ever afterwards so called during Spain's dominion over California to distinguish it from the other presidios that were to be, and that were afterwards established. And it was decided to call the church to be erected at the Mission, the 'Royal Chapel,' thus establishing Monterey as the civil, military and religious headquarters of the Kingdom of Spain in California.

"Hoping and praying for the best at San Diego, Father Junipero now started in with a will to build up the Mission San Carlos at Monterey. He built a chapel adjacent to the soldiers' quarters on perhaps the same spot where the stone church of San Carlos at Monterey now stands. Around the church a palisade was erected. This done, he immediately set forth to realize the passion of his life, which was to bring the heathen savage to the cross of Christ."

Leaving the Mission at San Carlos we went into the town of Monterey with its old Custom House, Capitol and other buildings, not forgetting the old adobe house in front of which is the Sherman rose around which is centered the greatest romantic story of all California.

From Monterey, we skirted the shores of Monterey Bay to Pacific Grove, and then into the celebrated Seventeen Mile Drive, which to-day has been increased until there are forty miles of the most wonderful road to be found anywhere on private property.

This road leads through the celebrated Cypress Grove, which has gained renown, and which by many is thought to be the same as the celebrated "Cedars of Lebanon." On this point there is a great mistake, and Nellie Sanchez in speaking of it says ("Spanish and Indian Place Names of California," page 146): "Cypressus Macrocarpa is limited to two localities on the ocean shore at the mouth of the Carmel river near the Monterey. The Cypress Point Grove extends along the cliffs and low bluffs from Pescadero Point to Cypress Point, a distance of two miles, reaching inland about one-eighth of a mile. The Point Lobos Grove is much smaller. The trees are scattered over the summits of two headlands, and cling to the edges of the cliffs, where, on account of the erosive action of the ocean, they are occasionally undermined and fall into the sea. Monterey cypress is most interesting for its remarkable restricted natural range and the exceedingly picturesque outlines characteristic of the trees growing on the ocean shore.

"As a result of their struggle with violent storms from the Pacific Ocean, which break on the unprotected cliffs and headlands of Cypress Point and Point Lobos they present a variety and singularity of form which is obviously connected with their exposed habitat, and lends a never-failing interest to these two narrow localities. Of the highly picturesque trees, the most common type is that with the long, irregular arms.

"Such trees recall most strikingly the classical pictures of the Cedars of Lebanon. Monterey cypress is of course a genuine cypress, and Lebanon cedar is a genuine cedar; the two do not even belong to the same family of conifers. Yet the popular story that the two are the same makes so strong an appeal to the imagination of the tourist at Monterey that the guides and promoters will doubtless never cease to disseminate it.

"As a consequence, the error goes into the daily press and the magazines, and is evidently destined to flourish in perennial greenness under the guise of fact. The wide dissemination of this fiction is all the more remarkable in that in the case of all other unique features of the State, such as the Sequoias and the Yosemite, Californians have evinced a remarkable pride in their possession, without thought of inventing a duplication of them elsewhere.

"The matter of the age of these trees has been much exaggerated. It is a tree of rapid growth, and the older specimens are probably not more than 200 or 300 years old."

This is really the home of the artist and dilettante of California. From Carmel-by-the-Sea comes some of the best writing of the day. Men of note, not only with the pen, but with the brain, here reside and give forth their greatest work.

Passing through Carmel, one journeys to the other side of the town, where is located the Mission of Carmel, at the base of Carmel Valley. Here was the end of our journey; we had taken pictures along the route, and as a fitting climax entered this Mission to do homage to the departed Father Junipero Serra, whose body lies under the marble slab in the chancel.

After resting, our journey then began homeward. Once again entering the Seventeen Mile Drive, we enjoyed the beauties of a sunset over Carmel Bay. The sun, in a most glorious red, sank through the blue waters of the Bay, and as the night came on, the coloring land, sea and the mountains beggared description. Our object gained, we hurried homeward, only stopping in San Jose for dinner.

The journey once ended, our thoughts had to turn towards the motor car that had made possible such a trip. Never once during the whole journey was there a skip of the engine, and what was most surprising was the ability of this four-cylinder product to equal anything that had been seen over the road performed by a six-cylinder or greater number of cylinders in a motor car.

Three hundred miles covered within a day and without the slightest distress to any of those who made the trip! When leaving the car there was not the slightest discomfiture of the long ride, showing conclusively how well designed the Case car is for unlimited touring, being equal to every demand that California roads may produce, which, by the way, is the limit, in its way, of anything that is to be encountered throughout the United States.

REAR WHEEL FORD BRAKES

With a view of providing a device to relieve strain on the gearset, universal and drive shaft created by use of the Ford transmission brake, the A. C. Mfg. Co., Chicago, is marketing a rear-wheel contracting bank brake assembly to be operated from the service brake pedal. The attachment, outside of the band brakes and lever equipment, consists of electric wires as are fitted for the tail light. It comes with its bulb already equipped for lighting at night. A flexible cable runs from the signal underneath the car and connects with a similar wire cable that also runs under the car from the steering post. The indicator can be attached either to the steering post or cowl. If used on the post there is a small clamp provided to fasten it. The indicator has a revolving wheel that shows the words, Slow, Stop, Right, Left and Neutral. By setting the indicator at any of these words the same word is flashed on the signal at the rear of the car. The lettering on the signal is provided on a curtain which works on two rollers. As the letters are 4 inches high they can be very easily read day or night.

PUMP DRIVEN BY REAR WHEEL

The Harms Fresh-Air tire pump, put out by the Auto Appliance Co., Milwaukee, Wis., is made to fit any car with protruding hubs. To operate, it is necessary to fasten a crank on the rear hub cap, slip a slotted ring over the handle of the pump, fasten the bottom of the pump with a clamp onto the running board, jack up the wheel and run the motor in gear. It is claimed that, with the rear wheel running at about 100 revolutions per minute the pump will inflate a tire to the required pressure in less than two brake rods connected on one end with the brake levers and on the other with the two ends of an equalizing bar which is suspended in steel slots fastened to the frame. This bar in turn connects with the service brake pedal by a single rod. The price of $15 includes installation on the car.

How the Texas Tube test happened!

IT nettled Bill Parr considerably! So many Motorists had carelessly stated that "all Tire Tubes are just Rubber." He determined to show some folks the difference, in a way they would never forget. There were four Cars at the door, and their Owners or Drivers at his elbow. To these he said,— "Boys,—how strong do you think this Goodrich Brown Tube actually is?" "Do you believe it is strong enough to tow Mr. Oden's five passenger Car, with four people in it, for 20 blocks?" "You don't, eh!" "Well now here's a bit of a Bet I want to make with any or all of you. "I will bet you a Dinner that this little old regular Goodrich Tube (34x4) will not only tow Mr. Oden's Car, but will tow all three of your Cars,—fully passengered,—through the streets, for the full 21 blocks (more than a mile and a half)—starting and stopping as many times as the crowd makes it necessary. "I will,—if you Gentlemen are agreeable,—line up all four of yours Cars, right here and now, take three regular Goodrich Tubes hap-hazard out of their boxes,—tie one tube between each two Cars, (which means hauling three Cars on the first Tube) and tote You—all that way to "The Corners." "Are you willing to bet a Dinner that any one of the three Tubes will 'go broke' on the way, or show a flaw which would leak Air, or prevent its being used for its original Tire purpose afterwards?" "You are, eh?" "Well,—the Bet's on!" "Come along, and you be the Judges."

THE Dinner was a very Cheerful Affair. As Oden said afterwards (when putting up his share of the Bet) "you could have bet me a Million on that, Parr, and I'd have taken you up,—even if I had to borrow the Million. "I don't see how the blamed Tubes ever did hold out,—especially going up Saco St. under such a strain. "With eight people in the last three Cars,—and a total load of over 8,900 pounds I sure thought to hear something snap before the Second Block. "Whaddye put into that brown Goodrich Rubber anyhow, to make it hang together like that?" Fritz said that what puzzled him most was the brown Rubber Tubes,—not being all stretched out of shape after such a tug, even if they did hang together at the finish. "Look you," said he, "when we released the load,—after the haul,—they instantly snapped back into just three-quarters of an inch longer than they were at the start!" "And that 3/4 of an inch, they took up again in less than two hours rest." "WELL, boys,"—Bill Parr remarked,—as he smoothed out a wrinkle in his well-filled vest, "that'll stop the Argument about all Tire Tubes being 'just Rubber,' won't it?" "If the Brown Stuff that toted all you Heavy-weights,—and your Cars,—for 21 blocks, without a Sign of Heavy Duty afterwards, isn't something MORE than 'Just Rubber,' like other Tubes,—then you'd better buy the 'Just Rubber' kind hereafter. "I'm going to ask all of you to sign your names to this 'Texas Tire Tube Test,'—just to show that you have taken part in a regular Exploit which is mighty well worth recording." "So indeed they did,—and here is the affidavit:

Great Britain Endeavors to Limit the Use of Pleasure Cars

Motor Gossip from John Bull's Island and Our Sister Republic of France

London, June 10—With importation of touring cars prohibited, a tax of 12 cents per gallon on gasoline, no benzol supplies, and a proposal, which will almost certainly become law, to triple present taxes, the position of British motorists is not at all enviable. Further, there is an active campaign against what is termed pleasure motoring, quite an appreciable amount of money having been spent in posters and other printed matter asking motorists not to use cars for purposes of pleasure.

As a matter of fact, motor cars have been very little used during the last six months for anything but utilitarian purposes, the high cost of gasoline and the all-round increased cost of living being quite sufficient to eliminate motoring for pleasure. Nevertheless, the effect of the official appeal has been to create an impression in the mind of the public that car owners are squandering money which ought to be kept in the country and used for more useful purposes.

The new taxation proposals are a very severe blow. It is officially announced that $1,000,000 will be gathered in by means of these taxes, but as owners have the facility of storing their cars and thus avoiding the payment of the taxes, it is quite possible that the taxable material will disappear, and that the object of the government will be defeated. This danger is so great that many are inclined to believe the taxes have been levied with a view to suppressing motoring rather than to getting additional revenue.

Up to 16 horsepower taxes are doubled; from 16 horsepower and upwards they are trebled. The method of calculating horse power is on cylinder bore only. A four-cylinder car of 2 11-16 inch bore is less than 12 horsepower and normally pays an annual tax of $15; up to 3 5-31 inch bore is less than 16 horsepower and pays $20 tax.

Up to 4 inch bore cars are rated at less than 26 horsepower and are normally taxed $30. While in the two lower classes the taxes are doubled, in the third and all higher classes the tax is trebled. This strikes particularly hard at all the cheaper American cars, for, with the exception of the Overland model 75 and the small Saxon, these come into the third or higher classes and have to bear treble taxes. The Ford, which is in a numerical superiority in England, has to bear a triple tax. The following table shows the original and the new taxation on some of the leading American cars on the British market:

Car—	Original Tax	New Tax
Ford	$30	$90
Overland 6-cylinder	40	120
Overland 83	40	120
Overland 75	20	40
Dodge	30	90
Buick D-54, 6	50	150
Buick D-44, 6	30	90
Studebaker, 4-40	30	90
Studebaker, 6-50	50	150
White, G. A. H.	30	90
White, G. E. D.	40	120
Saxon, 14-15	20	40
Saxon S-2	30	90
Saxon 17	30	90
Pierce 66 A-4	100	300
Packard Twin Six	100	300

Old-type cars of any make, the value of which is now very low, are so highly taxed that it is practically impossible for their owners to run them. There must be hundreds of old-type Panhards, Charrons, Mercedes, De Dion and other established makes, the value of which is less than $300, but which on account of their big cylinder bore have a high rated horsepower and are taxed $90 to $150.

Under the English law, if a car is not in use it does not pay taxes, thus it is quite likely that many owners will prefer to store their cars at the end of June and avoid paying the increased duty. In these cases the State will lose not only the car tax but also the gasoline and the annual driving tax. In drawing up the budget it appears to have been assumed that cars of 16 horsepower and above are all costly vehicles belonging to wealthy persons.

The fact has been overlooked that the horsepower rating is quite an arbitrary one, and that many a small-bore, long-stroke, high-speed European motor has a bigger cylinder capacity and develops greater power than a big-bore, short-stroke American car. As an instance, the 3.1 by 7.08 inch Hispano-Suiza is only rated at 15.9 horsepower, and will pay a $40 tax, while a 3¾ by 4 inch Ford, which develops less than half the power and costs a third of the price of the French car, is rated at 22.4 horsepower, and has to pay a $90 tax. Scores of such examples could be quoted to show the illogical nature of the new taxation.

Motor car dealers are very hard hit. There are very few English cars available for the market, and all agents in consequence have been glad to take up agencies for American cars. Now that this source of supply is shut off, nothing remains for dealers but to close their stores. Many of the smaller dealers who were unable to get American business closed months ago, but the larger firms have managed to keep going until the present. Now such big firms as the Fiat Company and the Renault branch have decided to close their doors. The value of used cars, particularly small models and modern types, is strengthening; big, old-type cars have lost in value.

Reports, which were prevalent a few weeks ago, of the government control of gasoline, which would only be given out to those persons who could show a valid reason for motoring, are now receiving little attention. The prohibition of imports, the increased taxation and the high cost of gasoline are doubtless sufficiently restrictive measures. Motorists are still receiving very close attention in the matter of lighting regulations, headlights being forbidden in practically the whole of England and only feeble sidelights being permissible in most of the coastal area.

Motoring conditions in France contrast strangely with those of England. In a country where the war is being decided there are, outside the army zone, practically no restrictions on the use of cars. Unlike England, lighting regulations have undergone no change; taxation has not been increased, although a rise is promised for immediately after the war; the gasoline tax remains as before the war, although high freights and other causes have sent the price of fuel up nearly 40 per cent.

All motorists must register monthly with the police, but this measure is intended to weed out undesirables and not to restrict the use of cars. The whole of the army zone is rigorously and unconditionally closed to civilian motorists, but in the remainder of French territory it is possible to use a car with as much freedom as in peace times.

Very few factories are producing cars for private consumption, although there are rumors that a few of the leading firms will shortly get a release from army orders permitting them to build for private customers. Too much importance must not be attached to this, for in very many cases the motor car factories are now so efficiently organized for the production of shells and other war material that it is more profitable to continue on the present work than to build cars for private use. During the last 12 months some of the biggest factories have been so completely converted and so thoroughly equipped for shell production that it would be unprofitable to build cars. The only advantage of car orders is that in some cases it enables old stock to be used up which could not be employed in normal and more critical times.

A certain demand has sprung up during the past few months for both touring cars and trucks of American construction. The touring car demand is almost entirely dependent on military requisitions. If the army authorities visit a certain district and requisition the private cars to be found there, that district immediately becomes a buyer of American cars.

There are now very few cars in France not indispensable to their owners. Thus if the army steps in and purchases the cars, paying cash for them, the motorist immediately becomes a purchaser of an American car. There have been no requisitions in the Paris district for months, but from time to time the military purchasing authorities make it known that they are willing to buy cars privately. This becomes an ordinary cash transaction, the seller being free to accept or refuse the offer made him. In the provinces requisitions are more common. The military authorities fix the price of the car, which is generally reasonable, and the owner must accept. It is only in the case of practically new cars with very costly bodies that the owner suffers a loss.

Seeing that the net result of the requisitions is to increase the sales of American cars, the agents for these cars have endeavored to sell direct to the army. In this way the army, instead of the private motorist, would get American cars and the latter would not be subjected to any loss and inconvenience. While the army is quite willing to examine all offers made, and will cause sample cars to be stripped so that all details can be examined, there does not appear to be a single case of an order having been placed.

About 1,000 $\frac{3}{4}$ -ton American trucks were ordered some time ago for ambulance service, but not a single order appears to have been placed for American touring cars for general army work. It is certain that no orders can be got direct out of Paris, and if any business were done it would go through the buying commission in New York.

The American firms now doing touring car business in France are Ford, which easily heads the list, Buick, Overland, Dodge, Chevrolet, Maxwell, Mitchell and Saxon. It is understood that Ford will erect big factories near Southampton, producing there for the whole European market. This would free the cars from any import duties which may be imposed, for it is practically certain that there will be some preferential tariff among the Allies after the war.

Ford prices have been increased $200 in order to cover the higher freight and increased rate of exchange. The two Buick 6-cylinder models are being sold at $2,100 and $3,000 respectively. The Overland models are $1,640 and $1,860 each. The Dodge is sold at $1,600.

Up to the present there has been no increase in the import duties on foreign cars, the rate being about 8 per cent of the value of the car. It is well known, however, that French manufacturers are determined to defend their interests, and that they are working for a higher tariff. Reports are circulating in the trade that there will very shortly be a duty of more than 50 per cent on foreign cars, or a total prohibition of imports. The probabilities are that prohibition will be preferred at the present time to an increase in duty; it is certain that a tariff as high as 50 per cent will not be adopted. The arguments in favor of prohibition are the examples set by England, the necessity of releasing freight for more necessary articles, and also of getting monetary exchange back to a more favorable rate. Although very little is heard of the conflict, it is certain that manufacturers are pulling hard for prohibition and that all the dealers and general trade element are working for a continuance of the present free market. The dealers have the strength of numbers; the manufacturers have the strength of greater weight. It is impossible to say which party will get the victory, but it is certain that when a decision is reached it will be announced and executed immediately. Thus, if it is prohibition, dealers who have cars in shipment will be liable to a heavy loss.

The French motor car industry is a wonderfully organized section of the munitions department. There is not a factory but has increased either its ground area or its plant, or both. In the big factories the increase runs as high as 60 per cent. In the small shops the value has gone up not less than 200 per cent. Among these latter are garages and small repair shops which before the war possessed a small lathe and a drilling machine, but which are now very finely equipped machine shops capable of doing the best and most economical work.

There is a strong tendency to invest profits in additional plant and factory improvements for the future, rather than show a high profit now. In this way excess profits taxation is avoided or reduced. Machine tool supply houses report that they are receiving orders for machinery for which purchasers have no immediate use, and do not require immediate delivery.

Not a few manufacturers are asking what they will do with their enlarged and improved factories when the war is over. In practically all cases the original cost of the plant has been wiped off by war contracts, but work must still be found for it. The future is so uncertain that it is a most difficult matter for any manufacturer to decide what set of conditions he will have to meet and to prepare to meet those conditions.

It is evident that allied motor car manufacturers will make a determined stand against foreign competition. All kinds of schemes are suggested, and while many of them have not and never will get beyond the talking stage, it is evident that common action is in contemplation. According to one well authenticated report a group of allied manufacturers, small in number, but representing powerful interests, will arrange to build in their respective factories a uniform type of cheap popular car on American lines to be sold at home and abroad at a price which will eliminate the American car of the same class.

These cars will differ only in the names they bear. There will be a clearing house so that a shortage of any one make can be met by the other firms, and profits from these sales will be pooled. It is impossible to say what chances, if any, this scheme has of being put into execution. It is certain, however, that at least one powerful European firm has already produced a popular after the war model on American lines with the single exception that the motor dimensions are better adapted to European taxation conditions than are the dimensions of the average American engine.

SERVICE WAGON FOR RECRUITS

Lieut. J. W. McClaskey, M. C., in charge of the recruiting district of San Francisco for the U. S. Marine Corps, has just purchased a combination station and express wagon.

This wagon will be used in publicity work in behalf of the Marine Corps service, and will run up and down the coast between Bakersfield and Portland, Ore., stopping at all of the principal towns to distribute literature in regard to the Marine Service and to stimulate enlistments.

This publicity service wagon is in the nature of an experiment. Lieut. McClaskey states that there are only two other such wagons which Secretary Daniels has just authorized for the recruiting districts of Boston and Atlanta.

If these publicity wagons prove a success, similar wagons will be purchased for every recruiting station in the United States.

The car, which is equipped with Goodrich "Barefoot" tires, has attracted a great deal of favorable comment the last few days. Crowds have gathered around it whenever it stopped in front of the recruiting station, corner of Market and Fremont streets, San Francisco.

Lieut. McClaskey is assisted in his publicity work by First Sergeant Joseph Aschelm. The car will be in charge of Sergeant F. M. Gilmore, who is an experienced driver.

One purpose of the car is to bring would-be recruits from outlying districts to San Francisco in the express wagon instead of having them come by train as heretofore. The recruits will be brought to San Francisco for medical examination, etc., preliminary to their acceptance for the Marine Corps service.

SHOCK ABSORBERS FOR FORDS

Forge steel cantilever shock absorbers are designed with the view of reducing the speed and force of the recoil in Ford springs. They are a product of the Home Light Co., Chicago, Ill. The slow spring action is brought about by locating the coil spring some distance from the ends of the car springs, thus creating the proper leverage to exert a downward pull of about 500 pounds, which tends to absorb a great portion of the recoil.

The shock absorbers are made entirely of steel. The levers, or arms, are made of 1½ by 3-inch stock, and taper to the ends, making a very neat appearance.

The claim is that their use will minimize the strain on the tires and effect a considerable saving in gasoline, inasmuch as rough roads can be negotiated with such ease that the driver does not slack up for street car tracks and rough places, and then speed up his engine to get under way. Two types are offered, the single-arm and double-arm. The double-arm type has the advantage over the single-arm in that it is perfectly balanced, so that there is no possibility of twisting action to cause difficulty in car steering. The price for a complete set of four single-arm absorbers is $8. The double-arm type lists at $10 complete.

A Moving Tale

CHAPTER I.

Steve Johns was a young man with a small bank account and a large ambition. The one amounted to just two hundred and thirty-five dollars and twenty-one cents; the other was to marry young and pretty Miss Alice Weeks, daughter of John Bangs Weeks, of Weeks & Conger, brokers.

But there was a fly in the ointment; or to be more exact, there were three flies. Steve had a rival—first fly. Said rival was rich and was smiled upon by father Weeks—second fly. He owned a racy little roadster—you know the kind, built for just two—this the biggest fly of all.

Steve was standing on the corner of T street and Tenth avenue when it went by, Chauncey Diggs Jones at the wheel, and beside him, fascinatingly clad in motor duster and bonnet, sat Alice. He watched them flirt away toward the boulevard with a sinking of the heart. Although the sun shone brightly, to him the day seemed gray and dark. This was the cap of the climax. He had just left the boss' sanctum, where a slight advance in salary had been irritably but firmly refused. How could a fellow marry on twenty-five dollars a week! And a girl like Alice Weeks.

So our hero melancholily cogitated, watching the little blue roadster whisk from sight.

CHAPTER II.

"Bang!" You would have jumped, too. Samuel W. Jinks knew he was tempting fate when he left the quiet of T street for the bustle and traffic of Tenth avenue, but a spirit of dare-deviltry possessed him. He became obsessed with the idea that he could drive that new car of his anywhere. Think of the man's presumption. It had just been delivered to him that morning. A big moving van motor truck, looking so much like a house, came chugging down Tenth from the south. As Samuel W. afterward explained, "The blamed big sky-scraper got my goat and I lost control of the blamed car, and before I knew it I had bumped into the blamed curb, burst a blamed wheel and got tossed out on my blamed head."

Steve rendered first aid to the injured and assisted Samuel W. to his feet.

"Gee, but I'm jarred!" said Samuel, a bit wobbly. Then his glance rested on the roadster—a brand new Zip racing model—and it grew to a baleful glare.

"Ding you!" said he. "I'm through with you. I'll sell you to the first junk dealer that comes along."

"Here's a junk dealer right here," said Steve. "I'll give you two hundred and thirty-five dollars and twenty-one cents."

"I'll take you," said Jinks, throwing up his arms, palms and hands outward, and bringing them back toward his body as they do in the wheat pit. Jinks, you see, was a dealer on the board of trade and a creature of habit.

With trembling hands, Steve pulled out a check book and fountain pen and wrote a check, thereby wiping out his balance at the bank.

WHERE THE PRIVATE OWNER FEELS AT HOME

Don't be so blamed careful! We've wasted a mile of negative already. If you don't get it right the next time, we'll cut it out." So Dick Fortune, director of the International Moving Picture Corporation, harangued his slaves.

CHAPTER IV

Fate plays queer pranks. How Steve got his newly purchased Zip roadster home is irrelevant. How he purchased a new wheel and other necessary repairs entails the sad narrative of days of economical living, which included visits to free lunch counters and similar places of economical refreshment.

Now the glad moment had arrived. All dressed in his best, he was motoring forth to take his lady-love riding. She had seen the car and pronounced it "much cuter than Mr. Jones'."

Not forgetful of Samuel W. Jinks' unfortunate experience, Steve had practiced long and well; quiet, unfrequented alleys being the scene of his education. Now he felt sure of himself.

The day was glorious. All nature smiled. Steve's confidence in his ability to make "that little this year's old car" obey his every wish was supreme until he made the turn out of T street. Then the car failed to respond promptly "to helm." Moreover, he thought he heard a snap like the severing of metal. He began to get nervous. Something was the matter. The car began to wobble, zig-zagging from side to side. How he ever got to Somers street, where the palatially imposing Weeks' residence stood he never knew, nor what happened after that, when the Zip began to cut a wider zig-zaggy movement that soon encompassed the full width of the street. He had a vague remembrance that he started to do things with the spark and control levers. The Zip leaped forward, following a straight ahead course one moment, careening and tossing like a chip on the ocean the next. Steve tried to steer a straight course, but the steering wheel—pole and all—was moving facilely beneath his grasp, with no effect whatsoever upon the movements of the car.

Just before the crash came, he heard a raucous voice shouting: "More action! More action! For the love of Mike, more action!"

CHAPTER V

When Steve came to, Dick Fortune was fanning him.

"Say, Steve," he said, "you were immense, and we got you clean and clear. You're signed for the International, and you can pretty nearly name your own price. If I'd known how good a comedian you were, I'd have done something for you the first time you applied."

"Where's my car?" asked Steve, weakly.

"Gee, it's a wreck; but we'll fix that all right. New Zip, wasn't it? Lists at $1,800. I'll have the company send you a check. This film's going to be a humdinger, and worth every cent of it."

Alice and Steve didn't go motoring that day, but—

What is the use of stringing out this story. Pater Weeks gave his consent. A high-salaried movie actor is not to be scoffed at as a son-in-law.

You can't take in many movies without seeing Steve. He's the leading comedian of the International, great at the rough and tumble stuff.
